ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

I HAD TO GO INTO HIDING IN 2018: MOUSUMI HAMID

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Renowned actress Mousumi Hamid recently returned to Dhaka after completing the shoot of a new film in Bandarban and Cox's Bazar. Directed by Tasnova Tabassum Atoshi, the film's title is yet to be finalised. This marks her return to work after a tumultuous month, which saw the rise of the anti-discrimination student movement and the collapse of the previous government.

However, the actress' activities haven't been confined to the entertainment industry. Mousumi was a prominent voice in the recently concluded movement. She took to the streets and voiced her support for the students on social media. "I joined the protests for four to five days. I stood with the students because I believe in their cause," she said.

Recalling a specific incident, Mousumi described how, like many others, she changed her social media profile picture to red in solidarity with the movement. Not long after, she received a phone call during the then ongoing curfew, with someone repeatedly inquiring about her whereabouts. Fearful for her safety, she and her husband fled their home. "We returned 12 hours later, only to receive another call the next day, warning me not to post anything else. But I didn't stop. I spoke out against injustice, and I wasn't afraid."

When asked about the state of our freedom of speech before August 5, Mousumi candidly stated, "There wasn't much freedom of speech, and I am living proof of that. Everyone was afraid to speak up. But after the downfall of the former government, that fear is gone. Now, we can speak freely."

Mousumi also revisited her experience during the 2018 protests when actress Quazi Nawshaba Ahmed was arrested, "Back then, I posted several things on Facebook in support of Nawshaba, which led to me receiving threatening phone calls. I couldn't speak out then, but now, with the new sense of freedom, I feel like I can finally share my experiences."

Taking the advice of friends, Mousumi deleted some of her posts and turned off her phone out of fear after the arrest of Nawshaba. "I went underground for 13 days, being completely out of contact with everyone. I remember the fear I felt as I travelled from Cox's Bazar to Sreemangal, not knowing what would happen next."

At that time, actor Sazu Khadem bhai was of great help. He called many people and told them, "Mousumi never gets involved with politics, so make sure she isn't harmed." After that, I continued shooting, but I kept thinking that I could be arrested at any moment."

The actress also disclosed that during this period, a director warned her that a case had been filed against her and advised her to stay hidden. "That was the life I led back then," she recounted.

Reflecting on the current situation, Mousumi expressed relief. "Now, I feel free. We can all express our opinions openly. Life is much better for everyone now."

Mousumi shared the shooting experience of her upcoming musical, saying, "We shot in Cox's Bazar and Bandarban. The story is beautiful, and it felt great to work amid the serenity of nature. After going through an uncertain and restless month, being able to shoot by the sea and in the hills has done wonders for my mood, especially being near the mountains."

In addition to this project, Mousumi expressed excitement about another of her upcoming films Noya Manush, which is set to release later this year.

Mousumi has also been active on OTT platforms, with a new web-film set to begin shooting soon. She also mentioned another upcoming project with the popular streaming platform Hoichoi.

Sarajevo Film Festival celebrates Meg Ryan's film impact

Renowned Hollywood actress, director, and producer Meg Ryan was recently recognised by the Sarajevo Film Festival, receiving the Honorary Heart of Sarajevo on Tuesday night for her valuable impact on the film industry.

Ryan was among four distinguished film creators honoured with this award, joining US and Palestinian directors Alexander Payne and Elia Suleiman, as well as US actor and producer John Turturro.

Festival Director Jovan Marjanović praised Ryan's exceptional talent while presenting her with the silver heart-shaped award.

Ryan symbolically hosted a special screening of her 1998 romantic comedy hit, You've Got Mail, at an open-air cinema, the very location where it was first shown during the festival in 1999.

Jennifer Lopez files for divorce from Ben Affleck

Jennifer Lopez has officially filed for divorce from Ben Affleck, marking the end of their two-year-long marriage. The couple, once famously known as "Bennifer," first captured headlines in the early 2000s before splitting in 2004.

Lopez went on to marry Marc Anthony, while Affleck wed Jennifer Garner, with both marriages eventually ending in divorce.

After reuniting in 2021, Lopez described their initial breakup as her "biggest heartbreak."

Their divorce filing in Los Angeles County Superior Court comes exactly two years after their Georgia wedding celebration. Representatives for both stars have not commented on the split.

Pacers shine but Pakistan recover

Bangladesh the first breakthrough when he dismissed opener Abdullah Shafique for two in the fourth over, courtesy of Zakir Hasan taking a spectacular flying catch at the fifth slip.

Mahmud and Shoriful continued to put pressure on the Pakistani batters, and it took little time for left-arm seamer Shoriful to remove skipper Shan Masood.

Although the on-field umpire did not initially give Masood out, a review showed that the ball had touched the bat before it reached the wicketkeeper Liton Das. Masood was unhappy with the change in decision and exchanged some heated words with the umpires, as he seemed to believe that the ball had only hit his pads.

Before the series started, Shoriful had stated in the media that Pakistani batting maestro Babar Azam was his "dream wicket". It took only two balls for him to make that dream a reality, dismissing the right-hander for a duck, reducing Pakistan to 16 for three.

Shoriful can credit part of his success against Babar to Liton, who took a superb diving one-handed catch to his left, silencing the home fans.

Since Babar's dismissal, Bangladeshi bowlers were unable to sustain the pressure, allowing Pakistani opener Ayub and Shakeel to adopt an aggressive approach.

The hosts reached the 100-run mark after the Tea break, and as the partnership looked increasingly dangerous for Bangladesh, Hasan returned to remove Ayub -- who had earlier completed his maiden Test fifty -- at the slip cordon where Mehidy Hasan Miraz took a sharp catch, ending a 98-run stand for the fourth wicket.

Later, Shakeel also completed his seventh Test fifty and shared an unbroken stand of 44 runs with Mohammad Rizwan (24 not out) to see out the remaining overs of the day before bad light forced the umpires to call off proceedings.

part in the meeting with a four-member delegation from China.

"We want to make it clear that the BNP has always believed in the 'One China Policy' and we want to reaffirm this stance with even greater firmness," Fakhrul said.

He told the media that China believes the relationship between the Communist Party of China and the BNP will continue to strengthen. "We believe that China's investment for the development of Bangladesh will increase further."

Fakhrul added, "We, the BNP, are delighted to hold the meeting with the Chinese ambassador after a long time. We consider this visit, after the mass protest, as a highly significant meeting.

"China has reiterated its commitment to the people of Bangladesh, clearly stating that they don't believe in supremacy. In the geopolitical context of Bangladesh, China has always stood by the people of this country, and they continue to do so today."

The BNP secretary general praised China's global role, saying, "We applaud the significant role that China is playing on the global stage today. We have sincerely thanked and expressed our gratitude for China's assistance to both developed and developing countries."

After the meeting, Ambassador Yao Wen told media, "We discussed the current situation in Bangladesh. We hope that under the leadership of the interim government, Bangladesh will achieve stability and normalisation. We fully support this interim government."

"China will not interfere in the internal affairs of Bangladesh. The people of Bangladesh look forward to our continued support, and we are committed to that.

"We are working together for a better relationship between Bangladesh and China."

their legitimate rights to freedom and independence, especially in the light of Israeli occupation's criminal aggression and genocidal war continuing for more than 10 months in the Gaza Strip, the West Bank and Jerusalem.

He said Bangladesh and Palestine and their peoples are united by strong historical relations based on brotherhood and support.

"We and our Palestinian people will continue to have gratitude and appreciation to Bangladesh for permanently and continuously standing by our people, and its absolute solidarity and support since its independence in 1971," the letter said.

Abbas expressed his support to the interim government and the people of Bangladesh, and wished good luck and success to Yunus in performing the lofty tasks entrusted to him.

Meanwhile, Pentagon on Tuesday said it will look forward to working with Bangladesh to support the shared values and interests such as a free and open Indo-Pacific.

Pentagon Press Secretary Maj Gen Pat Ryder made the comment in a briefing in Washington when he was asked how Pentagon views the role of the Bangladesh Army in supporting peace and stability under the interim government led by Nobel laureate Prof Yunus.

Pat Ryder said, "Well, as you know, we do have a defense relationship with Bangladesh. We will look forward to working to support our shared values and interests, such as a free and open Indo-Pacific. I don't have anything to read out right now in terms of any types of contact.

"As it relates to the Bangladesh government, we would also expect human rights to be observed and there to be an avoidance of any type of violence," he added.

In a briefing yesterday, UN secretary-general's Spokesperson Stephane Dujarric said UN hopes the interim government, led by Dr Yunus, will take an inclusive approach, including by considering the voices of young people as well as women, and minority and indigenous communities.

He said the UN also counts on the interim government to ensure the full protection of all citizens, particularly the minorities.

Students force DU dean to quit and signed it in front of the students.

However, the agitators then insisted that Mahbub must sign the resignation letter they had prepared.

The dean then wrote another resignation letter, similar to the one prepared by the students, but refused to submit it to the office in-person.

The dean of another faculty of the university, wishing to be unnamed, told The Daily Star that he has his resignation letter ready after seeing what happened to Prof Mahbub.

In another development, a group of students from the Mathematics department padlocked the office of Prof Chandra Nath Podder, demanding his permanent removal as teacher.

The agitators started demonstrating in front of the department around noon alleging that he opposed the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

Emerging from a meeting around 1:00pm, Chandra met the protesters and heard their demand.

Following a five-hour negotiation between the teacher and students, the students left the department saying they would announce their next course of action soon.

Another group of students of the Institute of Nutrition and Food Science yesterday demanded permanent removal of two teachers and apology from the rest of the teachers.

Meanwhile, a group of students of the university's Sociology department yesterday sent a letter to the department demanding resignation of Chairman Prof Zeenat Huda.

They also demanded Prof AKM Jamal Uddin, Prof Sadeka Halim, and Prof Moshiur Rahman be relieved of all academic and administrative duties.

The agitating students also issued a 48-hour ultimatum to the authorities to meet their demands and warned that they would lay siege to the department if their demands were not met.

Also, a group of students of the Economics department wrote to the department chairperson yesterday demanding removal of Prof Shahadat Hossain Siddique and Syed Naimul Wadood.

Prof Zeenat in her letter to the law affairs adviser alleged that those groups of students [protesters] were creating a scary situation on campus, and that the teachers were feeling insecure.

"I would like to inform you that a good number of teachers of Dhaka University are in vulnerable condition. They are being threatened and attacked so that they resign as chairman, director, and dean," reads the letter.

Constitutional changes required

After the Liberation War, the proclamations were not incorporated in the 1972 constitution, he said.

"The constitution should not dictate the people. It should be written again to incorporate the people's will. But we need to figure out how it will be done -- through the constituent assembly or by other ways."

All the colonial era legal framework and administrative structures have to reformed, he added.

Meghmallar Bosu of Dhaka University said it is necessary to change or amend the constitution. But it will require political unity so that the next government does not nullify the changes.

He recommended proportional representation in parliament, which was echoed by DU's coordinator Mozammel Haque.

Proportional representation is an electoral system in which the distribution of seats corresponds closely with the proportion of the total votes cast for each party.

About banning religion-based politics, he said, "We did not find anything good in such types of decisions earlier. When you oppress a party, they become victims and get public sympathy. The same will happen if the state bans a political party by law. It should be done through socio and political unity."

Umama Fatema, a coordinator of the movement and a DU student, said such parties always use religion as a tool for oppression, but they never use it as a tool for freedom.

"It will not be wise to ban student politics on campuses when the administrators are politically affiliated. They will only favour their party's student wings, banned or not," she said, adding that the elections to students' unions in campuses are vital.

Arif Sohel also spoke for students' union-based politics on campuses. "The student union-based politics will naturally fill the vacuum that the political-party based students' politics will leave behind and a new kind of students' politics will arise."

Terming the 2014 polls "voterless election", 2018 election "night vote", and this year's polls "dummy independent" election, Mustafiz Rahman of Jagannath University said the country's current state is the result of those so-called elections.

Editor and Publisher of The Daily Star Mahfuz Anam also joined the discussion moderated by The Daily Star journalist Shuchismita Tithi.

Mahfuz said our inability to accept different views and to live with differing opinions is a huge disease.

"Now, your future vision is for a democratic Bangladesh. To achieve that, we need to bring a culture of tolerance towards different opinions. You have set so many examples and I hope you can set this example as well."

Kiminori hoped that Bangladesh will be rebuilt under the leadership of Prof Yunus.

The Nobel laureate expressed his gratitude for Japan's continuous support and expressed his desire to take Japan-Bangladesh relations to its "peak". Both sides concurred that they would closely work together to make it happen.

The envoy conveyed Japan's intention to continue supporting Bangladesh's development and prosperity under the "Strategic Partnership" enshrined between the two countries.

Kiminori stressed the importance of establishing peace and stability in the country and the region, including sustainable response to Rohingya refugees, advancing economic and business cooperation, and boosting people-to-people exchange.

He expressed Japan's readiness to work together in these areas.

Protests grow in India over abuse of two minors

Schools, internet shut in a town near Mumbai

REUTERS, Mumbai

Internet services were cut off and schools were closed for a second straight day in a town near India's financial capital Mumbai yesterday, as protests over the alleged sexual abuse of two, four-year old girls intensified, media said.

The protests in Badlapur, about 50 km from Mumbai, come amid nationwide demonstrations over the rape and murder of 31-year-old doctor in Kolkata.

A janitor was arrested for allegedly sexually abusing the students in a school in Badlapur on the weekend.

Angry protesters blocked railway tracks for hours on Tuesday, demanding justice for the children, echoing similar protests across the country by doctors and women's groups.

Tanker adrift after multiple attacks in Red Sea: agency

REUTERS, Dubai

A Greek-flagged oil tanker was adrift in the Red Sea yesterday after repeated attacks that started a fire on the vessel and caused the ship to lose power, the UK maritime agency said.

The Sounion was first attacked by two small boats and hit by multiple projectiles about 77 nautical miles west of Yemen's port city of Hodeidah on Wednesday morning, the Greek shipping ministry and the UK Maritime Trade Operations (UKMTO) said.

There was a brief exchange of small arms fire during the incident, the UKMTO said, adding in a later update that the ship had reported a renewed attack. That caused the fire and led the vessel to lose engine power and its ability to manoeuvre.

Death 'only certainty' for people in Gaza

Says UN official as Israeli strikes continue in enclave

AFP, Jerusalem

In Gaza, death appears to be the "only certainty" for 2.4 million Palestinians with no way to escape Israel's relentless bombardment, a UN official said Tuesday, recounting the growing desperation across the territory.

"It does feel like people are waiting for death. Death seems to be the only certainty in this situation," Louise Wateridge, a spokeswoman for the UN agency for Palestinian refugees, also known as UNRWA, told AFP from Gaza.

For the past two weeks, Wateridge has been in the Gaza Strip, witnessing the humanitarian crisis, fear of death and spread of disease as the offensive rages on.

"Nowhere in the Gaza Strip is safe, absolutely nowhere is safe. It's absolutely devastating," Wateridge said from the Nuseirat area of central Gaza -- a regular target of Israel's aerial assaults.

Since fighting broke out in October, Israeli forces have pounded the besieged territory from the air, land and sea, reducing much of it to rubble.

Now in its eleventh month, the offensive has created an acute humanitarian crisis, with hundreds of thousands of people, most of whom have been displaced several times, running out of basic food and clean drinking water.

"We are facing unprecedented challenges when it comes to the spread of disease, when it comes to hygiene. Part of this is because of the Israeli imposed siege on the Gaza Strip," Wateridge said.

Israel's military campaign has killed at least 40,223 people, according to the health ministry in the Hamas-run territory. Most of the dead in Gaza are women and children, according to the UN human rights office.

Tens of thousands of people have taken refuge in schools across the Gaza Strip, an increasingly regular target of Israeli missiles. Israel's military says these schools have been used as command and control centres by Hamas, a charge the group denies.

510 Turkish lira, 200 British pounds, a pistol, two magazines and 50 bullets were recovered during the raid," Anisur Rahman, inspector (investigation) of Banani Police Station, told The Daily Star.

The staffers alleged that the raid was conducted when no staffers were present there.

However, police said the staffers did not cooperate, forcing them to seek assistance from the fire service to break open the vaults.

Youth and Sports Adviser Asif Mahmud Sajib Bhuiyan, Additional District Magistrate of Dhaka AKM Hedaitul Islam, coordinator of Anti-Discrimination Student Movement Sarjis Alam, another coordinator Hasnat Abdullah, and Gono Odhikar Parishad President Nurul Haque Nur were present during the drive.

On Tuesday, Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) ordered the freezing of bank accounts of several individuals, including Nasrul and former Dhaka Metropolitan Police joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarkar.

Meanwhile, the BFIU yesterday asked banks to freeze the accounts of former lawmaker Shamim Osman, his brother and former lawmaker AKM Salim Osman and their family members.

The banks were also instructed to suspend the locker facilities for the members of the families for the next 30 days.

Besides, the banks were asked to suspend the transactions through their privately owned institutional accounts. The BFIU sought an update on the accounts in the next five working days.

Besides Hasina, 76 others were accused including AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader and several ministers.

Asaduzzaman, also an SC lawyer, filed a complaint on behalf of Abdul Matin, father of Sheikh Shahriar Bin Matin, who, according to the complaint, was fatally shot by police in the capital's Mirpur on July 18.

He was an HSC examinee of Ishwardi Ideal College in Mirpur.

Hasina and 49 others, including top leaders of the parties in the AL-led alliance, former ministers, police officers and leaders and activists of AL, were accused in the complaint.

The same lawyer filed another complaint on behalf of MA Razzaque, father of Asif Iqbal, a small trader from Sreepur Upazila of Magura.

As per the complaint, Asif was "shot dead by police" at the capital's Mirpur-10 intersection on July 19.

Hasina and 71 others, including top leaders of the parties under the AL-led alliance, former ministers, police officers, and AL leaders and activists, were accused.

10 MORE CASES

Two murder cases were filed with Badda Police Station against Hasina and 189 others over the killing of Sumon Sikder and Abdul Jabbar on July 19.

Sumon's mother Masuma filed the case against Hasina and 178 others, including former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan and Bashundhara Group Managing Director Sayem Sobhan Anvir.

Jabbar's mother Nazma Begum filed the other case against Hasina and eight others.

Sharmin Ahkter, widow of Russel Miah, filed a complaint with a Dhaka court, accusing Hasina and 27 others of killing her husband during protests in Rampura on July 19.

The court ordered the officer-in-charge of Rampura Police Station to register the complaint as a case.

The former prime minister and 38 others were sued in a case filed with Uttara East Police Station over the killing of Fazlul Haque on August 5. The victim's brother Anwar Hossain filed the case.

Hasina and 47 were sued for the killing of Tauhidul Islam, a student of Kabi Nazrul Government College on August 4.

The victim's elder brother Tariqul Islam filed the complaint with another Dhaka court that asked the Tejgaon Police Station OC to register it as an FIR.

Hasina, former chief justice ABM Khairul Haque and three others were sued over the killing of Firoz Talukder who was shot from a helicopter on July 19.

Firoz's wife Reshma Sultana filed the case with a Dhaka court that asked Mirpur Police Station OC to register it as an FIR.

A murder case was filed against Hasina and 44 others over the killing of Roman Mia, 17, in Narayanganj's Rupganj upazila on August 5.

Roman's aunt Rina filed the case with Rupganj Police Station.

In Gazipur, a murder case was filed last night against 139 people including Hasina over the death of Noor Alam, 22.

Another murder case was filed against Hasina and 79 others yesterday with Fatuallah Police Station over the killing of a bus driver.

Sahida Begum, mother of deceased Abul Hossain Mizi, who was shot dead at Signboard area on July 19, filed the case, said Fatullah OC Nure Azam.

In Sylhet, Chhatra Dal leader Juber Ahmed filed a case against Hasina, her sister Sheikh Rehana and 85 others for an attack on a BNP procession.

ADMISSION ANNOUNCEMENT
Master of Development Economics (MDE) Programme
Admission Open for 3rd Batch (Session: 2023-24)

BIDS Graduate School of Economics (BGSE)
Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS)

A Fully Funded Exceptional Master's Programme

ABOUT THE PROGRAMME

Master of Development Economics is a one-year programme. It consists of 10 taught courses and a dissertation for a total of 36 credit hours over a 12-month duration. The medium of instruction is English. It is a quantitatively-oriented programme, and classes are held four days a week. This programme is affiliated with the University of Dhaka, and the degree will be conferred by the university.

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Admission is open to individuals who have at least a 4-year bachelor's degree in any branch of economics, development studies, statistics, mathematics, finance, business administration, sociology, engineering or any other subject with some background of economics from any reputed university. Candidates already having one master's degree are also eligible to apply. Candidates with a CGPA below 3.00 at the bachelor's are NOT eligible to apply. Women, qualified government officials, and professionals from NGOs and the private sector are encouraged to apply.

APPLICATION PROCESS

- The application form can be downloaded from the BIDS website (www.bids.org.bd) and submitted through email to bgseadmission@gmail.com by 11/09/2024.
- Qualified applicants will be notified through email for a written test to be held on 14/09/2024.
- The admission test will evaluate the candidate's quantitative aptitude, language skills, and analytical ability.

FEES

- No tuition fees will be charged. However, a nominal amount of Taka 15,000.00 (fifteen thousand) needs to be paid at the time admission to cover incidental expenses.

We can't have same old politics on campus

Reforming the culture of student politics is crucial

A recent Prothom Alo survey—where 93 percent of respondents, or over 326,000 people, supported banning student politics—reflects widespread frustration and disillusionment with the current culture of student politics in Bangladesh. This overwhelming sentiment cannot be dismissed lightly. For far too long, student wings of political parties have exercised unchecked control over university campuses, often resorting to violence, intimidation, and coercion to maintain their dominance. In particular, the crimes and abuses committed by Chhatra League over the last 15 years have understandably led many to conclude that banning student politics altogether is the only solution.

However, the manner in which such surveys are framed misses the critical point that it's not student politics per se—but rather party-based student politics—that is problematic. Unfortunately, much of the discussion and reaction revolving around this issue seems to stem from this faulty premise. The decision of the 19 public educational institutions including 11 universities and six medical colleges that have recently prohibited student politics, with 13 of them simultaneously banning politics for teachers and staff, is also based on this premise. "Ban student politics" has become a rallying cry since the fall of the Awami regime on August 5.

However, we must also recognise the vital role that student politics, when properly structured and purpose-driven, can play in representing student interests and addressing legitimate grievances within our educational institutions. The very uprising that ousted the Awami League government owes to the leadership of largely nonpartisan but politically conscious students. Among them were also students tied to rival political parties, many of whom sacrificed their lives. But they left behind their political identity when they joined hands with other students for a cause that unified the whole nation.

The history of student politics in Bangladesh is replete with such glorious moments transcending party lines. Students being exploited by political parties to do their bidding form the other stream of this history, and it is this stream that needs to be rectified. Interestingly, we don't even need a new law or ordinance for that. The Representation of the People Order (RPO) already prohibits political parties from having any affiliated student or teacher organisations. However, we have seen how political parties bypassed this law on technicalities, with Awami League calling Chhatra League a "brotherly organisation", and BNP calling Chhatra Dal an "associate organisation" with its own constitution. Preventing such manipulations can put an end to the culture of party-based politics on campuses, and this is where we should focus.

The rights of students or teachers to engage in political activities are inalienable, but they can do so on their own time and outside the campus. But pursuing their political rights or agenda at the expense of general students and teachers is unacceptable. Clearly, there is a fine line to balance here. So instead of banning student politics altogether, university administrations should ban party-based politics, activate and empower student unions to better protect their interests, and ensure academic and intellectual freedoms so that our students can grow to be the leaders we need. Political influences in teacher recruitment, dormitory seat distribution, and other relevant areas also must stop. No party should be given the chance to exploit our universities again.

Health sector needs urgent healing

Govt must focus on purging partisan influences

A Prothom Alo report on the politicisation of the public health sector portrays a grim picture of how far the rot has spread. The report details how partisanship has pervaded the sector—from medical academia to healthcare services to projects under the health ministry—ensuring absolute dominance of the erstwhile ruling party. But Awami League was not the only one to have spread its tentacles; BNP also did the same while in power, and it seems the party is trying to do it again after the fall of the former.

Reportedly, after forming government in 2009, Awami League and its affiliates placed loyal officials in various health-related institutions. One example is the Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University (BSMMU), where five consecutive vice-chancellors appointed since 2009 have either been a member of pro-AL Swadhinata Chikitsak Parishad (Swachip) or directly involved with AL politics. The same goes for pro-VCs, proctors and others in top positions. Political recruitments were also seen at 37 other public medical colleges. Elsewhere, at the 495 upazila health complexes, only officials loyal to AL were appointed as upazila health officers. Thus, loyalists were favoured in leadership positions at every level of the public healthcare sector—from the grassroots to the top—whether they were qualified or not. In the process, AL deprived anyone with suspected links to BNP and even deserving nonpartisan candidates.

During BNP's rule in 2001-2006, it was the pro-BNP Doctors Association of Bangladesh (DAB) that dominated public-sector recruitments, choosing party loyalists in important positions, and thus depriving those even remotely affiliated with AL and its politics. During the times of both regimes, those who were not affiliated with either party or their politics have suffered, and the lack of competent leadership eventually plunged the sector into an unprecedented crisis.

In the aftermath of Sheikh Hasina's fall, it seems BNP is focused on repeating the same cycle. As many as 173 doctors who were recruited in BNP's time, and deprived of promotions throughout the AL rule, were all promoted in one day—on August 8. The Prothom Alo report suggests that the spate of promotions is still going on. Frustrated DAB members are cornering relevant authorities, staging protests in various medical institutions, and in some cases even vandalising public hospitals.

We understand the frustration of pro-BNP doctors and medical professionals, but their attempt to forcefully claim what they think they deserve cannot be acceptable. Political partisanship is one of the root causes behind the ailing public health sector, and it's time to do away with it. Otherwise, much-needed reforms in the sector will continue to elude us. To restore discipline in this vital sector, we urge the interim government to be strict and judicious about all appointments and promotions. Only those who are qualified and deserving should get preference.

What the interim government needs to do urgently is former professor of economics of Jahangirnagar University.

Anu Muhammad

ANU MUHAMMAD

After 15 years of autocratic rule and authoritarian economic policymaking, the time has come for significant societal reform through conscious youth leadership and public participation. Such a possibility was created once in 1972 and again in 1990. We could not realise either of those two opportunities because of the betrayal and hypocrisy of the big political parties. Instead, we saw them consolidate their wealth and create a new political class.

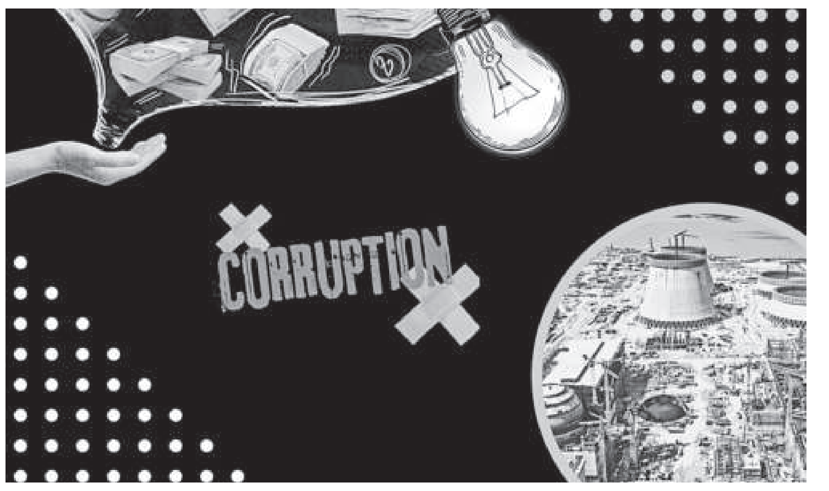
It is important that we remember the failings of the past, so that we do not replicate them moving forward. Now, there is an interim government—we know its limitations but we must also keep in mind its primary responsibilities. This government came to power through a mass uprising, so it has public support and responsibility to initiate some major reforms that other governments did not. Let's consider some of the things this government can do in the next one or two months.

First and foremost, inquiry committees should be formed to investigate the unprecedented number of killings and acts of repression that we have witnessed. The responsible persons, organisations, and policies that enabled these actions should be brought to justice and amended through a special tribunal. An example must be set so that this sort of mass killing can never happen again in Bangladesh.

Massive corruption, bad deals, bank robberies, loan defaults, and over-expenditures in megaprojects have been commonplace in the last 15 years. The government should publish a white paper and make public all the deals, contracts and excesses of the previous regime. The next duty would be to analyse the large amount of loans incurred—Bangladesh has never had such high levels of foreign loans. The people of Bangladesh are yet to fully realise the steep amount they will need to repay as a result of these incredibly expensive contracts, since the deals were never made public. Moving forward, we must demand full disclosure of each loan or contract signed by our government, as the burden for paying them will fall on us.

Then there are the megaprojects, which have been touted as the achievements of the government; yet many of them are actually disastrous, unreliable, and risk-prone, threatening the security of the country. It is essential for this government to review these megaprojects. One of the most prominent ones is the Rampal project which has the potential to destroy the Sundarbans, the largest mangrove forest in the world that also acts as a protective barrier against natural disasters. Enough national and international research has been conducted by experts clearly highlighting the dangerous impact of these projects. Moreover, there has been a decade-long people's movement against this project with support being attained from every section of society.

There is also the Rooppur Nuclear Power Plant, which poses an existential threat. It is unusual to find a nuclear power plant in such a densely populated place filled with forests and rivers. If the risk of such a nuclear plant were ever to become a reality, the lives of tens of millions of people would be endangered. Even the nuclear waste management system of a project like this would put the country at risk.



The energy sector has become an area of large-scale corruption in Bangladesh.

VISUAL: STAR

The decision is clear: projects like Rampal, Rooppur, and Bashkhali must be cancelled. The interim government can initiate the process of doing so. Now, a question may arise: Since we have already taken loans for these projects and spent such an exorbitant amount of money, won't this be a massive financial loss to not continue? My answer is this: if a government, without the consent of its people, takes a loan that is against their well-being, it is not the people's responsibility to repay that loan. It is a case of odious debt, a legal doctrine explaining this very phenomenon. However, should we not receive that exemption and have to repay the loan, I would still argue that cancelling such projects would be more beneficial than going ahead with them in the long run.

The energy sector has become an area of large-scale corruption in Bangladesh. In the name of capacity charges, some companies receive hundred thousand crores of taka. Previously, the prime minister was in charge of this ministry, along with the state minister, aided by some local and international private companies. The companies that benefitted from unethical arrangements included well-known names such as Summit, Beximco, Bashundhara, United and many others in Bangladesh; in India, it consisted of NTPC, Adani, and Ambani; in Russia, it was Rosatom and Gazprom; in the US, the organisations were Chevron, ConocoPhillips; and in China it was China Power etc.

The entire power and energy policy needs to be revised. The Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply Act must be repealed immediately. Right now, we are running on a master plan made entirely by foreign consultants. We have to reject this and cancel all the environmentally disastrous, import-oriented, foreign-funded projects and opt for environmentally-friendly, safe, non-corrupt projects. This will not only reduce the price of gas and electricity, but eliminate the threat posed to the environment. We can achieve this by developing Bangladesh's capacity in natural gas exploration and by pushing for renewable energy. The interim government must initiate this journey.

Next, we have to prioritise the major but neglected sectors crucial for public well-being which include public education, public healthcare, and public transportation. For far too long, we've seen low budget allocation and high irregularities in these sectors. Meanwhile, public transportation remains under the auspices of corrupt business owners. Should the spirit of the 2018 Road Safety movement be revived, and the demands made then be fulfilled now, the public transport sector can be greatly rectified. After independence, great emphasis had been placed on education and health; yet we have backtracked completely. Every government has failed in this regard. If the current government focuses on fixing these sectors, their credibility will increase, and based on this, stronger institutions may be developed.

> The entire power and energy policy needs to be revised. The Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply Act must be repealed immediately. Right now, we are running on a master plan made entirely by foreign consultants. We have to reject this and cancel all the environmentally disastrous, import-oriented, foreign-funded projects and opt for environmentally friendly, safe, non-corrupt projects.

The conversation of reforming the constitution should also start. We need to figure out how the constitution has become exceedingly discriminatory, autocratic, and anti-people. How was power taken from the people? Why does the prime minister hold so much power in one hand? The constitution includes clauses for gender, class, ethnic and religious inclusion and also includes clauses against all sorts of discrimination. Yet, these promises have not been fulfilled due to opposite clauses in the same constitution.

Finally, along with institutional reforms for sustainable democracy, the VIP culture must be eradicated. Public offices should transform to serve the public without hassle. There must be accountability and transparency for all actions taken by government offices.

Understanding the auto-pass trap

MAISHA ISLAM MONAMEE

When the Higher Secondary Certificate (HSC) exams were cancelled in the face of intense student protests, it seemed like a swift and empathetic solution to an urgent crisis. After all, the protests were marked by significant trauma and loss, and many students were left physically and emotionally scarred. On the surface, offering an automatic pass might appear to be a compassionate acknowledgement of their struggles. Moreover, the decision aligns with the desire to avoid exacerbating the students' stress and discomfort. However, as someone who experienced the "auto-pass" phenomenon first-hand during the pandemic, I can attest that such decisions are rarely as simple as they seem. The "auto-pass" trap—though it may provide immediate relief—carries hidden costs and long-term consequences.

To begin with, a major drawback of the auto-pass system is its potential to undermine the academic integrity of the examination process. HSC exams are designed to assess students' knowledge and preparedness at a critical juncture of their academic journey. By cancelling these exams and relying on past results or alternate assessments, we risk diluting the standards that make the HSC a meaningful benchmark. Another critical concern is the issue of fairness. Using SSC results as a stand-in for HSC exams feels like being measured by a ruler that is too short for the task. The HSC exams are meant to challenge students at a higher level, reflecting their progression and readiness for higher education. By bypassing these exams, we risk creating an inequitable situation where some students are unfairly advantaged or disadvantaged based on their past performance.

> Quick fixes rarely lead to lasting solutions, especially when it comes to education. The auto-pass decision sets a concerning precedent for how crises are managed in our education system. While student voices are crucial and must be heard, decisions impacting large numbers of individuals should be made based on comprehensive consideration and long-term implications, rather than immediate pressure.

There must be students who have prepared diligently for their exams, especially those who previously struggled and hoped to improve their grades. The auto-pass system overlooks their hard work and sacrifices. This not only impacts their academic journey, but also their sense of achievement and self-worth. I have many friends from the 2020 HSC batch who were unable to apply for admission tests due to average grades. Some of them had to take a gap year before applying abroad, while my English-medium peers opted for the next session of A Levels.

The "auto-pass" label can also have a lingering impact on students' futures. The tag sticks for longer than one would think—through university applications, job interviews, and even casual conversations. It might imply to others that these students did not earn their qualifications through traditional means, potentially leading to doubts about their capabilities. The social and psychological impact of this stigma can be significant, affecting their self-esteem and how they are perceived by peers and potential employers.

Moreover, we need to acknowledge the fact that the protests leading up to the cancellation of the exams were far from orderly, and the decision to cancel the exams under the pressure of a mob-like protest raises serious questions about administrative decision-making. It suggests that significant policy changes can be achieved through long marches and mass mobilisation, rather than through thoughtful analysis and consideration. Effective crisis management requires a balance of empathy and fairness, along with decisions that uphold the integrity of systems while addressing immediate needs. This is a classic case of how the immediate demands of a vocal group can sometimes overshadow a more balanced and considered approach. Decisions like these should be made through representative discourse and after consideration of all sides.

Instead of opting for a blanket auto-pass policy, several alternative approaches could have been taken to balance compassion with fairness. For instance, providing special provisions for students who were directly affected by the protests—those who were injured or deeply traumatised—could have been one solution. These students could have been given the option to take their exams later when they were ready to perform at their best. Alternatively, implementing modified assessment methods could have provided flexibility for students facing exceptional circumstances. For example, offering project-based evaluations or oral exams could have allowed students to demonstrate their knowledge in a different format. The authorities could have also prioritised mental health support and counselling for the affected students to help them cope with their trauma and stress.

Quick fixes rarely lead to lasting solutions, especially when it comes to education. The auto-pass decision sets a concerning precedent for how crises are managed in our education system. While student voices are crucial and must be heard, decisions impacting large numbers of individuals should be made based on comprehensive consideration and long-term implications, rather than immediate pressure. As students, we deserve a system that values our hard work and gives us the chance to prove ourselves in a level playing field. Anything less is a disservice to us all.

Bangladesh can learn from Tunisia's experience

Kallol Mustafa

KALLOL MUSTAFA

The overthrow of dictator Sheikh Hasina in the recent mass uprising has given rise to new optimism in Bangladesh's long struggle for democratic transition. Learning from the failure of democratic transition after the 90's mass uprising, public opinion has been formed in favour of various institutional reforms including the country's constitution. In this context, lessons need to be learned from the failure and success of institutional reforms in other countries of the world.

The pragmatic and consensus-based politics exhibited by Tunisian political leaders and civil society groups in their struggle for democratic transition can be a good case study, as mentioned in The Tunisian Revolution and Democratic Transition (2022) by Mohammad Dawood Sofi. From Tunisia's experiences of success and failure, we can understand what to do and what not to do in the path of democratic transition.

Tunisian dictator Ben Ali was ousted from power in a mass uprising in January 2011. After that, to break free from the old authoritarian rule and initiate a democratic transition, a decision was made to elect a National Constituent Assembly (NCA) to draft a new constitution. A commission named High Authority for the Achievement of the Revolution Objectives (HAARO), simply known as the Ben Achour Commission, was formed to frame new electoral laws and procedures for the smooth conduct of elections for NCA. The commission with 155 members had a broad representation of legal experts, scholars, civil society organisations, and political parties. Following a free and fair election, a 217-member NCA was elected in October 2011 with representatives of various political parties.

Under the leadership of this elected constituent assembly, several specialised committees were formed to draft the various parts of the constitution, including the preamble, general principles, fundamental rights, government structure, judiciary etc. The committees prepared the drafts by taking advice from many local and foreign legal and constitutional experts. Different social groups including labour unions, women's and human rights organisations also participated in this work providing advice and playing a role in resolving disagreements among political parties on different sections of the constitution. In this way, the draft constitution was finalised based on the active participation and opinions of people from all walks of life and was adopted as the constitution of Tunisia in January 2014 by a two-thirds majority vote in the NCA.

Unlike in Egypt, where two constitutions were quickly drafted by appointed committees with little public debate or input within two years after the Arab Spring, the elected NCA in Tunisia drafted the constitution based on two years of arguments and compromises. This constitution was termed as the most progressive one in the Arab world, in which freedom of expression, religious freedom, and equality of men and women were guaranteed. The 2014 constitution tried to balance the powers of the president and the prime minister. According to the constitution, the ministries of defence and foreign affairs would be in the hands of the president and the remaining ministries would be controlled by the prime minister. The parliamentary election would be based on the proportional representation system. The president would be elected by general, free and direct elections, who would appoint the prime minister consulting with the parliament. The constitution legally mandated the Independent High Authority for Elections (ISIE) which was formed by the NCA in January 2014 by secret ballot and with a two-thirds majority of the NCA. ISIE has been provided with its own budget, and a provision prohibits the removal of members without specific reasons prescribed by law. ISIE held a series of fair and impartial elections—both parliamentary and presidential—in 2014 and 2019 which furthered Tunisia's democratic transition.

The elected NCA in Tunisia drafted the constitution based on two years of arguments and compromises. This constitution was termed as the most progressive one in the Arab world, in which freedom of expression, religious freedom, and equality of men and women were guaranteed. The 2014 constitution tried to balance the powers of the president and the prime minister.

However, the political parties that came to power through these elections could not solve Tunisia's economic, social and security issues. Problems such as unemployment, inflation, corruption and inequality again fuelled public discontent. Added to that were the terrorist attacks of various Jihadi groups. Demonstrations intensified in January 2021 to protest the failure to deal with the Covid pandemic, the economic crisis and police brutalities. Exploiting this public discontent, President Kais Saeed, a retired law professor, who won the 2019 election by a landslide, suspended the parliament and dismissed the prime minister in July 2021. And in doing so, he used Article 80 of Tunisia's 2014 constitution, which empowers the president to take "extraordinary measures" for a specified period of time on matters of national security and sovereignty. But first suspending and then dissolving parliament under Article 80 was unconstitutional as the article mandated that the prime minister and the parliamentary speaker be consulted and that the parliament remain functional during such exceptional measures. Unfortunately, the one body that could adjudicate whether Article 80 was appropriately applied was the constitutional court, which still did not exist due to the inability of the parliament to agree on the court's membership.

Exploiting this situation, President Kais Said drafted a new constitution in June 2022 that would reverse Tunisia's democratic transition. Then in July 2022, in a controversial referendum held in the face of strong objections and boycotts by opposition parties where voter turnout was only 30.5 percent, the new constitution was adopted, effectively transforming the Tunisian government into a presidential autocracy.

Notable among the reasons for this reversal of Tunisia's democratic transition within a decade of the fall of the dictator are: extreme political polarisation, especially between secular and Islamist parties; failure to address economic problems such as inequality, unemployment and inflation; terrorist attacks by various jihadist groups that sway public opinion in favour of authoritarian action; various weaknesses of the constitution including ambiguities regarding the distribution of powers between the prime minister and the president, lack of protection mechanism to prevent misuse of Article 80 of the constitution, weak judiciary, inadequate mechanism for resolution of differences between the president, prime minister and parliament etc. Besides, the 2014 constitution did not give due importance to ensuring various social and economic rights of the people, which acted as a catalyst behind the erosion of the constitution's popularity.

The positive aspect of Tunisia's constitutional reform was the democratic process of drafting the constitution through an elected National Constituent Assembly based on the opinions of people of various ideologies. For this reason, Tunisia was exceptional while many other countries in the Arab world that were freed from autocracy in the contemporary period quickly fell into military rule or civil war. On the other hand, the democratic transition of Tunisia faces major obstacles due to the political divisiveness based on identity and the inability of the political classes to solve the long-standing economic problems such as inequality, unemployment and inflation by utilising the political freedom enshrined in the new constitution.

It is important to learn from this experience of Tunisia as Bangladesh embarks on a democratic transformation journey.

How will Bangladesh-China relations shape up?

Farid Erkizia Bakht

FARID ERKIZIA BAKHT

If Bangladesh is suspended within the geopolitical tripod of India, China and the United States, where are we positioning now? The current discourse suggests that priorities are set where the near-neighbour with the largest GDP on the planet only gets bronze, not silver, and certainly not gold.

Beijing keeps its customary quiet demeanour, scrupulously keeping to its decades-long policy of not publicly interfering in internal matters. They are, however, quite interested in the events of the Bengal delta. The Global Times on August 12 noted that Donald Lu's visit in May was seen by some as "part of a strategy to pressure Hasina into acting against China." Liu Zongzi, director of the Center of South Asia Studies at the Shanghai Institute for International Studies, guessed that the reason for the US "seeking to overthrow her [Hasina]" was "(her non-compliance) with the US on many issues."

Myanmar and St Martin's Island

Let's chat about St Martin's Island, a tiny, three square-kilometre coral outpost, as referred to in Chinese media. I visited the island—also known as Narikel Jinjira—in 2001, staying there for a night—a time when it was still not on the tourist trail. It took mere minutes to walk from one end to the other. Could this fragile place really be the location for a US base, to add to their 800-plus others around the globe? Eight kilometres off the coast of Arakan, some suggest it could be a listening post and a forward deployment point. In the age of drones, could one intervene in Arakan and the rest of Myanmar? It reminds us how Bangladesh and Myanmar security forces faced off each other in 2018.

Whether it is St Martin's or Teknaf is not the issue. Beijing is naturally alarmed by the civil war in Myanmar, with which it shares a long porous border. Instability in this resource-rich place directly affects Yunnan. Given that the US is confronting China in the Taiwan Straits, it is plausible that a "second front" might appear on the Irrawaddy (Ayeyarwady). If Dhaka shifts from Delhi to Washington's orbit with this new administration (or possibly a BNP one), Beijing will naturally look at the security implications across the Naf River and beyond.

More than a million Rohingya remain trapped in an open air confinement in Bangladesh's Cox's Bazar. Imploring China to assist with their repatriation begs the question: why are they going to spend enormous amounts of political capital in dealing with the brutal Tatmadaw or the Arakan Army? Dhaka needs to formulate a much broader policy on Myanmar, which takes into consideration Beijing's anxieties and seeks common ground between the two. That would be a first. Besides the Rohingya, how often have our political elites ever evinced an interest in Myanmar—and thus China?

VISUAL: ANWAR SOHEL

There was one time. In 2012, there were talks of Chinese willingness to build a direct road from Kunming via Mandalay to Teknaf, which was shelved. India leaned on Yangon to block that lifeline. Later, Delhi also put an end to the longer route from Kunming to Kolkata, via Dhaka, which had been rebranded as BCIM (Bangladesh-China-India-Myanmar Economic Corridor).

Treating China like a cash cow?

This is where we come to the nub of the problem. We see China as just a giant foreign aid ATM. They are ready to lend and build as part of the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI), but they also seek a deeper partnership.

Even though I had my fears, I wrote a piece in this daily in July, titled "Mission to China." I was shocked how disastrous the trip to Beijing turned out to be. Last year, in discussions in Dhaka, I was led to believe that the Awami League government would shift dramatically to Beijing after securing its victory in the January 7 (s)election. But would Delhi allow such a thing? This year, Sheikh Hasina made not one, but two, visits to Delhi. The second one looked like a dressing down by the South Block. Chinese offers to invest over a billion dollars in saving the little water that came from the Teesta River were to be rejected. So were any major breakthroughs. So, the former foreign minister, Hasan Mahmud, and associates bandied about the sum of money they would ask out of China. $5 billion worth of yuan, which became $2 billion. More infrastructure—easy to syphon commissions from, perhaps.

This was capped off by a severe breach of diplomatic protocol. Hasina and her courtiers tore up the schedule and returned one night earlier. Mahmud claimed it was because she was terribly ill. Even if it was because they got wind of the seriousness of the student revolt, the then foreign minister and colleagues could have remained. But no, they returned—all smiles. Criticisms were batted away with a prime ministerial diagnosis that our heads had to be examined.

The interim government must talk about jobs, industrialisation and the partnership with China. Last month, the issue, at its ultimate core, was not only the unfair distribution of bureaucratic posts; it was also the profound lack of decent employment in the private sector. To solve that, one needs a policy, a strategy and shedloads of capital.

As a gift, China upgraded the relationship to that of a Comprehensive Strategic Cooperative Partnership. Has anyone noticed much of any dialogue or observations about this?

That was then, this is now

Over the last decade, we have been unable to work with China to build a new industrial export sector to wean us away from our dangerous dependency on the RMG sector. Jagaran Chakma's report in this daily last month detailed the painful odyssey of the Chinese Economic and Industrial Zone. The 784-acre site in Chattogram was allocated for Chinese industry. Intended to create as many as 200,000 jobs, it is still inoperative for eight long years.

The interim government must talk about jobs, industrialisation and the partnership with China. Last month, the issue, at its ultimate core, was not only the unfair distribution of bureaucratic posts; it was also the profound lack of decent employment in the private sector. To solve that, one needs a policy, a strategy and shedloads of capital. Right now, only China offers that quantity of capital and expertise to invest in new industries. Supply chains, component-producing factories, industrial clusters are all exporting to earn dollars and yuan. This should form the basis of the developmental discourse, and it should be steered towards modern industry and associated technology.

In 2024, the unipolar world of yesteryear has disappeared. China is the manufacturing core of the world. It is the largest consumer market, too. It is just that we have little to sell to them, hence the urgent necessity to set up newer production lines to create higher skilled jobs.

Can Md Touhid Hossain convince us that Bangladesh has not moved merely from the Indian leg of the tripod directly to a distant Western power? I would like to hear more about how Bangladesh will work with China, to genuinely further mutual interests. This is still a least developed country. Tens of millions of young Bangladeshis are rightly impatient. Time is short.

How honest are book reviews in Bangladesh?

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

The harsh truth is that without solicitation, very few books will be written about. These days, published authors end up doing significant legwork, from supplying media contacts to their publishers, to requesting and emailing scores of academics, journalists, and writers for blurbs, endorsements, and reviews.

SHAHRIAR SHAAMS

Sometime ago, a writer reached out to me with a request. His debut novel was being published later in the year and he was wondering if I would be open to reviewing it. I was aware of the book, having read it when it was still only a draft. The author was not someone I only knew, either, but a mentor who had supported my writing in many ways, even through monetary means. Refusing him, then, felt tantamount to betrayal. But I had to in the end, and though he understood, I still came out of the exchange feeling guilty of being unhelpful or, worse, ungrateful.

Much has been written about the machinations that go behind the scenes of book criticism. The Economist, of all places, last year mourned the death of the "hatchet-job" in a piece called "Critics are getting less cruel. Alas", saying that the book review reads often like "a smug inside job". Indeed, a cursory review of book criticism in newspapers in Bangladesh lays bare the fact that it is very much the case here as well. Book reviews written by a student or well-wisher of the author is unsurprisingly common. When an unfortunate staff-writer is assigned a book, they are often nudged into writing a glowing review or, if that is not possible, a tempered, "balanced" review. The latter is a phenomenon I had to personally deal with during my time working as a staff writer for literary supplements. Far from being "balanced", the term is used to refer to reviews where the meagre amount of positives of the book is amplified throughout the piece, after which the writer is free to add in a token few lines on what held the book back. I am of course to be blamed for this as well, as I too had "adjusted" a few times, caving into the pressures of producing a "balanced" review.

Mir Arif, a Bangladeshi writer based in the US, with whom I had the pleasure of working alongside as a staff-writer, says of his experience reviewing books in Bangladesh: "A major challenge was learning about the writers' backgrounds and their literary associations, which was somehow important in the existing review culture...In editorial meetings, the editors often discussed their views on the writer even before I read the book. As bad as it sounds, editors' views often influenced my reviews, sometimes even after I had submitted my drafts. On top of it, there was a general tendency to overpraise Bangladeshi literature..."

Bangladeshi writing in English is consistently assessed in this way. Their purported excellence is taken for granted. In an interesting piece by Usraat Fahmidah, "Why don't Bangladeshi books reach international award shelves?" (The Daily Star, 2022), the blame on why our writers never seem to win Bookers or the DSC prize is put on literary racism, uneven output, or even a lack of interest in pursuing literature in the language, but curiously there is not one mention on the literary qualities of the books in question by any of the luminaries who had been interviewed. I do not intend to downplay the obviously real factors that the essay talks about, nor am I of the opinion that all of Bangladeshi-literature in English is second-rate, but to completely omit any discussion on whether these books deserved to win on literary grounds comes from an understanding that any such critique would disservice a fellow countryman and a burgeoning literary scene.

Those hankering over how we must present (via review) "our" writers positively to a "western" audience, because otherwise Bangladeshi literature in English would not get international recognition and respect, must explain how supporting "our" writers only ends up meaning that one has to unconditionally stump for these books and put them up on a pedestal they may not deserve. Does it not, then, achieve the exact opposite of what they want? Do we not end up looking shallow and tribal? And do we ever wonder where this talk of protecting "our" writers seems to come from? Perhaps from the very class of writers who would want that adulation? Perhaps, one must begin to think that it is contention and not celebration that really strengthens literature.

Ikhtisad Ahmed, author of Yours, Etcetera (Bengal Lights Books, 2015), concurs that "Our reviewing culture... is rife with sycophancy, intellectual dishonesty, and protection of class interests..."

Ahmed, who had been no stranger to the backlash of critical reviews here, adds that, "We have eschewed intellectual debates and discussions for a celebration of works that fail to even be mediocre...This not only prevents us from taking the writing of Bangladeshis seriously enough to read and engage with our own widely, but holds us back on the world stage too."

I asked Sarah Anjum Bari, former literary editor at The Daily Star, how she dealt with conflicts of interest. She wrote back: "I don't believe in publishing a review just to bash on a book or author, so when we did run a negative review it would be one that still engaged critically with the text and had something valuable to say about it. I sometimes got in touch with the author in advance and gave them a heads up if a negative review of their work were about to come out. I also tried to push back on reviews that simply described and summarised the text—which is usually a sign of the reviewer not wanting to share their honest opinions on the text—so we would always send the draft back asking for more analysis. Ideally, we tried not to have a text reviewed by an author's friend (though this is honestly difficult to maintain in a place like Bangladesh where the community is so close knit)..."

It is not shocking to learn that there is an unhealthy overlap of friend and critic in book reviews here and an evangelical need to promote one's own for the collective cause is present among us. I am always distrustful of the praise I see, for instances of a friend of the author masquerading as a generous, conscious critic are numerous. The book review cannot be an advertisement. It is unfair to be a marketer to an unsuspecting reader.

The harsh truth is that without solicitation, very few books will be written about. These days, published authors end up doing significant legwork, from supplying media contacts to their publishers, to requesting and emailing scores of academics, journalists, and writers for blurbs, endorsements, and reviews. How successful this solicitation is also depends on factors such as class. Well-off and well-connected authors tend to do better. How likely is it then to envision a critical appraisal of these well-connected authors in newspaper pages with personal connections, if one can be frank? Even when their works deserve praise, it is praise that comes out as suspect. Is this the environment through which we are to make literary waves?

Reviewers, in turn, have increasingly become grifters. Far from suffering through the nauseating experience of writing something they may not mean, they enthusiastically heap praise in a bid to be agreeable, or perhaps in hopes of similar treatment when their time arrives, or even for a recommendation letter for an MFA. If nothing, a friendship can be on the table. In a piece in Esquire by Isle McElroy, "The Rise of Literary Friendships", the writer asks, "Are writers clinging to each other for support because, as publishing houses consolidate and advances decline, other writers are all we really have for support? Have the crabs in the barrel begun to hold claws?"

From the perspective of South Asia, this has been the case for a lot longer with the absence of needed institutions and opportunities. I believe this very sensibility has significantly contributed to writers receiving undeserving praise in the name of support.

Support is necessary in any case, but book critics must understand they should be servants to the text. When the Master is kind and original, they must capitulate to the magic, and when it is derivative and cruel, one must start planning a beheading. In the course of reviewing books in so many years (the first review I had written for this paper had been over a decade ago as a teenager), there were times I had gone on to worship a writer's books and times when I wished for their early demise. Never did I have the urge to be their friend.

4 books to read in celebration of Women in Translation month

There was a wide array of options from European to South American works, as well as an encouraging emergence of Southeast Asian literature.

NUR-E-JANNAT ALIF

Women in Translation Month is an annual celebration that toasts to women authors from around the globe who write in languages other than English. With the growing interest in translated fiction, it is refreshing to note that curating this year's list was relatively easier than last year's. There was a wide array of options from European to South American works, as well as an encouraging emergence of Southeast Asian literature. However, it is worth noting that the selection of titles by Bangladeshi female authors (or South Asian authors, in general) translated into English remains limited.

Students of the Delta Bilingual Academy, Fernanda and Annelise are more sisters than friends, impossible to separate, one and the same. Every day after school, Fernanda, Annelise, and their friends assemble to embark on a sinister adventure, one that is simultaneously thrilling and increasingly perilous. They have their own conception of God—albeit introduced by Annelise—and their rituals are eerily anomalous. However, this is not the only secret Fernanda and Annelise share.

RIVER OF MY BLOOD
Selina Hossain, Jackie Kabir (Translator)
Rupa Publications India, 2016

A powerful and heart-rending narrative of love and loss, River of My Blood follows Boori, a spirited and resilient young girl, as she navigates the complexities of adulthood. After marrying an older relative, Boori struggles with the stigma of infertility and later confronts the challenges of raising a son who is born deaf and mute. With the Muktijuddho engulfing the coast of her village, Haldi, the now-widowed Boori must face the most life-altering decision she has ever had to make. Not only is this book a gripping portrayal of the Liberation War, but it also advocates for women's rights and stands firm against patriarchy, leaving an indelible impact on readers long after they finish the last page.

WRITTEN IN TEARS

HarperPerennial, 2015

Written In Tears is an emotive collection of eight short stories that delve into the decades-long violence in Assam, exploring its profound impact on women. Originally written in Assamese, these stories portray strong female characters who, despite enduring unimaginable suffering, manage to rise above their hardships. In one story, a woman witnesses her husband's family grappling with the absence of her insurgent brother-in-law. In another, a girl's life is forever altered after a brutal rape. Kalita's writing vividly captures the hollow vein of violence, the oppression of women, and the often senseless nature of patriarchy. Through her personal experiences, she transports readers to an Assam caught amid violent uprisings, where ideologies clash, innocent lives are destroyed, and women suffer both physical and emotional violations—all in the name of freedom.

HISTORY OF ASH: A NOVEL
Khadija Marouazi, Alexander E. Elinson (Translator)
Hoopoe, 2023

Prisoners during the "Lead Years" of Morocco, a man and a woman, wrestle against systematic oppression for the sake of emancipation. Shifting between past and present, Mouline and Leila recount their experiences both inside the prison cell and beyond it, navigating the torture chamber, the judicial operation, and the challenges they confronted after their exemption. Narrated in vivid detail, their strategies for survival and resistance offer clear and often intense reflections. Harrowing yet resilient, this is the book about fortitude, power and the sheer will to freedom.

BCB'S LEADERSHIP CHANGE

On Tuesday morning, it was reported that a meeting of the Bangladesh Cricket Board's (BCB) directors would occur the next day at the Ministry of Youth and Sports. Directors Iftekhar Ahmed Mithu and Khaled Mahmud Sujon confirmed this to The Daily Star, but CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury remained unreachable.

Veteran organiser Ahmed Sajjadul Alam Bobby, meanwhile, claimed he had not received any notice, despite still being a board director. He had been asked to resign by the National Sports Council, but unlike Jalal Yunus, another NSC-nominated director who stepped down, he refused.

Around midnight, BCB confirmed the emergency board meeting's location (Ministry of Youth and Sports' conference room) and time (Wednesday 11:00 am) -- and that it had requested a secure venue due to the country's current situation -- further informing that there would be no media access, only recorded clips, images, and a media release afterward.

Eight board directors and former skipper Faruque Ahmed, who replaced Yunus as an NSC-nominated director, alongside CEO Nizamuddin attended the meeting, where a minute's silence was observed for the lives lost in the historic student-led anti-discrimination movement.

The meeting began by approving the previous board discussions. Faruque officially joined as a director, and Nazmul Abedeen Fahim was approved as a councillor, later joining the meeting as a new NSC-nominated director.

The discussion then turned to the ICC Women's T20 World Cup, which had been relocated to the UAE. Lastly, the board addressed Nazmul Hassan Papon, who had notified them via email the previous night of his resignation as board president.

Afterwards, the discussion turned to who will be Papon's successor. Iftekhar proposed Faruque, supported by Akram. With no other proposals, Faruque was declared the new president, concluding the hour-long meeting.

Faruque sheds light on his way of operation

SPORTS REPORTER

Former national team captain and selector Faruque Ahmed became the first-ever cricketer to become the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) president on Wednesday. Following his appointment, Faruque talked to the media on various issues, providing an idea about his way of operation in the coming days, during a press conference at the Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium in Mirpur. The excerpts of the press brief are as follows:

On being BCB president

I am very proud that I have been given a very important responsibility. If I consider my playing career too, it has been more than 42 years that I have served in various roles as a player, and captain and during my two terms in the selection committee.

On changing system

We could improve more in particular sectors, something that didn't happen. Our responsibility is to rebuild the system. There are times when you aren't able to do everything as outside pressure remains. I hope to enact a good system this time.

We have to focus on the constitution by which directors and presidents are elected. Next year there is an election and before that, we have to work on the constitution so that those who love cricket truly and want to do something are prioritised. The criterion for the stakeholders whom we want to onboard would be cricket's development. If someone says that the corruption in the board can't be completely ousted, I will not believe that person.

On media's role

Do not blow things out of proportion. And, regarding criticism, points must be raised that are most important for our cricket.

On his level of interference

I had once resigned complaining about the system (in 2016 from the post of chief selector). Since I did that, I can assure that there is no possibility of that (unwanted interference). The cricket board is the policy maker, so do not mix it up with selection. For instance, the board will have policies regarding certain players and that instruction will be given to the selection panel. It will be a policy matter, and there won't be any instructions like 'don't take Shakib [Al Hasan], Tamim [Iqbal] or take them'.

On appointment of vice-president and conflict of interest among directors

We will try to implement things according to the constitution as early as possible. A vice-president will be there, and those are in the board will work on avoiding any conflict of interest.

On player-cum politician Shakib

We will discuss Shakib's situation and whether he can continue under the current circumstances. We are also considering adding rules regarding player conduct during tours, including restrictions on endorsements.

On head coach Chandika Hathurusingha

I am not sure about the details of the contract with Chandika Hathurusingha. I still maintain the same stance. I haven't deviated from what I said (not willing to keep Hathurusingha if elected as BCB president). I need to formally review some things. I will see how things should be done, whether we can find someone better or at least someone who can perform well, and then I will talk.

On Tamim Iqbal

It's good if he can play and if he can't play and decides to join the board, I will still be very happy. He has leadership qualities and if guys like him come [to the board], we can do something good.

On corruption

I am aware that there have been many irregularities. It's not possible to fix everything in a day. Over the past 12 years, it has become like Frankenstein. It can't be resolved overnight. However, I assure you that there will be a focus on preventing irregularities that directly impact cricket.

On whether an investigation commission to look into past corruption will be formed

If an investigation commission is formed, its reports will definitely be made public. Regarding an independent commission to look into corruption, we have to seek help from experts as I don't know everything.

'Awesome' fielding highlight of Day 1

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh pacer Hasan Mahmud praised his side's fielding, particularly behind the wicket, which remained as the key highlight of day one of the Rawalpindi Test against Pakistan yesterday.

After putting the hosts into bat, Bangladesh bowlers made early inroads and caused jitters, reducing Shan Masood's side to three down for 16 in a rain-delayed first session before Saim Ayub (56) and Saud Shakeel (57 not out) hit fifties to propel Pakistan to 158 for four at stumps.

Bangladesh's first session sizzle could be largely credited to the fielders as Zakir Hasan and wicketkeeper Liton Das took excellent catches.

Zakir, who was stationed at gully, dove acrobatically to the right to take hold of a sharp chance to remove Pakistan opener Abdullah Shafique while Liton lunged down the leg side to take a one-handed screamer to dismiss premier batter Babar Azam.

"It's very important to get help from the fielders. I think the boys were really good in the field. Some of the catches were wonderful today. It really feels great. They were awesome," Hasan told reporters after the day's play.

On a rare day where Tigers practically grabbed everything that came their way, Liton took a regulation catch to send back Pakistan skipper Shan Masood, while Mehedi Hasan Miraz remained alert late in the day, taking another catch to get rid of Saim Ayub.

As expected by the green tinge on the surface, pacers were able to get purchase off the wicket. Hasan and his pace partner Shoriful Islam scalped two wickets each, three with the new ball, and looked far more threatening than the six overs of spin bowled by Miraz and Shakib Al Hasan. Hasan, however, said that the wicket did not entirely behave as expected.

"We've been practising here. The wicket was very green and I thought there was going to be pace and bounce but after the rain came it got a bit tacky and slow," Hasan said.

All sports associations dissolved

SPORTS REPORTER

The Youth and Sports Ministry yesterday dissolved all executive committees of divisional, district and upazila sports associations as well as divisional, district and upazila women's sports associations.

"In a bid to keeping activities of all sports associations fair, active, and seamless, all divisional sports associations, divisional women's sports associations, district sports associations, district women's sports associations, upazila sports associations and upazila women's sports associations have been dissolved under the existing law of the government's delegated power," read a circular from the youth and sports ministry.

The authorities concerned [divisional commissioners, district collectors and upazila nirbahi officers] have been asked to form ad-hoc committees comprising of respectable and acceptable sports-loving and sports-related people and send the list of those committees to the National Sports Council for final approval.

England pacer Chris Woakes celebrates taking the wicket of Sri Lanka's Angelo Mathews as the hosts assumed control on the opening day of the first Test in Manchester yesterday. Woakes claimed three wickets, helping England reduce Sri Lanka to 178 for eight at tea.

Students force DU dean to quit

DUTA writes to law adviser describing 'scary situation'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

One more dean of Dhaka University was forced to resign yesterday in the wake of a student protest.

Different groups of students have been pressing for removal of several other teachers from their administrative and academic roles alleging that they sided with the ousted Awami League government, and failed to provide security to the students during the recent quota reform protest.

Prof AKM Mahbub Hasan, dean of the Faculty of Biological Sciences, resigned yesterday.

Zeenat Huda, general secretary of Dhaka University Teachers' Association (DUTA), yesterday wrote to the Law Affairs Adviser Asif Nazrul expressing concern over such incidents.

According to witnesses, around 60 students of the Faculty of Biological Sciences gathered in front of the faculty building around 11:00am demanding Mahbub's resignation.

Around 12:30pm, they moved to the Teacher's Quarter building in Fuller Road area where Mahbub resides.

The protesters went inside the apartment complex. A few of them went to Mahbub's apartment and pushed and banged the door. The teacher was not in his apartment at that time.

After learning about the protest, Mahbub got an office staffer to print a resignation letter from the faculty office

BNP's ties with China to deepen further

Says Fakhrul after talks with Chinese ambassador

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said the party's relationship with China would deepen further in the coming days.

"Our relationship with China will grow stronger, and it will advance in the future based on mutual assurance, trust, and confidence," he said after a meeting with Chinese Ambassador to Bangladesh Yao Wen at the BNP Chairperson's office in Gulshan.

The meeting between BNP leaders and Chinese representatives was held for the first time in nearly 10 years, according to the sources at BNP.

Govt should ensure national reconciliation

Macron writes to Yunus; Abbas seeks Dhaka's continuous support for Palestinians

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

French President Emmanuel Macron has said the interim government led by Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus has an important task of preparing the ground for democratic elections and return to calm and national reconciliation.

"As Bangladesh now enters a period of transition, the interim government you lead will have the important task of preparing the ground for democratic elections and ensuring that a return to calm and national reconciliation can be achieved," he said in a letter to Yunus on Monday.

Members of law enforcement agencies and army raided the office of Hamid Group in Banani early yesterday and recovered Tk 1.05 crore and a pistol.

The drive began at the office in the 13-storey Priyo Prangan Tower on Road-17 around 2:00am ended around noon, police said.

Staffers said four floors of the building are used as the office of Hamid Real Estate Construction Ltd.

The business and the building is owned by the family of former state minister for power, energy, and mineral resources Nasrul Hamid, sources said, adding that one of his brothers look after the business.

Constitutional changes required to prevent return of autocracy

Say student protest organisers at Star roundtable

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Changes in political culture and the constitution are obligatory for building an inclusive and better Bangladesh, said students, who led the mass upsurge.

Nine organisers of the Anti-discrimination Student Movement of different campuses also emphasised equal rights for all citizens, and the need for ensuring political parties are more tolerant and that they practice democratic norms within the party.

They joined a roundtable discussion titled "Vision of the Youth" organised by The Daily Star at its office yesterday.

Most of them want an end to the culture of sycophant students' and teachers' politics but were for students' union elections.

Masud Rana, an organiser from Rajshahi University, said the Awami League government's main fault was suppression of dissenting voices. "If the opposition is strong in a state, the government can also be strong. It is necessary for ensuring transparency and checks and balances," he said.

He said the AL had become family-centric.

"It should not be the culture of any other party. All parties should practice democratic norms," he added.

Nazifa Jannat of East West University said the opposition parties were not able to engage people in their earlier movements.

She said the opposition parties never tried to raise public issues, including the protection of their rights. Rather, the parties only tried to obtain power.

"They are only the other side of the coin. We did not oust one regime to replace it with another," she said.

- Silencing dissent main reason behind AL regime's fall
- Opposition parties failed to address public issues
- Proportional representation is parliament proposed
- Parties must practice democratic norms themselves

Arif Sohel, one of the coordinators and a student of Jahangirnagar University, said, "We made our slogans for the movement based on the proclamation of our independence -- equality, human dignity, and social justice. We hope to build the country based on these values."

3 more cases filed with ICT against Hasina

She also faces 10 fresh cases over killings during protests

STAR REPORT

Three more complaints were filed with the investigation agency of the International Crimes Tribunal yesterday accusing former prime minister Sheikh Hasina of committing crimes against humanity and genocide between July 15 and August 5.

Besides, 10 more cases including nine for murders were filed against Hasina.

The former PM now faces 44 cases, including 35 for murders, seven for crimes against humanity and genocide, one for abduction and one for an attack on a BNP procession.

Two lawyers filed three complaints with the ICT on behalf of the fathers of three students killed during the student protests that led a mass uprising which ousted the Awami League-led government on August 5.

"We registered the complaints, and thus the investigation of all cases have started," Ataur Rahman, deputy director (admin) of the investigation agency, told The Daily Star.

Supreme Court lawyer Hujjatul Islam Khan filed a complaint on behalf of Zakir Hossain, father of Foisal Ahmed Shanta, who was killed on July 16 in the Muradpur area of Panchlaish, Chattogram.

The complaint said the killers acted on the directive of the accused.

Pacers shine but Pakistan recover

Pacers Shoriful Islam and Hasan Mahmud gave Bangladesh a bright start on the opening day of the first Test against Pakistan before the hosts recovered from an early batting collapse at the Rawalpindi Cricket Stadium yesterday.

Undoubtedly, Shoriful and Mahmud stole the limelight, picking up two wickets apiece. However, fifties from Saim Ayub (56) and Saud Shakeel (57 not out) enabled Pakistan to reach 158 for four in 41 overs at stumps.

The day's proceedings saw a delayed start due to overnight rain and a wet outfield, leading to the toss taking place at 2:00 pm local time. After Najmul Hossain Shanto elected to field first with a three-pronged pace attack, the decision paid dividends, aided by some fantastic fielding efforts.

Blinken leaves ME without Gaza truce

Warns Israel, Hamas 'time is of essence'; 50 Palestinians killed in Israeli strikes

AGENCIES

Top US diplomat Antony Blinken headed home yesterday after failing to secure a Gaza ceasefire, warning both Israel and Hamas his plan may be the last chance to avert a broader war.

The US secretary of state appealed to Hamas to urgently accept a US-backed truce proposal, while also entering into a public spat with Israel over its future presence in the Gaza Strip.

"Time is of the essence," Blinken said after stops in key Arab mediators Qatar and Egypt as well as Israel on his ninth tour of the region aiming to halt the more than 10-month offensive.

"With every passing day, more bad things can happen to more good people who don't deserve it," he said before flying out of Doha.

"This needs to get done, and it needs to get done in the days ahead, and we will do everything possible to get it across the finish line," he said of the truce proposal.

The United States has presented ideas to bridge gaps and, through Qatar and Egypt, pressed Hamas to return to talks this week in Cairo.

But a day after Blinken said US ally Israel was on board, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was quoted by Israeli media as disagreeing on a key sticking point.

Netanyahu insisted Israel maintain control of the Philadelphi Corridor, the border between Gaza and Egypt that Israeli forces seized from Hamas, whom Israel says relies on secret tunnels to bring in weapons.

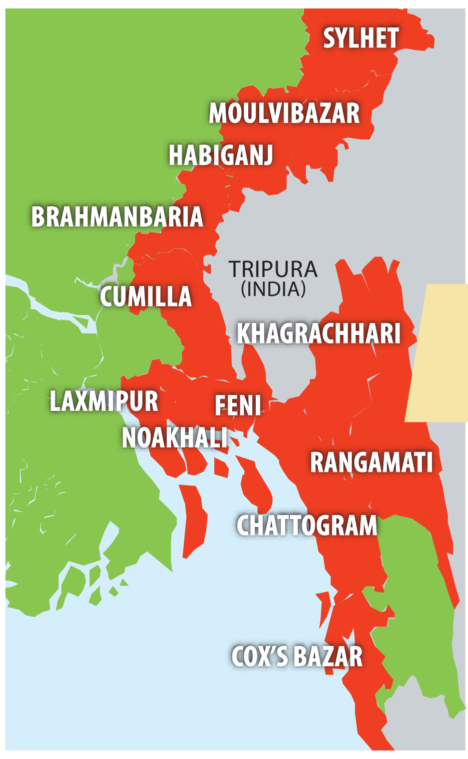
Flash floods wreak havoc in 12 dists

Five killed, 10 go missing as vast areas inundated in Sylhet, Chattogram divisions



FAMILIES affected 5.86 lakh | PEOPLE affected 37 lakh

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Flash floods induced by heavy rains and rush of water from upstream have caught millions of people off guard, giving them no time to evacuate their homes across Chattogram and Sylhet divisions over the last two days.

At least five people drowned and 10 others went missing as rivers burst their banks submerging vast swathes of land.

Railway communications in the two divisions were suspended yesterday and the authorities cancelled 26 trains.

The situation in Cumilla, Noakhali and Feni was particularly worrying as the Muhuri and Feni rivers kept swelling throughout yesterday.

All the major rivers in the northeastern and eastern regions were overflowing.

The other affected districts are Laxmipur, Brahmanbaria, Chattogram, Rangamati, Khagrachhari, Moulvibazar, Habiganj, Sylhet, and Cox's Bazar.

It is likely that there will be less rain today and the level of water will begin to fall tomorrow or the day after tomorrow, according to Sarkar Udoy Raihan, executive engineer at the flood forecasting centre.

NBR seeks bank details of 5 business tycoons

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The National Board of Revenue yesterday asked banks to provide account details of the chiefs of five business giants who benefitted much during the Awami League rule of 15 years to scrutinise their tax compliance.

The revenue authority's Central Intelligence Cell (CIC) sought the details of Salman F Rahman, vice-chairman of Beximco; Nazrul Islam Mazumder, chairman of Nassa Group; Mohammed Aziz Khan, chairman of Summit Group; Ahmed Akbar Khan, chairman of Bashundhara Group; and Mohammad Obaidul Karim, chairman of Orion Group.

The NBR sought information on term deposits, savings accounts, current accounts, loan accounts, foreign currency accounts, credit cards, lockers and vaults owned by the tycoons are their family members beginning July 1, 2015.

In a notice, the tax administration said its CIC has started a special inquiry into the allegation of tax evasion by the persons who made a lot of wealth.

As such, the cell has prepared a list of tax dodgers based on specific information and by analysing media reports.

The move comes days after NBR's two field offices asked banks to provide account details of Chattogram-based businessman Mohammed Saiful Alam, the chairman of S Alam Group, and his family members, and the VAT Commissionerate Chattogram formed four teams to audit the VAT compliance of 18 concerns of S Alam Group.

The NBR said it would detect tax evasion through its special investigation into those who made huge wealth under the Income Tax Act 2023 and the Money Laundering Prevention Act 2012.

The tax detectives also requested the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission, the National Savings Directorate and the other related offices to provide information.

The CIC said its special investigations to hunt tax dodgers will continue.

Prof Golam Murshid passes away

BSS, Dhaka

Prof Golam Murshid, an eminent essayist and researcher, passed away in London yesterday, aged 84.

The Ekushey Padak recipient left behind his wife, a son, a daughter, and many relatives and well-wishers.

Prof Swarachish Sarker from the Institute of Bangladesh Studies at Rajshahi University confirmed the news of his death, citing Golam Murshid's wife, Eliza Murshid.

Born on April 8, 1940, in Barishal, Golam Murshid earned his master's degree in Bangla language and literature from Dhaka University.

He began his career at Bangladesh Agricultural University in Mymensingh before joining the Bangla department at Rajshahi University.

From January 1984 to 2003, he worked for the BBC Bangla Service. He also engaged in teaching and research at various universities, including Melbourne University in London, starting in 1991.

Golam Murshid was awarded the Ekushey Padak in 2021 for his contribution to Bangla language and literature. He had earlier received the Bangla Academy Sahitya Puraskar in 1982. His notable works include Bangla Ganer Itihash, Biddhrohi

Over 500 patients, all of whom were injured during the recent mass uprising, are currently receiving treatment in government and private hospitals according to DGHS. Shot during protests, they now stare at a bleak future

Medical bills burden families of the injured

SHAHEEN MOLLAH and AHMED DEEPTO

Asif Mahmud, a first-year electrical engineering student at Faridpur Polytechnic Institute, will probably never see the world through his own eyes again.

The 19-year-old's eyes were injured by shotgun pellets on July 18, during the anti-discrimination student movement in Narsingdi. On that day, his right eye was fully damaged, while the left one was in a critical condition.

Desperate to restore his eyesight, his family took him to Dhaka Medical College Hospital, National Institute of Opthalmology & Hospital (NIOH), and Bangladesh Eye Hospital.

They spent around Tk 1.5 lakh, but in vain, with doctors still unable to tell whether Asif would ever be able to see again.

Just two days back, on Wednesday, he was released from Bangladesh Eye Hospital and returned home. Now, his family wants to take him to India for better treatment, but bearing the cost has become an immense challenge for them.

Like Asif, family members of numerous others who were injured during recent protests are concerned about bearing treatment costs.

The Daily Star visited three hospitals -- DMCH, NIOH, and National Institute of Traumatology and Orthopaedic Rehabilitation (Nitor) -- in the capital in the last three days and spoke to 27 such families.

While many are struggling to cover the costs of treatment, others are taking loans to bear expenses.

Although treatment and medication at these three hospitals are free, they had to spend a significant amount of money on ambulances and other miscellaneous expenses.

According to Directorate General of Health Services, over 500 patients are currently receiving treatment in government and private hospitals.

Almost all the admitted patients are from low-income families. Some are students, others are from blue-collar working backgrounds, and some are the sole breadwinners from their families.

The interim government on Saturday decided to provide free treatment to those who were injured during the recent protests.

However, while hospital authorities provide certain medicines for free, many other medicines have to be bought from outside, said several family members of the injured.

Doctors also said that many patients need long-term treatment, as they were injured severely.

For instance, take the case of auto-rickshaw driver Shajib Khan. The 28-year-old who is the sole breadwinner of a four-member family, was shot in the right arm on July 19 in Badda. He also suffered wounds from shotgun pellets. Currently, he is admitted to Nitor.

Shajib had to undergo three surgeries, which have left his family with a huge financial burden.

Students protest blaming India for flash floods

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Students from several public universities yesterday staged demonstrations, rallies, and torch processions blaming India for the current flash floods in Bangladesh.

They also demanded fair water-sharing agreements with India.

They said the opening of the Dumbur dam upstream of the Gumti river in Tripura is the reason behind the sudden floods.

The universities include Dhaka University, Jahangirnagar University, Rajshahi University, Islamic University, Barisal University, Shahjalal University of Science and Technology, Begum Rokeya University, Jashore University of Science and Technology, and Dhaka University of Engineering and Technology, among others.

Meanwhile, India yesterday refuted claims of causing floods in Bangladesh.

The flood situation in eastern Bangladesh has not been caused by the release of waters from an Indian dam on the Gumti river in Tripura, said India's Ministry of External Affairs (MEA).

In DU, students of several educational institutions held a torch procession from the TSC around 7:00pm and marched through various roads on the campus.

During the procession, the students chanted slogans directed at India, including "Bharatiya agrashon rukhe darqao jonogon (People, stand against Indian aggression)", alongside other slogans.

In JU, a few hundred students, alongside some teachers, organised a torch procession under the banner of Anti-

LATHITILA RESERVE FOREST

Govt to reassess controversial safari park project

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Sylhet

Despite serious concerns from experts and activists over endangering the pristine biodiversity of Lathitila Reserve Forest in Moulvibazar, the Executive Committee of the National Economic Council in November last year approved a project to build a safari park there.

The project was named 'Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Safari Park, Moulvibazar (1st Phase)'.

However, the Ministry of Environment, Forest and Climate Change under the interim government has decided to scrutinise the plan to build the safari park and formed a four-member committee on Wednesday to assess the impact of the project on the reserve forest's biodiversity.

The committee, headed by former chief conservator of forests Istiaq Uddin Ahmed, will submit its recommendations after assessment.

Other members of the committee are: Dr Mohammed Mostafa Feeroz, professor of Zoology of Jahangirnagar University; Farid Uddin Ahmed, former executive director of Arannayk Foundation; and Imran Ahmed, conservator of forests of the Wildlife and Nature Conservation Circle of the Forest Department.

Lathitila is a 5,141-acre, mostly hilly forest beat of Juri Forest Range under Patharia Hill Reserve. The transboundary forest is linked to the vast forestland of India and has been a reserved forest since 1920 under the Forest Act.

Refusal to renew reg illegal: HC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday ruled in favour of human rights organisation "Odhikar," allowing it to seek renewal of its registration and receive foreign donations.

The court declared the government's previous decision not to renew its registration as illegal.

Odhikar, established in 1994, has been instrumental in documenting cases of enforced disappearances and supporting victims' families. It had applied multiple times since 2014 to the NGO Affairs Bureau for registration renewal but was repeatedly denied.

Odhikar filed a writ petition with the HC in 2022, challenging the Bureau's inaction.

The bench of Justice Naima Haider and Justice Sashanka Shekhar Sarkar delivered the verdict, removing legal barriers for Odhikar's registration and fundraising efforts.

In a related case, the HC yesterday overturned a lower court's verdict that sentenced Odhikar's former Secretary, Adilur Rahman Khan, and current Director, ASM Nasir Uddin Elan, to two years' imprisonment under the ICT Act. The charges stemmed from allegations of publishing a "distorted report and doctored images" about a 2013 police crackdown on a Hefajat-e-Islam rally.

The HC bench of Justice Abdur Rob accepted their appeal, clearing both individuals of all charges.

It is home to 209 species of unique fauna and 603 species of flora, including the northern pig-tailed macaque, hoolock gibbon, otters, Chinese pangolin, Asiatic elephant, fishing cat, and Indian leopard.

In 2020, the project's feasibility study and masterplan were initiated under the vested interest of Shahab Uddin, former minister of environment, forest and climate change, and also lawmaker of Moulvibazar-1 constituency.

The Daily Star on July 3, 2021 published a report titled 'Greens worried as new safari park planned' on the concerns raised for the reserve forest.

The Transparency International, Bangladesh on August 7, 2021, urged the government to revoke the plan. On August 26, a delegation of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association inspected the forest and commented that over 10,000 trees would have to be felled to implement the project.

However, on October 25, 2021, the ministry concerned went on to approve the plan.

Criticising the move, Bangladesh Paribesh Andolon at a roundtable urged the government not to advance with the plan.

On October 18 last year, eminent citizens and activists Sultana Kamal, Shamsul Huda, Khushi Kabir, Dr Iftekharuzzaman, Syeda Rizwana Hasan, Alamgir Kabir and Mokaram Hossain wrote a letter to the government not to approve the project.

The two journalists were arrested at Dhaka airport on Wednesday and later shown arrested in the murder case filed with the police station.

Anowar Hossain Aynal, a decorator, filed the case under Sections 302, 114, and 109 of the Penal Code, accusing 39 named and unnamed individuals, including former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, over the death of his brother Fazlul Karim during anti-government protests in Uttara on August 5.

The case documents show that the duo's names were not listed in the FIR; they were arrested as unnamed suspects.

Ekattor Television terminated Shakil and Farzana on August 8.

Meanwhile, the Bangladeshi Journalists in International Media (BJIM) called on authorities to ensure the protection of Shakil and Farzana, emphasising their right to a fair trial and protection from judicial or police harassment.

"We urge the interim government to affirm its commitment to press freedom, ensuring that all journalists and media outlets can operate without fear of retribution or targeted campaigns stemming from their journalistic pursuits," it said in a statement.

In addition, Reporters Without Borders (RSF) yesterday expressed deep concern over the arrest of the journalist couple.

In a letter to Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus, RSF Director General Thibaut Bruttin urged the interim government to release them immediately and ensure their safety.

JnU students also staged a demonstration early yesterday at the university's main gate.

Students of SUST, Hajee Mohammad Danesh Science and Technology University, Patuakhali Science and Technology University, Bangladesh University of Textiles, and Dhaka College also brought out protest programmes with similar demands in the last two days.

Besides, a seven-member delegation representing a faction of Gono Odhikar Parishad yesterday submitted a six-point message to the Indian High Commission.

The demands include immediate closure of all dams opened towards Bangladesh within 24 hours.

which operates the expressway, told The Daily Star.

He said a very low number of vehicles usually use the ramp. So, one toll both will be enough for the operations.

However, he could not say when the exit ramp at the FDC gate (Karwan Bazar) would be opened as one of the pillars there was torched.

Unidentified arsonists torched the Banani toll booth on July 18 and the Mohakhali toll booth the following day amid the countrywide unrest, causing the suspension of services.

The authorities resumed operations of the expressway, except for the three ramps, from August 11. They resumed manual and limited operations of Banani ramp from August 15.

No bar to publishing

Siddiqua Lina submitted an application before it saying that she would no longer run the petition upon which the HC issued the rule and ad-interim orders at different times.

"All the ad-interim orders passed in connection with the writ petition are hereby recalled (withdrawn) and vacated and the rule is discharged," the bench said.

Barrister Kayser Kamal appeared for Tarique Rahman during the court's proceedings yesterday.

Contacted, Advocate Nashreen Siddiqua Lina refused to make any comment about her decision for not running her petition.

Earlier on January 7, 2017, following the same writ petition, another HC bench ordered the government to immediately take steps to stop publishing and broadcasting Tarique Rahman's statements in media as long as he remains a fugitive.

The bench also issued a rule asking the authorities and the media to explain why publishing Tarique's statements should not be declared illegal.

During hearing of the rule on August 28 last year, the HC bench of Justice Md Khairuzzaman and Justice Md Khairul Alam ordered Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) to immediately "remove or strike down" Tarique Rahman's statements from social media.

Shot during protests

"I have had no income for the last month. We have already spent Tk 45,000 for my treatment, of which we borrowed Tk 30,000. The surgery cost almost nothing, and the hospital is providing medicine. But still, some medicines and injections have to be bought from outside," said Shajib.

"Doctors said I will require another surgery, and another month to recover," he added.

A total of 142 injured protesters, including 47 students, are currently undergoing treatment at Nitor.

Officials at Nitor said 13 people who were shot lost their legs. One person also lost an arm. A total of 642 people were treated at Nitor from July 12 to August 14. So far, five people have died at the hospital after arriving with gunshot injuries.

Mozaffar Hossain, joint director of Nitor, told The Daily Star, "We've formed a committee to identify what kind of support is needed for the injured. Those injured in the anti-discrimination movement, including students, will receive support."

He said the medicines purchased from outside will be adjusted if the bills are submitted to the hospital.

Another patient at the facility, Mohammad Akash, 19, lost his left leg, as doctors had to amputate it.

While talking to The Daily Star, his father Dulal Miah said he was taken to five hospitals after he suffered bullet wounds in Narayanganj.

"Akash worked at a sweet shop. We borrowed Tk 3.5 lakh to send him to Saudi Arabia for work, but now most of that money has already been spent on his treatment. My son has lost his job and his leg, and now the whole family has become financially crippled," said Dulal.

Meanwhile, NIOH data shows that 740 patients received treatment at the hospital from July 17 to July 26 and August 4 to August 16. Of them, 610 were admitted to the hospital.

A total of 495 operations were completed at the hospital. Moreover, 366 people lost their vision in one eye, while 17 lost vision from both eyes.

Currently, 55 people are undergoing treatment at NIOH.

Monirul Islam, a farmer from Magura, suffered pellet wounds in his eye and other parts of his body on August 4 while protesting. He lost his left eye following a surgery at NIOH.

"The surgery and most medicines cost me nothing. But some expensive medicines are not in stock and have to be bought from outside," he said.

"However, I had to bear ambulance costs. Also, my relatives who are looking after me have certain expenses, and the longer I stay, the more they will have to deal with those costs. Doctors said they don't know how long I have to stay," he said.

Selina Khatun, mother of 16-year-old Selim who was shot at Gazipur intersection on August 5, was seen crying at NIOH.

"There is no improvement in my son's eye condition. My son and I are both construction workers. For his treatment, I borrowed Tk 25,000. But still, he hasn't gotten well. Where will I get the money for better treatment?" asked Selina.

She requested the government to send her son abroad for better treatment.

All these OCs earlier remained posted to different police stations in Dhaka for years.

Meanwhile, all the metropolitan commissioners, range deputy inspector generals, major posts in PHQ and different police stations, and superintendents of police in 10 districts have already been transferred. Also, on last Sunday, 63 police officers were promoted to the rank of supernumerary DIG, 10 got regular promotions as DIG, and 30 to the rank of SP.

The major reshuffle in the police force came following the ouster of the Awami League government on August 5.

in the incident have not been arrested yet.

Meanwhile, local journalists in Bagerhat held a protest rally and human chain in front of the district press club around 11:00am yesterday, condemning the recent attacks and vandalism targeting the East-West Media Group and other media houses.

The event was presided over by Bishnu Prasad Chakraborty, vice-president of Bagerhat Press Club and Bagerhat correspondent for the daily Kaler Kantho. Several noted journalists in the district also addressed the event.

Speakers at the event stressed the vital role of media in exposing societal issues and contributing to national development.

They also said the media is not an enemy of the people, rather it serves as a mirror to reflect the flaws in the society.

They called for strict legal action against those responsible for the attacks.

On August 19, miscreants launched an attack on the East West Media Group Complex in Dhaka, which houses Kaler Kantho, Bangladesh Pratidin, Daily Sun, Banglanews24.com, News24 TV, T Sports TV, and Radio Capital.

Vacancy Announcement

Palli Karma-Sahayak Foundation (PKSF), an apex development organization, was established by the Government of Bangladesh in 1990 for sustainable poverty reduction through employment generation. Since its inception, PKSF has been implementing various poverty-alleviating and employment-generating programs and projects through its Partner Organizations (POs) all over the country.

PKSF has been implementing a 5-year-long project titled 'Sustainable Microenterprise and Resilient Transformation (SMART)' jointly financed by the World Bank and PKSF since August 2023. The objective of the project is to increase resource-efficient and resilient green growth of the microenterprises (MEs).

PKSF hereby invites online applications from the eligible candidates for the following post under the SMART project:

Senior Program Manager (Enterprise Development-Footwear and Leather)	01	1,80,000/-

The employee will be recruited initially for one year with the opportunity for annual performance-based renewal during the project period. Interested candidates who fulfill the requirements may submit online applications by 06 September 2024. Please visit the PKSF Website (www.pksf.org.bd) for detailed job descriptions and instructions to apply.

Only shortlisted candidates will be contacted. PKSF is an equal-opportunity employer. Any kind of persuasion will be treated as disqualification of the candidate. PKSF reserves the right to cancel this recruitment process without assigning any reason whatsoever.

*Women are highly encouraged to apply.

Six shot dead in Narsingdi clash

STAR REPORT

A clash between two rival groups left six people shot dead and at least 30 others injured in Raipura upazila of Narsingdi yesterday.

The deceased were identified as: Amir Hossain, 65; Badal Mia, 45; Junayed, 16; Firoza Begum, 35; Anis Mia, 30; and Siddiq Mia, 26.

Nuruddin Jahangir, in-charge of Raipura Upazila Health Complex, said the deceased were brought dead to the hospital at around 10:00am.

He also said several injured persons were referred to Narsingdi Sadar Hospital for better treatment.

Locals said the clash ensued between two groups -- 'Alir Bari', led by Abdul Halim Master, and 'Baluchar Bari', led by Saheb Ali -- in Saidabad village of Srinagar union under the upazila at around 3:00pm on Wednesday and then again yesterday morning.

Tension between the groups have been escalating over the past six months for establishing dominance in the area, with frequent attacks and counter-attacks.

Police were yet to visit the scene till last reported.

Contacted, Safayet Hossain Palash, officer-in-charge of Raipura Police Station, said, "We are waiting for the army. We will only visit the spot with their support due to security concerns."

MURDER, VIOLENCE

Quader among 2,598 sued in 4 districts

STAR REPORT

Cases were filed against 2,598 people, including Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader, over the last two days in four districts in relation to charges of murder and violence.

Of the them, 390 are named and the remaining are unnamed individuals, according to police.

In Faridpur, a murder case was filed against around 400 AL men, including Obaidul Quader, on charges of killing Shamsu Mollah, 62, a bus driver.

The victim's wife Meghla Begum filed the case with Faridpur's Kotwali Police Station on Wednesday night. Obaidul Quader is the sole named accused in the case, said police.

Hours after former prime minister Sheikh Hasina fled from the country on August 5, a group of people attacked the Kotwali Police Station. In retaliation, police opened fire on the attackers. At that time, Shamsu was shot dead.

In Sylhet, a total of six cases were filed in the last two days against around 2,000 people on charges of attacking protesters during the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement between July 23 and August 4.

Of the cases, one was filed with Bishwanath Police Station on Wednesday night, while the five remaining cases were filed yesterday with a court.

A total of 382 people were named accused in the cases, said police.

The named accused include -- former foreign minister AK Abdul Momen, state minister for expatriates' welfare and overseas employment Shafiqur Rahman Chowdhury; lawmakers Shafiul Alam Chowdhury Nadel and Ranjit Chandra Sarker; Sylhet city mayor Anwaruzzaman Chowdhury and SMP commissioner Md Zakir Hossain Khan.

Unnamed accused: 2,208

HIGH PROFILE ACCUSED

Obaidul Quader
Charge: Murder of bus driver

AK Abdul Momen
Charge: Attacking protesters

In Jashore, two cases were filed yesterday against 48 people, including six police officers, on charges of extrajudicial killing of a village doctor named Bajlur Rahman and BNP activist Anisul Islam.

Bazlur's wife Reshma Begum and Anisur's brother Munsur Ali separately filed the cases with the court, said police.

Jashore's former superintendent of police Anisur Rahman, Monirampur Police Station officer-in-charge Mollah Kabir Ahmed, sub-inspectors Tasmeem and Shaheen, among others, were made accused in the case.

Bazlur, a village doctor of Jaipur Bazar under Manirampur upazila, was picked up by police on February 17, 2015, and was shot dead allegedly by police on the same night, according to the case statement.

On the other hand, the same SP, another former OC of the same police station Ali Azam, sub-inspector Heron and former chairman of Monirampur Upazila Parishad Amzad Hossain, among others, were accused in the Anisul Islam murder case.

Anisul was shot dead on March 22, 2013, allegedly by police, according to the case statement.

In Savar, two separate cases have been filed against over 150 unidentified people in connection with the murder of three policemen at Ashulia on August 5.

Wives of two deceased policemen filed the cases with Ashulia Police Station.

In Pirojpur, six people, including former OC of Bhandaria Police Station Ashiquzzaman, were sued over extortion charges.

A local BNP leader filed the case on Wednesday afternoon.

Train passengers protest in Gazipur

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Hundreds of passengers staged a protest on the railway tracks at Gazipur's Joydebpur Junction yesetrday morning after being charged extra for train tickets, leading to a halt in train movement on the Dhaka-Mymensingh route.

Joydebpur Junction Station Master Hanif Ali said, "Due to irregularities at the ticket counter, an excited crowd gathered on the railway line and began protesting around 6:00am."

Protesters claimed that each ticket was overcharged by Tk 5 to Tk 10. The situation escalated when one passenger was overcharged, prompting other passengers to become agitated. This led to a collective protest by all passengers at the junction.

"Efforts are being made to bring the situation under control, but there is still a high level of tension at Joydebpur Junction," Hanif Ali told The Daily Star around 10:00am.

GRAFT, MONEY LAUNDERING

Mosharraf acquitted, Falu secures bail

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday acquitted former Health Minister and BNP Standing Committee member Khandaker Mosharraf Hossain in a case related to laundering over Tk 9.53 crore to the United Kingdom.

Judge Md Abul Kashem of the Special Judge Court-1 of Dhaka delivered the verdict, stating that the prosecution failed to prove the charges against Mosharraf.

Meanwhile, former BNP lawmaker Mosaddek Ali Falu secured bail yesterday in four separate cases, including a money laundering case, after surrendering before three different courts in Dhaka.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Struggle for a secular Bangladesh will persist: ASHFAQUE NIPUN

> Personally, I think it's detrimental when those in power try to influence art, and artistes should resist such influence. Governments often use artistes as mouthpieces because of their widespread acceptance.

SADI MUHAMMAD ALOK and SHARIF M SHAFIQ

When it comes to speaking out against injustice and oppression, there aren't many artistes who stand out as prominently as Ashfaque Nipun. Known for his active presence both online and on the ground, Nipun has been a vocal participant in various protests. His determination was evident during the quota reform movement, which later evolved into the anti-discrimination student movement and led to the dramatic fall of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's regime.

Why is political consciousness important for an artiste, and to what extent?

I believe neither the general public nor artistes can exist outside of politics. Whether you're a creator or a writer, your work reflects the socio-political reality around you.

However, not all artistes possess political consciousness, and I don't believe in imposing it on anyone. If a person's conscience doesn't awaken after witnessing the injustices and oppression around them, no amount of education or knowledge can instill it. It depends on an individual's sensitivity.

For creators, the biggest advantage is that their movies or web-series can reach a large audience. If the work reflects political or socio-economic realities, it resonates more deeply with people, which is exciting for us as creators. That said, there's a distinction between activism and art. If cinema becomes too politically charged, it ceases to be art. Great artistes strike a balance between the two.

How do you view an artiste's political engagement, especially when politics influences art?

Let me clarify: I strongly believe in an artiste's freedom of expression. If someone wants to create propaganda-based cinema, that's their right. The audience will decide whether to accept, reject, or hold the creator accountable for it, and we must allow time to take its course.

If someone chooses to make a film against oppressive forces, they also have that freedom. However, they must be prepared to face the risks and accountability that come with it. Similarly, those who create propaganda-based cinema must accept the consequences if their work doesn't stand the test of time.

Personally, I think it's detrimental when those in power try to influence art, and artistes should resist such influence. This has happened not only during the former government's regime but also before. Governments often use artistes as mouthpieces because of their widespread acceptance.

Recent events show how the audience has discarded those who were comfortable during the previous government's tenure and who were associated with government propaganda. These artistes must now take accountability for their actions.

How do you perceive 'Mohanagar' as a viewer?

It's challenging for me to comment on Mohanagar purely as a viewer since I created the plot and characters.

This work addresses issues like police and state-sponsored oppression. As a creator, my goal was to bring these topics to light. Instead of analysing it from a viewer's perspective, I think it's more important to consider how the audience has related to it. People are interpreting Mohanagar in a certain way now, but their perceptions might change over the next 10 years. Ultimately, we must leave it to time.

We've heard about harassment related to works like 'Mohanagar'. Did any actors or artistes hesitate to join the project when you pitched the web-series?

When discussing the story, no one refused to work on it. I was able to make it with everyone I had initially thought of. The same goes for Mohanagar 2. In this regard, I am very fortunate. From the actors to the producers and the entire cast and crew, everyone worked diligently on the production.

However, it wasn't just me; the actors also faced harassment for their involvement in Mohanagar. Yet, none of them refused to work on the sequel. Instead, everyone worked with even greater passion. The OTT platform associated with the project also fully supported us.

The iconic character of OC Harun in 'Mohanagar' was played by Mosharraf Karim. What made you think of him for this role?

When I first conceived the story of Mohanagar, I couldn't imagine anyone else for the role of OC Harun other than Mosharraf Karim. This character is not a simple one; there's a duality in him. He might say one thing but think another. OC Harun is neither rigid nor plain and boring; he has a great sense of humour. Overall, I felt no one else would be more suitable for the role.

After the student-led mass uprising, we now have a new form of Bangladesh, and state reform is underway. Do you think there might be communal pressure on art in the future?

As artistes, we have always spoken for a secular Bangladesh. The threat of communalism has been present for over 50 years. Regardless of which government comes into power, this struggle for a non-communal Bangladesh has always been there. We've seen the rise of JMB in 2001 and the attack on Chhayanaut. But we fought back, and this struggle will never end; it will always persist.

There's been discussion and criticism about artistes taking sides in movements. Some are accused of being opportunistic, speaking out in favour only after the determined fact. How do you view this?

This can be seen in two ways. First, someone might have been a beneficiary of the government before, but after witnessing the overall situation, their conscience may have awakened. Seeing the atrocities, they might no longer hold their previous position. Secondly, when they see the situation changing, they quickly jump off the boat and try to reach the shore.

People look up to the artiste community. Many are influenced and inspired by them. I would say the audience needs to understand which artistes speak for the people and which speak for power. The audience will decide this, and the youth understand it too. Where an artiste should speak for the masses but instead speak for power, the audience will reject them. This has become even clearer in this movement.

You can't fool people. The people of this country weren't waiting for an artiste's call to take to the streets. They went out on their own without waiting for a call from their favourite artiste or idol. From this, the artiste community should learn that if you stand with the people, they will stand with you; otherwise, they will cast you aside.

the identities of its administrators, and those responsible for establishing them.

In a press release, the NHRC yesterday said that The Daily Star's August 21 report titled "Inside the Aynaghar," along with similar reports from various media outlets, has drawn its attention.

The NHRC expressed serious concerns and has taken suo moto (self-initiated) action, calling for comprehensive information about the Aynaghar.

According to the reports, these secret detention cells held victims of enforced disappearance for days, months and even years in inhuman conditions during Sheikh Hasina's 16-year regime. These facilities are notorious for their complete isolation, with detainees unable to see any light from the outside world.

The NHRC requested the senior secretary of the Ministry of Home Affairs to provide details regarding the current status of the Aynaghar, its administrators, the identities and numbers of those detained, the legal grounds for their detention, and those responsible for establishing the cells, according to the press release.

The deadline for submitting the report has been set for September 25.

"In a democratic state, the physical and mental torture inflicted over the years in the 'Aynaghar' is seen by the Commission as a severe violation of both constitutional and legal norms, as well as human rights. The damage caused to detainees due to indefinite detention is irreparable, and they are entitled to compensation," the NHRC said.

The notice states that the commission can only request reports from the government concerning allegations of disappearances or abductions by law enforcement agencies, whether initiated suo moto or based on complaints.

Due to the limitations of Section 18 of the National Human Rights Commission Act, 2009, the Commission cannot conduct its own investigations and must rely on government reports, which can sometimes take years to receive, it said.

The commission believes that this legal limitation leaves it in a helpless position and requires urgent reform.

millions of taka by showing fake expenses in various sectors. Shahab also took bribes between Tk 80 lakh and Tk 90 lakh for transferring each forest officer, the complaint said.

He issued DoE certificates to various factories that pollute the environment with liquid waste and did not have the factories' effluent treatment plants inspected.

The documents said he took Tk 7 crore to sign a resolution of land which forced the then chairman of Bangladesh Forest Industries Development Corporation (BFDIC) to hand over a piece of land to the Climate Change Trust.

Shaon, former lawmaker from Bhola-3, is alleged to have amassed illegal wealth by misusing his power.

According to the complaint, he misappropriated funds from various projects in Lalmohan and Tazumuddin upazilas in 2021-2022 fiscal year. He embezzled Tk 6 crore, 260.39 tonnes of wheat, and 234.33 tonnes of rice allocated for Kabikha (Food for Work) and Kabita (Money for Work) programmes.

The anti-graft body also decided to investigate corruption allegations against former state ministers Nasrul and Palak.

TRAVEL BAN

The ACC yesterday sought travel bans on Harun or Rashid, former DB chief (Dhaka Metropolitan Police), and his wife Shireen Akter. The ACC wrote to the Special Branch of police to this end.

The decision came after the anti-graft body decided to probe allegations against him of acquiring crores of taka through various irregularities.

Meanwhile, a Dhaka court yesterday issued a 60-day travel ban on Taqsem A Khan, the former managing director of Dhaka Wasa, in connection with graft allegations brought against him.

ACC Public Prosecutor Mahmud Hossain Jahangir moved the petition.

In the application, Jahangir said Taqsem was trying to flee the country. So, a travel ban is needed to prevent him from leaving the country.

UN team arrives in Dhaka affairs, and the inspector general of police, said diplomatic sources.

"The purpose of this visit is to understand their priorities for assistance in promoting human rights," said UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in a statement.

Based on the discussions, the UN will sign an agreement with the interim government on the framework for investigation, according to a UN official.

This visit, which is taking place in response to a request from the interim government, will focus on discussing the process for investigating human rights violations in light of the recent violence and unrest, the statement said.

Once the details are finalised, a separate fact-finding team will be dispatched in the coming weeks to conduct the investigation, it added.

"They will talk to the victims, review videos of rights violation, talk to the government officials, witnesses and whoever they need," the UN official said.

The mission will need six to eight weeks for the investigation and then it will submit a report, including recommendations for reforming security sector.

According to a primary UN report published on August 16, 650 people were killed in Bangladesh between July 16 and August 11 during the student-led protests and after the fall of the Awami League regime on August 5.

The reported death toll is likely an underestimation, as information collection has been hindered by restrictions on movement due to the curfew and the internet shutdown, it said.

The UN said the number of reported killings in revenge attacks since August 5 still remains to be determined. Those killed include protesters, bystanders, journalists covering the events and a number of members of the security forces.

to Bangladesh, choosing anonymity, told this newspaper that regardless of the law, the decision on whether or not Hasina will be extradited will ultimately be a "political call".

"The question to be answered is how strong are economic linkages between India and Bangladesh are, which will ensure that Hasina does not hang like an albatross by the neck of bilateral ties for the bigger interests of both countries," the career diplomat said.

Professor Sreeradha Dutta, a professor of international affairs at the OP Jindal Global University in India who has a long track record of research on Bangladeshi democracy, said that extradition will neither be an easy nor a quick process.

"Bangladesh can request extradition, but I believe it will become a long-drawn judicial process. Even if Bangladesh revokes her passport, that might have no implication for India. India will question the decision and its legitimacy," said Professor Dutta.

"Since a government politically opposed to Sheikh Hasina is the one prosecuting her, it might be perceived that she is fleeing political persecution and a threat to life. We have a history of looking after our friends," she added.

Another Indian diplomat who had worked in Dhaka in the 1990s said the dilemma for India is that while it needs to maintain ties with whoever holds the reins of power in Bangladesh, at the same time it should not be seen as abandoning a long-standing friend like Hasina.

There are enough linkages between the economies of Bangladesh and India to guard against any tectonic shift in the relations between the two countries, he added.

Foreign Affairs Adviser Mohammad Touhid, in an interview with Reuters on August 16, said if the country's home and law ministries decide, "we have to ask for her ... return to Bangladesh".

Responding to a question about the status of Hasina's stay in India, India's External Affairs Ministry Spokesperson, Randhir Jaiswal, told a media briefing on August 16 that her entry into India was granted on short notice.

"Extradition and other such issues are consular matters that are discussed regularly at the consular level. I will update you on any new developments regarding this matter," he said.

INDIA'S HISTORY OF GRANTING ASYLUM

Sheikh Hasina had previously sought and obtained political asylum from India in 1975 after the assassination of her father Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman on August 15. Hasina and Rehana escaped the bloodshed as they were in then-West Germany.

Before being granted political asylum, they had taken refuge in the home of Bangladesh's ambassador to West Germany. Hasina returned to Dhaka on May 17, 1981, from India.

India is not a signatory to the 1951 Refugee Convention or its 1967 Protocol.

But India has given shelter to many Pakistani refugees since 1947, while a huge number of refugees from Tibet came to India when Dalai Lama and his followers were being persecuted by Chinese authorities in 1959.

Many Bangladeshi refugees settled in Kolkata during the Liberation War in 1971, while many Tamil refugees from Sri Lanka settled in Tamil Nadu in 1980.

In 2022, Rohingya refugees from Myanmar fled to India, and India has been providing shelter to many, although without any strategy for refugees.

According to BBC Bangla reports, in 1975, Krishak Sramik Janata League President Abdul Kader Siddique took political shelter in India, while in 1959 the Indian government provided asylum to Dalai Lama and his followers.

Mohammad Najibullah Ahmadzai, former president of Afghanistan, had to resign in 1992 and sought asylum in India, which was promptly granted.

In 2013, former Maldivian president Mohamed Nasheed was granted political refuge in the Indian High Commission in Male, while the former king of Nepal, Maharaja Tribhuvan Bir Bikram Shah, along with his family members, took refuge status in India in 1950.

HASINA'S EXIT NOT ONE-OFF

Before thousands of people stormed her official residence, Hasina was flown to Hindon Airbase in Ghaziabad by a military aircraft on August 5.

At the time, she was no longer the prime minister of Bangladesh, as per the statements of Army Chief General Waker Uz Zaman, who announced to the nation that Hasina had resigned prior to her departure.

After landing at Hindon airbase, Hasina was transported to a safe house of paramilitary provided by the Indian government in Noida, Uttarakhand province, at an unspecified date, according to sources.

The nature of Hasina's departure was not unique; other heads of state have recently set similar precedents in neighbouring countries.

The events that transpired in Bangladesh on August 5 bore striking similarities to those that occurred in Sri Lanka in July 2022 when former president Gotabaya Rajapaksa and prime minister Mahinda Rajapaksa were ousted following a mass movement.

After his fall, Gotabaya Rajapaksa, his wife, and two bodyguards fled to the Maldives by a military jet, and then he reportedly flew to Singapore.

The former Thailand prime minister Thaksin Shinawatra was ousted by a military coup in 2006 and exiled to Dubai for 15 years, dodging an eight-year prison sentence for corruption and abuse of power.

He returned to Bangkok for the first time in 15 years in August 2023 and was taken into custody and sentenced by the Supreme Court to eight years in prison. His eight-year sentence was later commuted to a year by King Maha Vajiralongkorn in September last year. Thaksin Shinawatra received a royal pardon last week after his daughter, Paetongtarn Shinawatra, 37, was elected as Thailand's prime minister.

55 govts use travel curbs on critics

Says report

AFP, Washington

At least 55 governments around the world are using travel restrictions as part of their repressive tactics against perceived political opponents, according to a report released yesterday.

Revoking citizenship, imposing travel bans, confiscating passports and denying consular services are among the methods used by authoritarian regimes to restrict the freedom of movement of people seen as a threat, according to Freedom House.

The report was compiled in part based on interviews with 31 people from Belarus, India, Nicaragua, Rwanda and Saudi Arabia who "experienced mobility controls firsthand."

The governments use at least one of these four methods in retribution for political activism or dissent, the US nonprofit dedicated to promoting democracy said.

Afghanistan's Taliban govt enacts 'vice and virtue' law

AFP, Kabul

Afghanistan's Taliban authorities have announced the codification of laws detailing rules of behaviour and lifestyle based on their strict interpretation of Islamic law.

The 35-article law published in the official gazette on July 31 establishes prohibitions already generally known in the Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan, but its enactment could allow for increased control of the population.

The justice ministry announced on its website on Wednesday that the law had been approved by the Taliban's supreme leader, the reclusive Hibatullah Akhundzada, who rules by decree from the southern city of Kandahar.

The white-coat wearing personnel of the Ministry for the Propagation of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice in charge of enforcing the law have been fixtures of Afghan streets since the Taliban swept to power in 2021.

Rescuers from Tripura Disaster Management Authority evacuate flood-affected people to a safer place following heavy rains at a village on the outskirts of Agartala, India yesterday. At least 10 people were killed after heavy rainfall in Agartala led to floods due to overflowing Gomati River, with over 34,000 persons being displaced, officials said.

Second aircraft carrier arrives in Middle East

Says US military amid fears of regional conflict; China urges citizens in Lebanon to leave 'as soon as possible'

AFP, Washington

The USS Abraham Lincoln aircraft carrier and accompanying destroyers have arrived in the Middle East, the US military said later on Wednesday, after the country's defense secretary ordered the strike group to accelerate its speed.

The carrier's arrival brings the number in the region to two -- at least temporarily, as the Lincoln is to replace the USS Theodore Roosevelt -- at a time of heightened fears of regional conflict following high-profile assassinations claimed by, or blamed on, Israel.

"USS Abraham Lincoln (CVN 72), equipped with F-35C and F/A-18 Block III fighters, entered the US Central Command (USCENTCOM) area of responsibility," the military command responsible for the Middle East said on social media.

"The USS Abraham Lincoln (CVN 72), the flagship of Carrier Strike Group 3, is accompanied by Destroyer Squadron (DESRON) 21 and Carrier Air Wing (CVW) 9," it added.

The Pentagon said on August 11 that US Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin had ordered the Lincoln to "accelerate its transit" to the Middle East, after directing its deployment to the region at the beginning of the month.

Fears of a major escalation have mounted since Hezbollah and Iran vowed to respond to twin killings blamed on Israel late last month.

An Israeli strike on Beirut's southern suburbs killed a top Hezbollah commander, Fuad Shukr, shortly before an attack in Tehran blamed on Israel killed Hamas political leader Ismail Haniyeh.

Meanwhile, China yesterday urged its citizens in Lebanon to leave "as soon as possible", according to an embassy statement.

"Recently, the situation on the Lebanese-Israeli border has continued to be tense, and security circumstances in Lebanon are severe and complex," China's embassy in Beirut said.

Assam plans law for Muslim marriages, divorces

AFP, Guwahati

Indian authorities in Assam state have introduced a bill that would require Muslims to register their marriages and divorces, with the chief minister claiming the measure will help stop child marriage.

The bill is seen as a state-level step towards the government's proposed common civil code of law, which is bitterly opposed by Muslim activists as an attack on their faith.

India's 1.4 billion people are subject to a common criminal law, but personal matters such as marriage, divorce and inheritance are governed by varying rules based on traditions of different faiths.

In Assam, it is already mandatory for other religions to register marriages with civil authorities.

Assam's state government, led by Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), said the bill would be tabled during the next state assembly.

Cases against Hasina so far cross 50 minister Asaduzzaman Khan, former AL MPs Md Saiful Islam and Talukdar Mohammad Towhid Jung Murad, and former police chief Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun were among the accused.

Uttara West resident Zakiullah Bahar, 56, filed another case against Hasina and 32 others over the death of 12th grader Abdullah Bin Jahid in the Airport area on August 5.

Metropolitan Magistrate Mainul Islam ordered the Airport Police Station chief to register it as an FIR.

The third case in the capital was filed by Mohammadpur resident Rabiul Khan Hillol against Hasina and 67 others over the killing of Shahriar Hossain Rokon, 23, on July 19.

Metropolitan Magistrate Rajesh Chowdhury ordered Mohammadpur Police Station to investigate the case.

Another murder case against Hasina and 78 named accused and 450 to 500 unnamed people was filed at Mohammadpur Police Station in connection with the killing of a truck driver in the Beribadh area under Mohammadpur in the capital on July 20.

Meanwhile, a murder case against Hasina and 147 others in Dhaka yesterday was filed at Adabor Police Station. The victim, a garment factory worker, was shot on August 5 and died two days later.

In Narsingdi, a case was filed against Hasina, Quader, Asaduzzaman, Mamun and 78 others over the killing of businessman Azizul Islam during the student-led movement on July 19.

The Chief Judicial Magistrate's Court directed the local police chief to register it as an FIR after recording the statement of the plaintiff and victim's father Almach Mia.

Hasina, her sister Sheikh Rehana, son Sajeeb Wazed Joy, daughter Saima Wazed Putul and 76 others were sued over the abduction and killing of a union-level BNP leader named Shah Alam Sujan in Bogura's Shibganj upazila in 2018.

Advocate Abdul Wahab, also the general secretary of upazila unit BNP, filed the case with a Bogura court which directed local police to investigate it.

The other accused include Hasina's former press secretary Nayeemul Islam Khan, Ekattor TV Managing Director and Editor-in-Chief Mozammel Babu, its former principal correspondent Farzana Rupa, and ex-IGP Benazir Ahmed.

Flood victims need urgent support

Govt must intensity efforts to save lives, reach out to those most at risk

We're worried about the worsening flood situation in the eastern and southeastern regions of Bangladesh where vast swathes of land have been submerged over the last few days, laying bare the vulnerability of even areas previously deemed protected from large-scale flooding. The floods, submerging 357 unions across eight districts as of Thursday afternoon, left more than 4.4 lakh families stranded and a total of three million affected, as per an estimate. Moreover, at least three people died and two went missing on Thursday. These numbers are set to rise should the downpours and swelling of rivers by the onrush of water from India continue. Against this backdrop, the urgency of improved, coordinated response to ensure the safety of flood-hit communities cannot be overstated.

Among the eight districts affected, the situation in Feni, Cumilla, Noakhali, Chattogram, Khagrachari, and Moulvibazar is particularly distressing. The situation in Feni—especially in Chhagalnaiya, Phulgazi, and Parshuram upazilas—has been described as unprecedented, with nearly every house inundated. This has caused a massive humanitarian crisis. The municipal towns are unrecognisable under the deluge. Roads remain impassable, and the call for speedboats and helicopters to expedite rescue efforts has gone largely unanswered. While the interim government is doing the best it can, ongoing aid and rescue efforts have caused frustration among local residents.

In Khagrachari, the situation has been equally troubling. Continuous rain and runoff from the hills have submerged over 100 villages across the nine sub-districts of Khagrachari, making this the worst flood recorded since 1988. In this and other hilly districts of Chattogram, there is the added risk of widespread landslides. Many fear that deadly landslides similar to those in 2017 may occur, with people living on the hillsides or slopes being urged to relocate to safer areas or shelters. The inadequacy of shelters and relief efforts, exacerbated by the difficulty of reaching remote areas, has emerged as another concern in flood-hit areas. Equally troubling has been the disruption in communications and power supply—with several areas entirely disconnected—further isolating the vulnerable populations.

Amid this situation, one development with the potential for a flare-up in Bangladesh-India relations has been the release of waters from an Indian dam likely intensifying flooding in Bangladesh. Although India's ministry of external affairs refuted claims of causing the flooding on our eastern borders, Bangladesh's information adviser has categorically blamed it for opening the dam without any prior warning, depriving Bangladesh of the chance to prepare accordingly. The sheer intensity of flooding in areas like Cumilla and Feni does lend credence to the allegation of dam-barrage opening on India's part. India's water sharing policy has long caused consternations in Bangladesh, and we hope the latest development serves as a clarion call for equitable water-sharing arrangements to be made urgently.

Experts say the situation may improve within two-three days, but until then the dual assaults of heavy rain and onrush of water from India will likely cause further damage. So we urge the government, security forces on duty, and all public representatives including student volunteers to further intensity their efforts to help the affected communities. We must all stand together to ensure that they receive the aid and support they so desperately need. Communications and power supply in the flood-hit areas must also be restored urgently.

Stop extortion in transport sector

Bringing discipline in this vital sector is paramount

It is disturbing to know that soon after the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government on August 5, BNP-affiliated transport leaders have emerged on the scene and taken control of major transport organisations across the country. According to a Prothom Alo report, the offices of Dhaka Road Transport Owners' Association and Bangladesh Road Transport Owners' Association, from where the transport sector used to be controlled by Awami League leaders, are now under the control of their BNP counterparts. Similarly, BNP men have taken control of almost all other transport organisations, bus terminals, and workers' unions.

Understandably, the main objective behind their push is to get their hands on extortion money. Reportedly, every year, around Tk 2,000 crore is collected by the transport owners' and workers' associations through extortion across the country. While about Tk 70 is collected openly from each bus or truck every day, there are various other fees, including "gate pass" fees or membership fees, that are collected from transport operators as daily, monthly, and sometimes one-time donations. According to a Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) study published in March, politically connected individuals or groups, traffic and highway police, Bangladesh Road Transport Authority (BRTA) officials, transport organisations, and staffers of municipalities or city corporations all get a share of this money, which shows how pervasive this culture of extortion has been.

Unfortunately, the transport sector is just one example where BNP-linked men are taking control of important public sectors. After the fall of Awami League, we have seen how BNP-affiliated people have been trying to assert their control in every other sector, such as the health sector. Recently, we have also seen how groups claiming allegiance to the BNP have been trying to take control of slums and footpaths in the city. This tendency must stop urgently.

Extortion is one of the key reasons for the chaos and lawlessness in the transport sector, so the interim government must find a sustainable solution to this problem. The transport organisations, including powerful owners' and workers' associations, must be represented by honest individuals who can save this sector from the crippling influences of corruption and irregularities, which have led to our roads becoming one of the most dangerous in the world. Reform of state institutions was a major goal of the student-led mass movement; and to attain that goal, politicisation of vital public sectors including transport must stop.

Strengthen the chief adviser's hands

Some actions are having contrary effects

MAHFUZ ANAM

Honestly, we had all lost hope about democracy, rule of law, good governance, accountability of public institutions, corporate governance, integrity in the leadership, free media, etc in Bangladesh. The only way forward was sycophancy and corruption. Options were "lick or fill," meaning either lick their feet or fill their pocket.

Students and citizens together have totally and unbelievably changed the scenario. They have forcibly opened all the doors that were firmly shut but for the lackeys. Suddenly, we are able to breathe again and dream again. But dreams are just as beautiful as they are fragile. Events are taking place that are likely to make the fulfilment of our dreams more difficult than they ought to be. There are occurrences that are unnecessarily raising questions about the interim government and creating doubts about its efficacy. These are happening both within the system and outside.

We start with the police. If any state institution contributed to bringing down the old regime, it was police. They were used by the then ruling Awami League as its own extension, but they later became a Frankenstein and implemented their own agenda. As the saying goes, "Old habits die hard," so now that the police are operating under the new regime, they are doing so in the very same way that they did before: abuse the law in implementing it.

Two journalists, former employees of Ekattor TV—not the best example of objective journalism—were picked up at the airport, handed over to the Detective Branch (DB) of police, and later charged with murder and placed on remand for four days. What law did they break? A murder charge? Their names were not in the original FIR, but were included later under the category of "unknown" miscreants (a most dangerous practice and one that should be scrapped immediately. Police can always add new names as investigation reveals). Even if they were big supporters of the discredited regime, they did not break any established law. The way to handle them is to criticise their journalism and expose their partisanship, but they cannot be jailed without specific charges of breaking the law.

Vandalising media establishments, TV stations—the latest incident occurring at the East West Media Group—deserve our condemnation. The policies of these establishments may have been unethical, one-sided and devoted to serving the fallen government, but their voices still cannot be forcibly shut. However blatant and unethical their journalism may have been, they cannot be subjected to physical attacks, arrests and intimidation.

The East West Media Group's office in Bashundhara Residential Area, Dhaka was attacked on August 19, 2024. PHOTO: COLLECTED

These actions are creating fear among journalists, raising the question as to whether we are returning to the old ways with the victims changing—instead of pro-BNP journalists, the victims are now the pro-Awami League journalists. We must not repeat past mistakes.

Then there was the incident at the court premises where former AL minister Dipu Moni was not protected by the police sufficiently to prevent pro-BNP lawyers from assaulting her. Police cannot avoid responsibility for this failure. But also, these partisan lawyers broke their own professional ethics and denigrated the court and their own profession.

We find it very worrying, the way murder charges are being slapped on former ministers, AL leaders, MPs, former judges, scholars, lawyers and, as mentioned above, on journalists without any proof. The approach seems to be "charge first, prove later." Too many murder cases are piling up against the former PM, which is already giving it an air of witch hunt. The more cases pile up, the less will be its credibility. A few well-founded cases that are supported by strong evidence is good enough to hold the former PM to account. But the way it is happening is already raising questions. What we are seeing is that cases are being filed with courts against the former prime minister, some AL leaders, some judges, lawyers, scholars—persons like Muntassir Mamoon, Shahriar Kabir, former Justice Enayetur Rahim, politicians Hasanul Huq Inu, and Rashed Khan Menon (who was arrested last night). Many cases include 30, 40 or up to 120 names. All those on the list are being charged with murder with no specific evidence. The court then sends these cases to local police stations to be recorded. Then, randomly some people are arrested and others not. Such use of the legal process and filing cases for murder without any evidence are misuses of the law, which will only corrode public trust in the legal process and on the present dispensation.

We want to make the point that, like the former regime, such weaponisation of the legal system makes us feel that we are facing the same abuse of law as before. Many of the arrested ministers are being charged with murder instead of the crimes they are most likely to be found guilty of—abuse of power, financial sector crimes, bribery, corruption, banking fraud. Each time such murder cases are being filed, the legal process is coming under question.

Our law adviser has written volumes criticising such laws and practices. We expect him to remove such misuse of laws and ensure more credibility for the whole process.

Then there are other types of events that are increasing our worry about mob rule and people taking up law in their own hands. We really need to think about some of the incidents that have happened recently: i) forcibly entering the Secretariat and compelling the cancellation of remaining HSC exams; ii) forcing the interim government to grant promotions in bureaucracy and various government bodies; iii) forcing the removal of teachers from various posts in different campuses; iv) forcing the interim government to change appointments and dictating choices; and v) political parties competing to occupy critical posts in this transition period.

All the facts mentioned above are of great embarrassment to the interim government, and they are, however moderately, eroding public confidence. Part of what's happening can be accepted as unavoidable. When a powerful and long-standing government suddenly falls, there is a power vacuum, and both those with genuine grievances and the opportunists who try to take advantage of the power shift create situations like the ones mentioned above. Every day, there are demonstrations in front of the Chief Adviser's Office with endless demands, which are mostly self-serving rather than of national interest.

Prof Yunus's government is here only because of the love and respect he enjoys from the people, and especially from the students who spearheaded the latest uprising. They toppled the Sheikh Hasina government and opened up a whole world of possibilities. It's these possibilities that we must all work to try to bring to fruition. We are standing at the doorstep of a new Bangladesh. But we are also standing on very slippery grounds. It is slippery because we are a divided lot at the moment with the cronies of the old regime, power-hungry opportunists, and vested groups—especially those who looted the state coffers and our banks—waiting for a chance to subvert the interim government. This along with many of the advisers lacking experience in the governance process make the slippery grounds even more so.

As Prof Yunus said, let us not take a wrong step and miss the opportunity. In some cases, we seem to be doing so.

To protect free speech, get rid of oppressive laws

SINHA IBNA HUMAYUN

The Cyber Security Act (CSA), 2023 is widely accepted as a draconian spin-off of the Digital Security Act (DSA), 2018. Hastily passed a few months before the Parliamentary Election of 2024, the CSA carries the same repressive watermarks of the DSA, which was also passed just before an election. The purpose of this law is widely recognised as suppressing the free press and freedom of speech. As a nation in transition, Bangladesh must repeal the CSA to safeguard the rights of its citizens.

All but the most loyal supporters of the Awami League would agree that during its reign, Bangladesh suffered a massive decline in freedom of speech. The World Press Freedom Index ranked Bangladesh 165th out of 180 countries in the 2024 report, placing it at the bottom among South Asian nations, only above Afghanistan. While many factors contributed to this decline, one of the main suppression tools was the CSA and its predecessor.

National and international media, activists, and legal experts strongly opposed non-bailable offenses which existed in the DSA. Unfortunately, the same spirit continued in the CSA, as any offence booked under sections 17, 19, 27 and 33 of the act were declared to be non-bailable.

Section 4 of this act restricted the possibility of anyone criticising the government, even outside of Bangladesh. Unilateral power is given to the Director General of National Cyber Security Agency in section 4, to remove or block any content with the assistance of BTRC.

Section 21 outlines a five-year jail term and/or a Tk one crore fine for any statement, conspiracy, or negative criticism against the Liberation War, the father of the nation, the national anthem, and the national flag, allowing law enforcement to package any form of criticism against the government as anti-state or anti-government and prosecute ruthlessly. Section 25 further doubles down on so-called conspiracies to spread propaganda and falsehoods that affect the image and reputation of the country. The wording of this clause was purposefully kept vague to allow arbitrary interpretation.

Section 42 grants police absolute authority to search bodies, places, confiscate, and arrest without showing any cause or warrant. The former ruling government has been heavily criticised for using this clause as a major fear tactic. Many journalists have refrained from saying or writing anything against the government out of fear of police harassment and brutality.

The extent to which the CSA strangled rights and voices is astonishing and disproportionate. When the law of the land allows accused individuals to get bail for serious offenses, such as loan default, cheque fraud, and land grabbing, how can authorities detain someone without bail for something as harmless as a Facebook post? This law intentionally targets journalists, netizens, and ordinary citizens, tarnishing freedom of speech, expression, and investigative journalism. No authority, either private or public, should be allowed such unchecked power to search, detain, or punish people.

Although the previous regime is gone, the law remains in force, and many of its victims are still behind bars. Between October 2018 and September 2023, 4,520 people were charged in 1,436 cases. The Centre for Governance Studies (CGS) traced identities of the accusers in 859 cases and found that the former ruling party activists filed 263 of them, suing 887 people.

Victims who have been unjustly detained, tried, and convicted should be immediately released. Independent judicial investigation should be conducted and personnel who were involved in framing innocent citizens must face the law.

The CSA must be repealed, and the interim government must form an impartial committee consisting of legal experts, journalists, cyber security experts, and activists to draft a new act. The new act should only focus on cybercrimes such as fraud, theft, hacking, or any action that compromises national cyber security. Any online activities of anti-state or anti-national nature can always be addressed under penal code and other existing laws. Speech, online activism, and all forms of journalistic and creative expression must be excluded from the scope of the future cyber law.

For the first time in many years, there is an environment where publishing an article or a Facebook status doesn't make us feel scared. Online news portals are posting materials and incriminating evidence that were practically impossible just a few weeks ago. Television and print media have also come out of their shells, deviating from their once established party lines. These are steps in the right direction, but the fruits of freedom should not appear circumstantial in the long term; they should be structural.

Years of faulty laws have strangled citizens' voices, to an extent that self-censorship has become our second skin. The youth of the country have obviously spoken, and leveraging on that, the existing legal system should be modified so that the common Bangladeshi can speak freely, too. We must dispel the oppressive legal instruments of the past and enact better laws, so that future governments cannot senselessly prosecute its own citizens, much like the last one did.

'It's been most challenging to reach those marooned in Feni'

Syeda Rizwana Hasan, adviser to the Ministry of Environment, Forests and Climate Change, discusses the severity of the floods, challenges of rescue efforts in Feni and next steps of the interim government in addressing this unexpected national crisis in an interview with Sushmita S Preetha of The Daily Star.*

Flooding has taken a dire turn in the country within a very short time. Feni, in particular, has not faced such a critical situation in living memory. What's the latest update from the ground?

We are hearing the same thing on the ground. There has been flooding in Feni before, but never to such an extent. Feni locals are not used to such terrible flash floods, neither are government and non-government authorities. Now we are hearing that water is coming into the city as well, which is a matter of great concern. The most challenging aspect has been reaching remote areas and carrying out rescue operations. On Wednesday night, there was no electricity or mobile network, so the rescue mission became very difficult. We could not restore electricity as there was the risk of electrocution. Most of the rescue operation has to be conducted during the day, so the situation really is severe in those areas.

What immediate measures are the interim government taking to help the affected communities?

There is enough relief to provide immediate support, as per government data. But the real issue, as I said before, is accessing the affected people. One of the demands coming out of the flood-affected areas has been to use helicopters to rescue those who are marooned, but we are not able to do so because the weather is still quite treacherous, so helicopters still cannot reach those areas. There is also a demand that helicopters be used to provide relief; even that is not possible at the moment because 1) there is too much water, and 2) when you drop relief from a helicopter, people rush towards it and there is a risk of loss of life, which we must avoid. Right now, we are taking urgent measures to rescue people; the Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority (BIWTA) is sending boats, the army is there, a lot of volunteers are working; but then again, they are faced with difficulty in accessing places where people are trapped.

Excessive rain and hillside runoff are causing the flood. But many are also speculating that the situation has worsened because a dam in India's Tripura has been opened. What is your take on this?

This is not a matter of personal opinion. It is a government-to-government matter. There has been a lot of rain, and as a result, some dams have been opened on the Indian side. What we are trying to figure out is whether we were told before the [Tripura] dam was opened. We may not have a treaty on this particular river, but there are international treaties—such as the no-harm principle, principle of cooperation—on how to manage transboundary or shared resources between countries. Our chief adviser is set to speak with the Indian prime minister and raise these concerns.

The other issue is, why do we only have agreements on eight rivers when we share so many rivers with India? The chief adviser will address what happened in this particular instance, but he will also discuss and prioritise how to prevent such things from happening in the future.

The climate threats should be taken as an opportunity to start the dialogue and reach an agreement for basin-wide river management. The challenges include involving all basin countries within the framework of existing agreements, getting the consent of the upper riparian countries that are naturally placed in advantageous positions, and adhering to the principles, norms and processes prescribed in the 1997 UN convention as none of the riparian countries is party to it. And of course, an effective dispute resolution mechanism has to be put in place.

How is the shuffling of the local government going to affect disaster and relief management?

A local government is, of course, of tremendous help in such situations. Even though there has been a reshuffling in local government, it is not that it has collapsed. Someone from each of those local government offices has been appointed as the administrator. And during disasters, as you also know, one institution may be tasked with the primary role, but all institutions must come together and give their all. To ensure that all departments and ministries can work effectively and urgently together, the disaster management ministry, along with the ministries of fisheries and livestock, agriculture, health, etc, is taking coordinated efforts at the field level as well as the national level.

The adviser for disaster management and relief, who could not go earlier because of bad weather, went to Feni yesterday. He may not have been able to visit the remote areas, but he will oversee the coordination from a nearby area.

What we are trying to figure out is whether we were told before the [Tripura] dam was opened. We may not have a treaty on this particular river, but there are international treaties—such as the no-harm principle, principle of cooperation—on how to manage transboundary or shared resources between countries.

Besides Feni, there are other districts such as Cumilla, Khagrachhari, etc, which have also been affected by the flash floods. What steps are you taking there?

The situation in Feni is particularly bad, so we are giving our utmost attention there. But local government agencies, ministries, and the army have all been instructed to do their due diligence in other affected areas, and they are being deployed in the places where the embankments have not broken yet, and to ensure that they are ready with whatever is necessary to tackle the situation. Every area is getting attention, but we are particularly worried about Feni because the communication system there has broken down completely.

Many have also questioned the government's poor river conservation and management initiatives amid the increasing intensity and frequency of floods in the country.

Yesterday, we discussed in a meeting that in many areas, water is not receding because of the arbitrary way in which embankments, bridges and/or culverts have been constructed. Since this is a flash flood, when the rain lets up, the rainwater is supposed to recede quickly. There may be river erosion at that time. However, when the water recedes, there must be no obstruction. So, the bigger concern as to whether we have done adequate river management keeping in mind how flood-prone we are was discussed, though the immediate focus is now on rescue and rehabilitation. I have long been saying that our rivers are losing navigability. We have to address these wider concerns in the long run.

LAW REFORM FOR GENDER EQUALITY

As we speak of reform across all sectors today, it has become important to revisit and address the various forms of inequalities that have become ingrained at almost all levels of our society. As the glorious history of the very birth of our country owes it to the students' united voices, it is them who are once again inspiring us when the nation is at a crossroads. The spirit of the student-led mass movement was by all means fairness and equality. Hence, it is the right time to revisit the recommendations that women's rights advocates in Bangladesh have proposed time and again, demanding some law and policy reforms that are meant to remedy the age-old inequalities against women, but which have failed to see the light of day in the past decade.

One of the most critical recommendations for such a reform proposal has been regarding the vague and outmoded laws and practices around rape cases. Perhaps scrutinising our laws on sexual violence is even more crucial now in view of the horrific Kolkata rape incident. It is unacceptable that our law remains so outdated that the rape of a child bride as young as 13 years old still cannot be considered as rape when the perpetrator is her husband—no matter how brutal the rape is or whether it causes the child's death. It is also unthinkable that because an adult offender used sharp objects to penetrate a child—as her body is incapable of penile-vaginal intercourse—his charge might simply be of an "attempt to rape" or "sexual assault" instead of "rape" due to the vague legal definitions.

Another demand from the women's rights activists that has remained largely ignored, despite several advocacy attempts, is the call for an anti-sexual harassment law for all workplaces and educational institutions. Time and again, several organisations, activists and legal researchers have proposed drafts of such legislation and related legal reforms. However, other than a token inclusion of a non-functional sexual harassment provision in the Labour Rules in 2022, no substantive steps have been taken to install a robust sexual harassment prevention and protection mechanism at workplaces and educational institutions. This was a crucial demand that found even stronger grounds when Nusrat was murdered in her madrasa premise, but our voices did not reach the lawmakers, and the educational institutions and workplaces still remain largely indifferent to sexual harassment incidents.

Perhaps scrutinising our laws on sexual violence is even more crucial now in view of the horrific Kolkata rape incident. It is unacceptable that our law remains so outdated that the rape of a child bride as young as 13 years old still cannot be considered as rape when the perpetrator is her husband—no matter how brutal the rape is or whether it causes the child's death.

Undeniably, laws that are discriminatory should be amended and new laws should be passed where effective legal protection is lacking. However, in Bangladesh, passing of a new law to address some form of gender inequality is often presented as the only solution to a crisis, be it domestic violence, dowry violence or child marriage. Such new laws or changes in the law pledging to ensure equality for women are generally uninformed of the reality on the ground and overlook the need to evaluate whether there is an actual necessity of a new law on the subject. The result is several overlapping laws and policies creating a rather weak premise for ensuring justice to women. The key stakeholders, on whom the ultimate enforcement of the law depends, are also often not consulted with when laws are drafted.

VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

For instance, the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1980 was repealed in 2018 only to be replaced with an almost identical law with few minor additions. There is no explanation as to why the legislature opted for a new dowry prohibition law without simply amending the already existing one. Rather, the 2018 law missed the opportunity to address the critical gaps that existed in the previous law, which were seemingly problematic for victims of dowry violence in getting effective relief under the law. This is also the case for the Women and Children Repression Prevention Act, 2000, which was hurriedly amended in 2020 in the face of public outrage triggered by a series of sexual assault cases. The amendment, which increased the maximum punishment for rape to death sentence, carried no impact on the existing injustice against rape survivors. Rather, the same amendment introduced mandatory DNA test to be done for all cases under the law, paving the way for further stretching the already delayed investigation process in rape cases.

While the problematic laws exist, seeking justice for rape and other forms of sexual violence is far more difficult, resulting in the extremely low rate of conviction in rape cases. Key barriers to such a delayed justice process have been identified time and again in the past several years raising alarms on issues such as the lack of witness protection mechanism, rape survivors having to battle with misogyny, and harmful stereotypes during investigation and trial, corruption, lack of effective legal aid, politically biased and largely inefficient public prosecution system, and so on. Nevertheless, other than removal of the provision relating to character evidence from the Evidence Act, no visibly effective steps have been taken to address the obstacles that make the process of seeking justice extremely gruelling for rape survivors.

Also, there is a lack of any systematic evaluation to monitor the newly enacted laws' progress, and it is commonly left for the activists at the end, to point out the apparent inconsistencies in the law that are blocking its implementation—including the crucial gap in budget allocation.

No doubt, these deep-rooted clogs in the justice system and the legal loopholes that have remained unheeded for years cannot be mended overnight. But as Bangladesh renews its pledge for equality and non-discrimination, what we can now hope for is a stronger political commitment to take the first and most crucial step towards meaningful reform for women's right to justice. Now is the time.

Opening duo resilient but Tigers' task toughens

SPORTS REPORTER

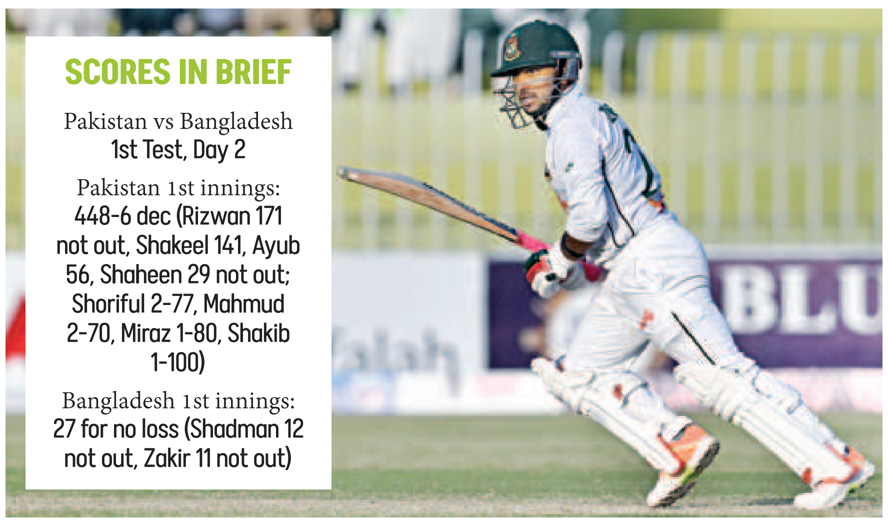
Bangladesh bowlers and fielders toiled under the Rawalpindi sun yesterday as Pakistan batters ensured the visitors would have their work cut out for them on the second day of the first Test.

The visitors picked up just two wickets, having bowled 72 overs on day two as Pakistan rode on Saud Shakeel's 141 and Rizwan Hossain's unbeaten 171 to post 448 for six before declaring.

In reply, the Tigers reached stumps at 27 for no loss as Zakir Hasan and Shadman Islam saw out a tricky 12-over period. Bangladesh will certainly take heart from their short vigil at the crease on the day but will be knowing full well that any slip in concentration can prove disastrous.

Batting form, or lack thereof, especially in the red-ball format has seen the Tigers suffer on a regular basis. In the last series against Sri Lanka at home, Bangladesh regularly lost wickets to false shots, not quite being able to apply themselves.

Batting coach David Hemp was impressed by the opening duo's effort.



SCORES IN BRIEF

Pakistan vs Bangladesh
1st Test, Day 2

Pakistan 1st innings:
448-6 dec (Rizwan 171 not out, Shakeel 141, Ayub 56, Shaheen 29 not out; Shoriful 2-77, Mahmud 2-70, Miraz 1-80, Shakib 1-100)

Bangladesh 1st innings:
27 for no loss (Shadman 12 not out, Zakir 11 not out)

"We are really pleased with how they negotiated the last 12-over block. It can be a challenging time when you have to bat in the last hour of the day's play, especially when you have been in the field all day. The manner in which they played, positive footwork and still looking to score even though you want to be as disciplined and as tight as you can," Hemp said at a press conference yesterday following the day's play.

The surface looked pretty flat and provided plenty of run-scoring opportunities. Talks of whether 20 wickets could be taken by a team had also begun. Hemp acknowledged that the surface is good enough to not deteriorate too much, informing that the plan is to carry on batting throughout the third day.

"From our point of view, it was a good declaration [from Pakistan]; an attacking declaration which I would expect. So it didn't catch us by surprise. For us, it's about batting tomorrow and then see where we are going into day four and five.

"There is still a lot of cricket to be played. So the priority for us is to make sure we bat the day tomorrow and see where we are at. If we are in a good position then can we go past Pakistan or at least get as close as possible. We did see the odd ball grip a bit. But from a distance, it did seem like a batting wicket and I think it will remain that way for a couple of days anyway," Hemp said.

Bangladesh pacers did not manage any reverse swing, an aspect of the game Pakistan revel in. Hemp felt that they have to wait and watch, knowing reverse swing can change the trajectory of the match.

"We will see what happens tomorrow [today] but from our point of view, we didn't think the conditions were such to help with reverse swing," he added.

Jaker, Saif hit tons against Pak Shaheens

SPORTS REPORTER

Jaker Ali and Saif Hassan struck brilliant hundreds for Bangladesh 'A' against Pakistan Shaheens on the third day of the second four-day match at the Islamabad Club Cricket Oval on Thursday.

After the first two days saw no action due to rain and a wet outfield, the match officially commenced on the penultimate day with Bangladesh 'A' being sent to bat. Jaker smashed an unbeaten 136 while Saif made 111 to steer the visitors to 346-6 at stumps.

Saif and Jaker got together when Bangladesh 'A' were struggling on 77-4 and shared a 131-run partnership for the fifth wicket to bring relief to the tourist camp.

The partnership ended with Saif departing soon after completing his eighth first-class ton, falling to Mehran Mumtaz (2-69).

Jaker then put up a 131-run stand for the following wicket with Mahidul Islam Ankon (39), during which the wicketkeeper-batsman completed his fourth first-class hundred.

Ankon got ran out late in the day as Jaker remained unbeaten alongside Tanzim Sakib (0) at stumps.

Earlier, the opening four-day match of the two-match series ended in a draw at the same venue.

'Girls upset' but preparation in full swing

SPORTS REPORTER

Women's wing head of Bangladesh Cricket Board Habibul Bashar insisted that even though the girls are upset about missing out on playing the upcoming ICC Women's T20 World Cup on home soil, it won't hamper their preparation for the global tournament.

"Everyone has the desire to play World Cup on home soil. Most of the girls had the same dream. So, they are a bit upset about it. Of course, we will miss playing on home condition," Bashar told reporters in Mirpur on Thursday.

International Cricket Council (ICC) on Tuesday that the ninth edition of the Women's T20 World Cup has been moved out of Bangladesh because of travel advisories from governments of a number of the participating teams due to the current situation in Bangladesh.

The tournament will now take place in the UAE with BCB continuing to host the event. The tournament will take place across two venues in the UAE -- Dubai and Sharjah -- from October 3 to 20.

Although the venue of the global meet has been changed, BCB is trying hard to give the girls adequate preparation before they compete against England, South Africa, West Indies, and Scotland in Group B of the marquee event.

As part of the preparation, the cricketers reached Rajshahi on Thursday to feature in the 13th Women's National Cricket League 2024-25 where eight divisional teams will compete in the T20 format, beginning on Saturday.

"The preparation isn't being hampered much. We were taking preparation keeping the World Cup in mind. We made arrangements for one-to-one training for the girls. Our local coaches were there. The coaching staff are also here. The NCL is part of our preparation," Bashar said.

Apart from that, BCB is mulling to send the national team to Sri Lanka under the 'A' team banner following the WNCL before they leave for the UAE for the World Cup.

"The wickets in Rajshahi are good. We want girls to play on good and sporting wickets. The monsoon is going on but there is less rain in Rajshahi. We will also get two venues. We will have to finish the tournament in a fixed time. As this is going to be a part of our World Cup preparation, so we decided to hold the matches in Rajshahi.

"We will send our 'A' team to Sri Lanka after the league. That will also be our part of preparation...Those, who will be in our World Cup plan, we will make the 'A' team with them," he said.

AFC CHALLENGE LEAGUE

Kings, East Bengal in same group

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Premier League champions Bashundhara Kings have been drawn in Group A of the inaugural AFC Challenge League along with outfits from India, Lebanon, and Bhutan.

The draw of the AFC Challenge League was held in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia yesterday.

West Zone of the AFC Challenge League will see 12 teams, split into three groups, competing in a round-robin league with three group champions and the best runners-up among three groups advancing into the quarterfinals of the third-tier club competition in Asia.

Along with Bashundhara Kings, East Bengal of India, Nejmeh SC of Lebanon and Paro FC of Bhutan will play the Group A matches between October 26 to November 2 in Thimphu.

Bashundhara Kings had earlier played the now-defunct AFC Cup four times, getting eliminated from the group stages three times while once the tournament was cancelled due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Meanwhile, Kings have completed registrations of 34 players, including five foreigners, for their upcoming domestic season. Romanian coach Valeriu Tita is expected to arrive early next month as the club management is likely to decide on the date for the start of the club's pre-season.

the loose cannon

Nazmul Hassan Papon recently stepped down as the president of the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) after spending 12 years at the post. Bangladesh cricket reached some sporadic highs in his tenure but overall, his administration was blighted by allegations of nepotism, corruption as well as sub-par performances over long periods for the men's and women's national teams. Papon's tendency of stirring up controversy with his words, pulling back the curtain on the national team dressing room and bringing up matters which would have been better left untold, made him a colorful figure in the country's cricket. But his loose mouthed nature only added to the chaos, turning a bad situation even worse. Following are a few of his most controversial remarks:

"Mushfiqur's father, Miraz's aunt... beat up someone in some village or so, I had to solve all of that from abroad. These [claims] are a shock to me."
Papon said regarding the players protest over pay-rise in October 2019.

"I was really surprised to see they chose to bat because it was decided the day before [that we would bowl if won the toss]. Both coach and captain said they would take fielding. It was decided. Then when I saw we won the toss and chose to bat, that was the first shock for me."
Papon on Bangladesh captain Mominul Haque's decision to bat first against India during the pink-ball Test in November 2019 in Kolkata.

"Our main focus is the next World Cup, not this one. You can't change everything overnight. We are planning long-term and trying to prepare a squad for the next World Cup. Even if the upcoming World Cup does not go well for us, I won't be disappointed. "
Papon said this, in September 2022, about Bangladesh's short-term and long-term plans regarding the T20 World Cup in the following month and the one in mid-2024.

"This is not a healthy dressing room, this I can guarantee you. This thing [rift between Shakib and Tamim], it's not that I have not tried to sort it out. I have spoken with both of them and I felt that it will not be easy to settle the issues [between them] at the moment. This is my observation," the former board president opening up a can of worms, quite unprovoked, when he told the media in February last year that there was a rift between Tamim Iqbal and Shakib Al Hasan.

"These are rumours. When I was with the team, I neither said nor heard about this. Some people are saying that the atmosphere in the dressing room is not good. I don't know, I haven't seen anything like that."
Papon taking a U-turn a few days later.

"I'm not the same person I used to be. I have not been with the team for the last three-and-a-half years.… I am voluntarily staying detached from the team."
Papon said in July this year, on mending his ways of meddling with the team, following the T20 World Cup.

Fumble proves costly as U-20s fall to Nepal

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh struggled to recover after a costly fumble by goalkeeper and captain Mehedi Hasan Srabon led to the first goal in their 2-1 defeat to Nepal in a SAFF U-20 Championship fixture in Lalitpur yesterday, coach Maruful Haque said.

The defeat in the second match -- mirroring their losses to Nepal in 2015 and 2017 -- meant Bangladesh finished as Group A runners-up, and they now face a strong possibility of encountering the reigning champions in the semi-finals as India need a draw against Maldives in today's encounter to become Group B champions.

However, Maruful remains optimistic about going all the way in the tournament.

"We lost to Nepal, but we have not lost the championship. If we want to become champions, we have to beat everyone, and we have no choice but to face any team in the semi-final," said Maruful at the post-match conference.

With both teams having already secured semi-final berths, Bangladesh adopted a counter-attacking strategy at ANFA Complex with the objective of at least securing a draw to overtake Nepal in the points table.

However, the home side took the lead in the 17th minute after the advancing goalkeeper Mehedi failed to intercept Nepal's clearance in midfield, leading to forward Samir Tamang snatching the ball from his feet and slotting into open net.

One minute later, Bangladesh conceded again, with Niranjan Dhami doubling the lead with a near-post finish from Abinash Syangtan's low cross.

"Our plan was to allow them to come into the attack in the first 10 minutes, as Nepal needed to score if they wanted to become group champions, but conceding the first goal brought the players' morale down and they could not bounce back for the rest of the match," said Maruful, adding that even world-class goalkeepers concede goals in such a manner.

Trailing by two goals, coach Maruful showed urgency with his substitutions, bringing on forwards Mirajul Islam and Asadul Molla in the 32nd minute. Bangladesh pulled one back when Mirajul converted from the spot in the 43rd minute after being tackled but failed to cash in on the momentum later.

Leverkusen eye repeat after 'magic' title triumph

AFP, Donaueschingen

Bayer Leverkusen are vowing to achieve great things again this season after an unprecedented unbeaten league and cup double last campaign.

Leverkusen kick off the 2024-25 Bundesliga campaign at local rivals Borussia Moenchengladbach on Friday.

Xabi Alonso's side have been tipped by many to become the first side other than Bayern Munich to win back-to-back German top-flight titles since Jurgen Klopp's Borussia Dortmund in 2012.

Bayern have spent big and Dortmund and RB Leipzig have had impressive summers but that does not scare Leverkusen in their pursuit of a successive title.

Speaking with AFP at Leverkusen's pre-season training camp in the Black Forest village of Donaueschingen, forward Nathan Tella Tella said: "There's no reason why we can't defend the title".

"We've seen Bayern do it for so many years. Why can't we do something similar to that?

"There's no limit to what we can achieve. Last year, no one believed in us, and at the end of the season, we were undefeated champions.

"Being a part of this team, anything is possible."

Tella's bullish statements are a far cry from even a season ago, when the club was still derided as 'Neverkusen' for failing to win a league title despite five second-place finishes.

Much of Leverkusen's success last season, including their run to the Europa League final, was set up by late goals from a side who did not know they were beaten.

Leverkusen's summer training base was at the same venue from where Spain's triumphant Euro 2024 campaign just a month earlier launched.

Asked if Leverkusen could benefit from a bit of La Roja's magic this season, Tella said his side did not need any external assistance.

"No, we have our own magic to be fair. Last season, it was him," Tella said, pointing at Leverkusen's midfield maestro Florian Wirtz.

Despite attention from some of Europe's biggest clubs, Leverkusen held onto Wirtz this summer, as well as the remainder of their squad.

Perhaps most importantly, coach Alonso has committed to stay on for at least another season despite interest from several of his former clubs including European giants Liverpool, Real Madrid, and Bayern.

Financial advantages aside, Bayern's long dominance of the Bundesliga has been underpinned by a constant desire to get better, even when the club is already at the top.

Despite a barnstorming campaign where the club broke through for their first Bundesliga title, Leverkusen were not resting on their laurels.

Alonso, a serial winner during his playing career, set the tone in pre-season training, saying last year's incredible level "probably wouldn't be enough" this season.

"We have many fundamentals," the coach said. "We need to add something, update it, incorporate other elements. We have to evolve and improve."

REVOCATION OF RED PASSPORTS

A new reality for Hasina in India

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE and ZYMA ISLAM

After the interim government revoked all diplomatic passports yesterday, questions have now arisen as to how long Sheikh Hasina can stay in India and whether she faces a possible extradition.

Hasina, the former prime minister of Bangladesh, fled to India after being forced to resign in the face of a student-led mass uprising on August 5.

According to the Indian visa policy, Bangladeshi citizens holding diplomatic or official passports are eligible for visa-free entry and a stay of up to 45 days.

As of yesterday, Hasina has already spent 18 days in India.

She does not hold any passport other than the diplomatic passport issued in her name, according to government sources.

The cancellation of her diplomatic passport and its associated visa privileges may put her at risk of extradition.

The extradition of Hasina, who is facing 51 cases, including 42 for murder, falls within the legal framework of the extradition treaty signed between Bangladesh and India.

TREATY AND POLITICAL REALITY

According to the treaty signed in 2013 and amended in 2016, "extradition may be refused if the offence for which it is requested is an offence of a political character."

It also says that certain offences -- like murder -- "shall not be regarded as offences of a political character" for the purposes of the treaty.

However, one of the grounds for refusal of extradition is if the charges being pressed have not been "made in good faith, in the interest of justice".

Salman F Rahman, 3 ex-ministers, MP to face ACC probe

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday decided to launch investigations into graft allegations against Salman F Rahman, private industry and investment adviser to former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, and four others.

The four others are Md Shahab Uddin, former forest and environment minister; Nasrul Hamid, ex-state minister for power and energy; Zunaid Ahmed Palak, former state minister for posts, telecommunications, and information technology; and ex-Awami League MP Nurunnabi Chowdhury Shaon.

"Whoever is corrupt, be it a politician or a government official, we will take action ... . If the allegations are proved, action will be taken," ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmeen told reporters at her office yesterday.

Truce hopes fade as Gaza fighting rages

Israeli tanks push deeper into enclave; 22 more Palestinians killed in strikes

AGENCIES

Hopes were dwindling yesterday for a ceasefire in the Gaza Strip, where fighting raged despite pressure from the United States on Israel and Hamas to reach an agreement.

Israeli forces pressed deeper into areas of the central and southern enclave and battled with Hamas fighters, as Palestinian health officials said that Israeli strikes had killed at least 22 people across the enclave.

The new escalation comes hours after US President Joe Biden pressed Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on the urgency of sealing a deal for a truce in Gaza and the release of hostages, the White House said.

Months of on-off talks on a ceasefire have circled the same issues, but Israel and Hamas have stuck firmly to their demands.

In the northern Gaza town of Beit Lahiya, a strike on a house killed 11 people, while another killed six, including a local journalist, in a house in Al-Maghazi camp in the central Gaza Strip, medics said. Five others were killed in separate strikes in the south.

The Israeli military said its forces had intensified their operations in Deir Al-Balah, in central Gaza, and Khan Younis, in the south, dismantling dozens of military structures, locating rockets, and killing Hamas fighters, over the past 24 hours.

SAGAR-RUNI CASE

Editors' Council demands swift trial

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Editors' Council yesterday demanded a swift trial in the Sagar-Runi murder case to ensure justice.

A statement signed by the council's President Mahfuz Anam and General Secretary Dewan Hanif Mahmud called for the immediate filing of the charge sheet to expedite the charge framing in the case.

According to the statement, on February 11, 2012, the journalist couple -- Sagar Sarwar, news editor of Machranga Television, and Meherun Runi, ATN Bangla's senior reporter -- were murdered in their rented house in the capital's West Rajabazar.

The court has so far extended the time to submit the investigation report of this case 111 times, noted the Editors' Council in the statement.

Govt to scrap provision for fixing prices sans hearing

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

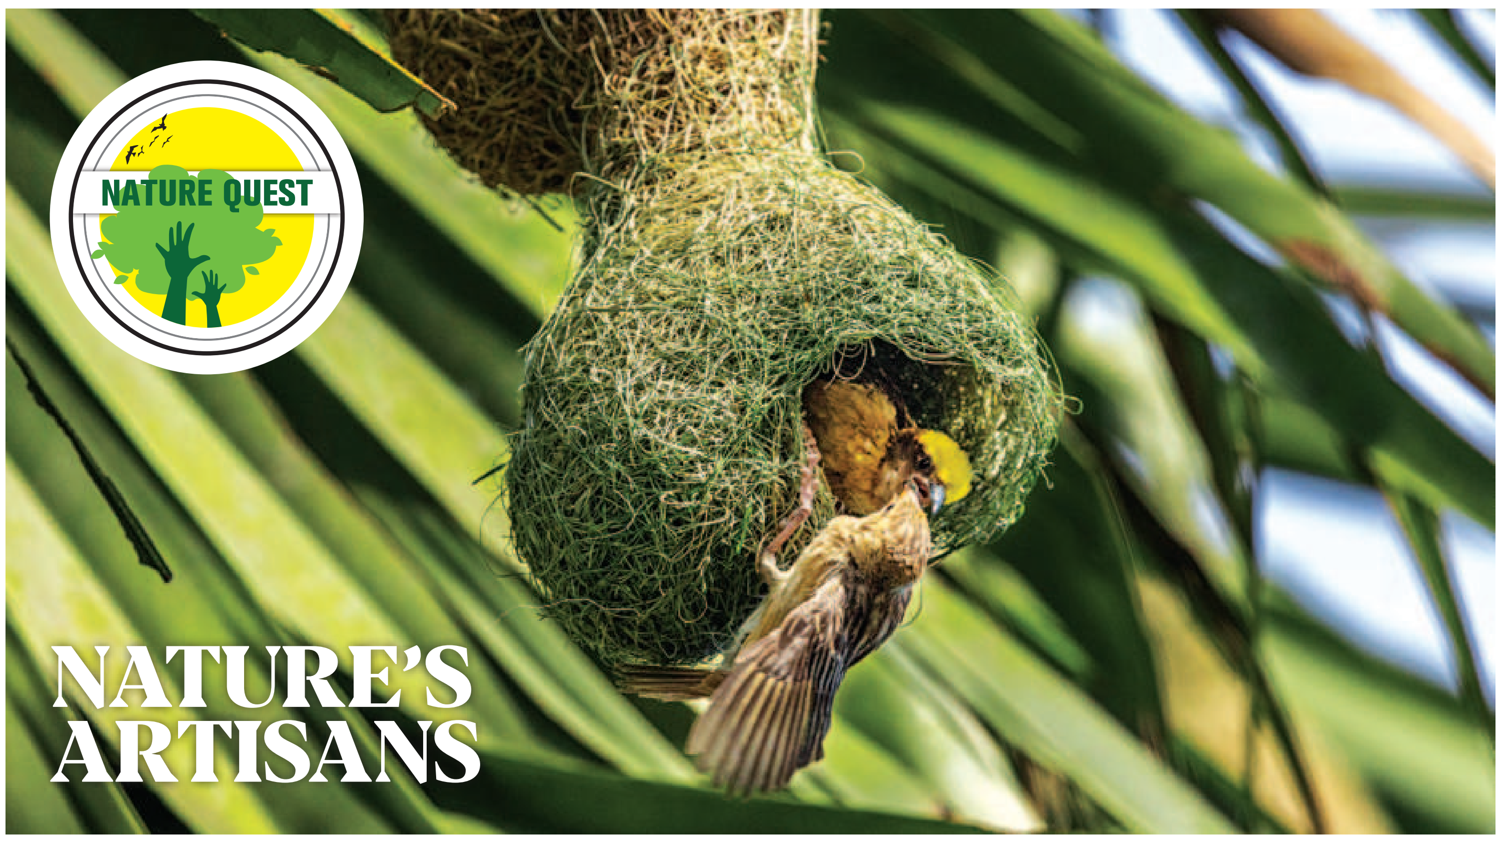
The advisers to the interim government yesterday decided that prices of electricity, gas, and fuel will no longer be increased or decreased without public hearings.

In their third meeting, the advisers decided to repealClause 34 (ka) of the Bangladesh Energy Regulatory Commission (BERC) Act-2003.

The clause introduced last year allowed the government to set energy prices in special circumstances, bypassing the regulatory body and public input.

Under this provision, the previous government fixed energy prices multiple times without holding public hearings.

The decision was made to promote public engagement in the matter, according to a press release.



A female Baya weaver, locally known as Babui pakhi, inspecting a nest weaved by a male in the port city. Considered artisans of nature, these weaverbirds are found in grasslands, cultivated areas and scrubs across the Indian Subcontinent and Southeast Asia. Baya weavers are best known for their intricately constructed hanging nests woven from leaves, which are found mostly on thorny trees or palm fronds near or over waterbodies where predators cannot reach them. These nests are pieces of art and engineering and built by the males to woo female mates. The males spend days collecting grass and twigs and weave the nests one grass blade at a time. Once built, they wait for the female suitors to inspect their work and choose. Sometimes, if two females choose the same nest and male, they fight among themselves to establish their place. When a female chooses a nest and male, the couple then join hands to further build the nest and raise a family. After they birth their chicks and lead them into adulthood, they abandon the nest and start all over again. PHOTO: MONJUR MORSHED

Stop teachers' harassment

Samajik Protirodh Committee urges govt, civil society, parents of students to take note

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Samajik Protirodh Committee, a platform of 66 women's, human rights, and development organisations, yesterday expressed deep concern over the recent incidents of harassment and insults of teachers, including female teachers, by some students at different educational institutions.

The committee in a statement urged the government, civil society and guardians to pay special attention to the matter on priority basis.

It also urged the students to refrain from such "uncourteous and audacious" activities.

On behalf of the committee, Fauzia Moslem sent the statement to the media.

The committee said it has been observed that students are forcing headmasters, principals or vice chancellors of educational institutions to resign.

The students are not even refraining from assaulting them physically and the female teachers are not being spared from such harassments, reads the statement.

In some cases, students were being used to pursue personal vengeance. The committee said it is ashamed, sad and worried about such incidents.

"Such incidents are not acceptable at all. Such incidents will create anarchy in the overall education system and teaching process, and will ultimately weaken the education system," said the statement.

Such indiscipline is the testament to social degradation and a lack of human values, the committee said.

Abdul Hafiz appointed Yunus' spl assistant

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Abdul Hafiz, a retired lieutenant general of the Bangladesh Army, has been appointed as the special assistant to Prof Muhammad Yunus, the chief adviser of the interim government.

Hafiz will get the status of an adviser and will assist the chief adviser regarding defence and improving national unity.

The chief adviser's press wing announced his appointment in a statement issued yesterday afternoon.

Prof Yunus-led interim government was sworn in on August 8, four days after the fall of the Shiekh Hasina-led government amid an uprising led by students and people. The interim governments have 21 advisers, including Yunus.

Abdul Hafiz was commissioned in the Bangladesh Army in the infantry corps on May 8, 1977. He served as the chief of general staff. He also served as the force commander of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and the force commander of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) for two terms.

He got his Bachelor of Arts (BA) degree from Dhaka University in 1981 and holds a Master's in Defence Studies (MDS) from National University.

MYANMAR CONFLICT

UN fears repeat of 2017 atrocities against Rohingyas

AFP, Geneva

The United Nations said yesterday it fears a repeat of the 2017 atrocities committed against the Rohingya minority in Myanmar, warning a human tragedy was unfolding in Rakhine State.

UN human rights chief Volker Turk voiced grave alarm about the sharply deteriorating situation across Myanmar, particularly in Rakhine where, he said, hundreds of civilians have reportedly been killed while trying to flee fighting.

Clashes have rocked Rakhine since the rebel Arakan Army attacked forces of Myanmar's ruling junta in November, ending a ceasefire that had largely held since a military coup in 2021.

The AA says it is fighting for more autonomy for the ethnic Rakhine population in the state, which is also home to around 600,000 members of the Rohingya Muslim minority.

Hundreds of thousands of Rohingyas fled Rakhine in 2017 during a crackdown by the military that is now the subject of a United Nations genocide court case.

"Thousands of Rohingyas have been forced to flee on foot, with the Arakan Army herding them repeatedly into locations that offer scant safe haven," Turk said in a statement.

"As the border crossings to Bangladesh remain closed, members of the Rohingya community are finding themselves trapped between the military and its allies and the Arakan Army, with no path to safety."

are collecting funds and sending relief materials to the affected areas.

The Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, the platform that spearheaded the recent uprising, has beefed up its collection and rescue efforts for the flood-hit people. It yesterday launched a programme called "mass relief collection" at TSC.

"There's a line of vehicles at TSC, each filled with relief materials collected on personal initiatives. There are so many people coming to donate that the volunteers are struggling to deal with the volume of donations," Samiul Haque Sami, a Dhaka University student, wrote on Facebook, along with a photo of the crowd.

People who have logistics also come forward for the aid of the affected.

"If anyone needs a boat, please inform me. You don't need to give any money. Location: Bibirhat, Fatikchhari," wrote Shammi Hasan, on her Facebook post.

Various religious organisations, including Hindu, Buddhist, and Christian, are contributing to the relief efforts.

"This is why I still believe and hope that our country remains secular as it is. I say this country belongs to everyone -- people of all beliefs and non-beliefs, rich and poor," Najmul Alam wrote in his Facebook post.

On its Facebook page, As-Sunnah Foundation, a humanitarian organisation, shared a photo of people gathering in front of the organisation to join relief work as volunteers.

"Our initial target was to distribute 500 tonnes of relief materials, which have now been extended to 700 tonnes. Initially, we provided relief to each of 20,000 families, including 2kg of date, 2kg of flattened rice, 1kg of salt, 1kg of sugar, water, and candles.

"In the second phase, we are providing 10kg of rice, 2 litres of oil, 2kg of lentil, and 1kg of salt to each family. These will be loaded onto trucks and sent to Feni, Cumilla, and other flood-affected areas, and this effort will continue," said the foundation, adding that many are contributing to its relief fund.

Volunteers of Bidyanondo Foundation, a non-profit organisation working for social welfare, have also come in support to rescue and provide relief to the flood-hit people.

U Sara Bikkhu shared a post on his Facebook that cooked food is being distributed by Mihinda Mahathero, principal of Aparajita Buddha Bihar, among the flood-affected people at Madhubazar in Khagrachhari Sadar upazila.

Charu Haque, an activist of Rashtrochinta, a political platform, shared a video on Facebook showing a beggar donating Tk 10 to the relief fund.

In a Facebook post, Caregiver Volunteers Forum at Dhaka University, said it needs funds, relief materials such as dry food, baby food, medicine, oral saline, fresh drinking water, water-purification tablets, candles, life jackets, and sanitary pads.

Tasrif Khan, a singer who went to Feni as a volunteer, in his Facebook post said, "Please bring as much relief and fresh water as you can. Boats are available, and people are going out for rescue operations ... Trust me, people here are in dire need of fresh drinking water and relief supplies."

Prothom Alo Trust has sought emergency financial aid to support those affected by the floods.

On its Facebook page, Prothom Alo Bondhushava said they are distributing 10 tonnes of food items to 1,100 families.

Many artists and sports celebrities also urged people to extend their support to the flood victims.

"Our only slogan is: People are for people," ace cricketer Tamim Iqbal wrote in his Facebook post yesterday, urging all to help the flood victims.

The interim government has welcomed the people's eagerness to extend their assistance and cooperation and said the interested can contribute by sending money to the bank account of "Chief Adviser's Relief and Welfare Fund".

upheaval following deadly protests that forced the ouster of prime minister Sheikh Hasina earlier this month.

The violence that accompanied the anti-government protest has disrupted the garment exports, the country's main foreign exchange earner.

Reserves were already under pressure before the current crisis, and stood at $20.5 billion as of July 31, just enough to cover about three months of imports, reports Bloomberg.

Mansur, a veteran economist who spent three decades at the IMF, was named governor of Bangladesh Bank last week by the interim government headed by Nobel laureate Professor Muhammad Yunus.

The former Governor Abdur Rouf Talukder and two other deputy governors resigned as part of a string of bureaucratic departures following the fall of the previous government.

The central bank bought more than $200 million in three days from the interbank market since Mansur was appointed governor at Bangladesh Bank on Aug 13, reports Bloomberg.

Dr Mansur said the central bank aims to buy as much as $1 billion every month from local banks.

In the BBC interview, he emphasised that cleaning up the country's banking sector was his top priority when speaking to the BBC at the central bank's headquarters in the commercial heart of Dhaka.

There has been a "designed robbery of the financial system" which has caused significant damage to banks and has serious implications for the stock market and the broader economy, he suggested.

Bangladesh's banks have seen a flight of deposits and an alarming rise in non-performing assets following defaults by groups allegedly linked with the ousted Awami League government.

The non-performing assets were "just robbery of the banks. They took the money and put it in Singapore, Dubai, London and elsewhere. So the first effort would be to try to take people to task and get the money back," Dr Mansur told the BBC.

Hasina used DGFI

two started as he took some initiatives to prevent the lower courts from granting bail to notorious smugglers and corrupt persons after being appointed the 21st chief justice of the country in January 2015.

The conflict reached its peak as Justice Sinha ordered the law ministry to make the disciplinary rules for lower court judges keeping powers in the hands of the Supreme Court instead of the executive and declined to deliver judgement in the 16th amendment (SC judges' removal) case in favour of the government in July 2017.

"My last days in Bangladesh were very appalling, which cannot be expressed in words. Because it is a question of realisation. I, as a sitting chief justice, had been kept under house arrest. I was not allowed to communicate with anybody. My internet connections were disconnected. Nobody was allowed to meet me. Security forces [intelligence] would stand guard around my home. One of my staffers was beaten up while he was entering my house. Saiful Abedin, the then chief of DGFI, used to disturb me at midnight and put pressure on me to resign and leave the country."

He said his colleagues (judges) of the Appellate Division of the SC, being influenced by the government, refused to sit with him in the court and told him that the High Court judges would not cooperate with him, putting him under tremendous mental pressure.

"I had then thought I have no right to stay in the country."

On July 3, 2017, the SC bench led by then chief justice Sinha delivered the verdict and scrapped the 16th amendment to the constitution. It means the parliament lost its powers to remove the SC judges for incapacity or misconduct. The Supreme Judicial Council, a body of the chief justice and two senior-most judges of the Appellate Division, got back the jurisdiction.

Justice Sinha said he was called to the Bangabhaban the previous night (July 2) for a meeting with then president Abdul Hamid, premier Hasina, law minister Anisul Huq, now in police custody, and attorney general Mahbubey Alam (now dead).

He said that at the meeting, Hasina asked him to deliver the verdict the following day (July 3) in favour of the government, but he declined for the sake of independence of the judiciary.

"I could figure that the prime minister perhaps convinced the other judges of the apex court bench to deliver judgement in favour of the government. At one stage, the arguments with the prime minister heated up and I told her that I would resign right away. At that, she requested me not to resign and said the people would take it very badly if I resigned. She told me to go ahead as I wished."

Justice Sinha said that after all the seven judges of the Appellate Division unanimously delivered the verdict scrapping the 16th amendment on July 3, 2017, the ruling party members of parliament, including Hasina, blasted him for over five hours.

"Then I thought the government might not allow me to stay in the country. I hurriedly completed other relevant proceedings [including releasing the full text of the verdict]. I went to Japan to join a conference of the chief justices of the Asia Pacific countries. After getting out of the conference room, I got a phone call from DGFI and was told not to return home. A day later, I came back to Bangladesh through Singapore. After I landed at Dhaka airport, I discovered that five to six DGFI members surrounded me. They were not allowing me to go to my officials present there. A tall man told me that they wanted to have a cup of coffee with me and requested me to give them five minutes. I asked them to mind their language and maintain the protocol. Incensed, I said 'get lost'. They wanted to go with me in my car on the pretext of ensuring my security. I told them that I have a car and security and I don't need them and left. I thought it was another bad signal.

"I went to the court [SC]. One day, I just finished my work and the DGFI chief came to my office. He told me that the prime minister herself sent him and she asked me to resign and leave the country. I shouted 'who are you and what are you saying?' He [the DGFI chief] said they implement the orders of only the prime minister, not the law minister or attorney general ... I asked him to get lost. Then I returned home and was put under house arrest.

"The Supreme Court registrar general told me that they had nothing to do. He told me to take leave for some days. I got mentally upset. My secretary prepared an application for a seven-day leave and I signed it. I returned home in the evening. I found all the gates of my residence closed. Military personnel in plainclothes occupied all the things inside my residence. My internet connections were disconnected.

"Around 10:00am the following day, I was doing my work at my residential office. Md Abdul Wahhab Miah called me over the phone and wanted to meet me. I asked him to come to my house. He [Wahhab] asked me to go to his residence. He said other judges are in his house. Instantly, I could sense that there was a conspiracy here. I called them to come to my house. Then they came and told me that they would not sit with me in the court. I could realise that the ground beneath my feet was vanishing. Being influenced by the government, they [judges] made this illegal decision."

Amid this situation, Justice Sinha left Dhaka on the night of October 13, 2017.

Justice Wahhab, who was then the senior-most judge of the Appellate Division, had performed the functions of the chief justice in the absence of Justice Sinha.

During his talks to this newspaper, Justice Sinha congratulated Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus on his becoming the interim government chief adviser and Justice Syed Refaat Ahmed the new chief justice.

The former chief justice said he is ready to return to Bangladesh.

"I will go to the country if my security is ensured. I'm waiting for a green signal. I will surrender before the court concerned and prove that the cases filed against me are false."

Justice Sinha, who resigned as the chief justice on November 11, 2017, while abroad, stands accused in three money-laundering cases. He has been convicted and sentenced to 11 years' imprisonment in a case and two other cases are under investigation.

from Chattogram, Mongla ports and Kamalapur ICD, were imported by cricket superstar Shakib Al Hasan, who was an MP from Magura-1; Faizur Rahman from Brahmanbaria-5; Golam Faruque Pinku from Lakshipur-3; Abul Kalam from Natore-1; Mujibur Rahman Manju from Kishoreganj-5; and Jannat Ara Henry, an MP of a reserved seat for women. The identity of one other ex-lawmaker has not been conformed.

The bill of entry (the submission of import documents) for three of the 44 unreleased cars were filed in the name of Muhammad Zakaria from Dinajpur-1, Anupam Shahjahan Joy from Tangail-8, Nasima Zaman Bobby, an MP of a reserved seat for women.

The former lawmakers could not be reached for comments.

Customs officials said the identities of the other 41 former lawmakers would be known when import documents are filed.

According to documents, clearing and forwarding (C&F) agents, including Navana Ltd, facilitated the release of the seven vehicles on behalf of the importers.

Ripon Prakash Das, assistant general manager of C&F Agent Navana Ltd, said some vehicles were released under the names of former MPs.

"The release of these vehicles from the port requires an approval letter from the parliament speaker. The letter is not attainable now," he said.

Customs officials said the cars now must be released by paying the duties.

Chattogram Customs Commissioner Fyzur said they cannot seize the vehicles that were released before the parliament was dissolved.

The customs will seek instructions from the National Board of Revenue, he added.

BRTA Chairman Gautam Chandra Pal told The Daily Star that no vehicle brought under the duty-free facility has been registered in August.

"We verify NBR documents when registering vehicles imported by MPs under the duty-free facility. The law does not mention whether the members of a dissolved parliament can avail the benefit.

"There is a way to stop the registration of these vehicles and collect the duty if the NBR or the law ministry instructs us not to register them."

The duty-free car facility was introduced during HM Ershad's rule in 1987 to please lawmakers. A notification in this regard was issued on May 24, 1988.

In the budget for fiscal year 2024-25, a proposal was made to impose 25 percent duty on the cars for MPs. The proposal was not accepted.

The tax exemption cost the government Tk 5,147 crore in lost revenue over the last 15 years.

formal procedures."

Justice Manik has been co-accused in several cases filed against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, her several cabinet members, and several Awami League leaders recently.

Justice Manik has been at the centre of controversies several times over the years for his judgements and activities during his tenure as judge and after retiring.

Manik was appointed as an additional HC judge on July 3, 2001, for two years. The BNP, which assumed power in 2001, did not confirm his job.

On March 2, 2009, Manik was reinstated as a judge following an HC verdict after the AL government came to power.

He was appointed as a permanent HC judge on March 25, 2009.

On June 5, 2012, then ruling AL lawmakers said in parliament that Manik had violated the constitution by making "derogatory remarks" about the then speaker of the Jatiya Sangsad Abdul Hamid.

Earlier in the same day, during the hearing of a rule, Justice Manik observed that the Speaker (Hamid) had committed an offence tantamount to sedition by commenting in the House on an HC order. He also said the speaker was completely ignorant of the apex court and the constitution.

Senior AL lawmaker Tofail Ahmed told parliament, "I was surprised to see how Justice Manik spoke against the speaker and accused him of sedition. We have no words to censure him."

The same judge, Tofail added, had once punished a traffic police officer for failing to salute him on the road. "I think he is a sadist who gets pleasure by hurting people."

Tofail also accused Manik of forcibly sitting in business class seats on Biman flight though he bought economy class tickets through the misuse of his position.

On March 31, 2013, he was promoted to the Appellate Division. Justice Manik retired on October 1, 2015. He was removed from the bench on orders from then chief justice Surendra Kumar Sinha. Justice Manik had allegedly secretly recorded a conversation between him and justice Sinha, and published the conversation in the daily Janakantha.

In another development, ASM Feroz, chief whip of the 10th Jatiya Sangsad, was arrested from the capital's Banani last night, according to an SMS sent by Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Feroz, a former lawmaker from Patuakhali-2, served as a whip in the ninth parliament.

However, the DMP did not mention the case in which Feroz was arrested.

Abdul Hafiz appointed Yunus' spl assistant

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Abdul Hafiz, a retired lieutenant general of the Bangladesh Army, has been appointed as the special assistant to Prof Muhammad Yunus, the chief adviser of the interim government.

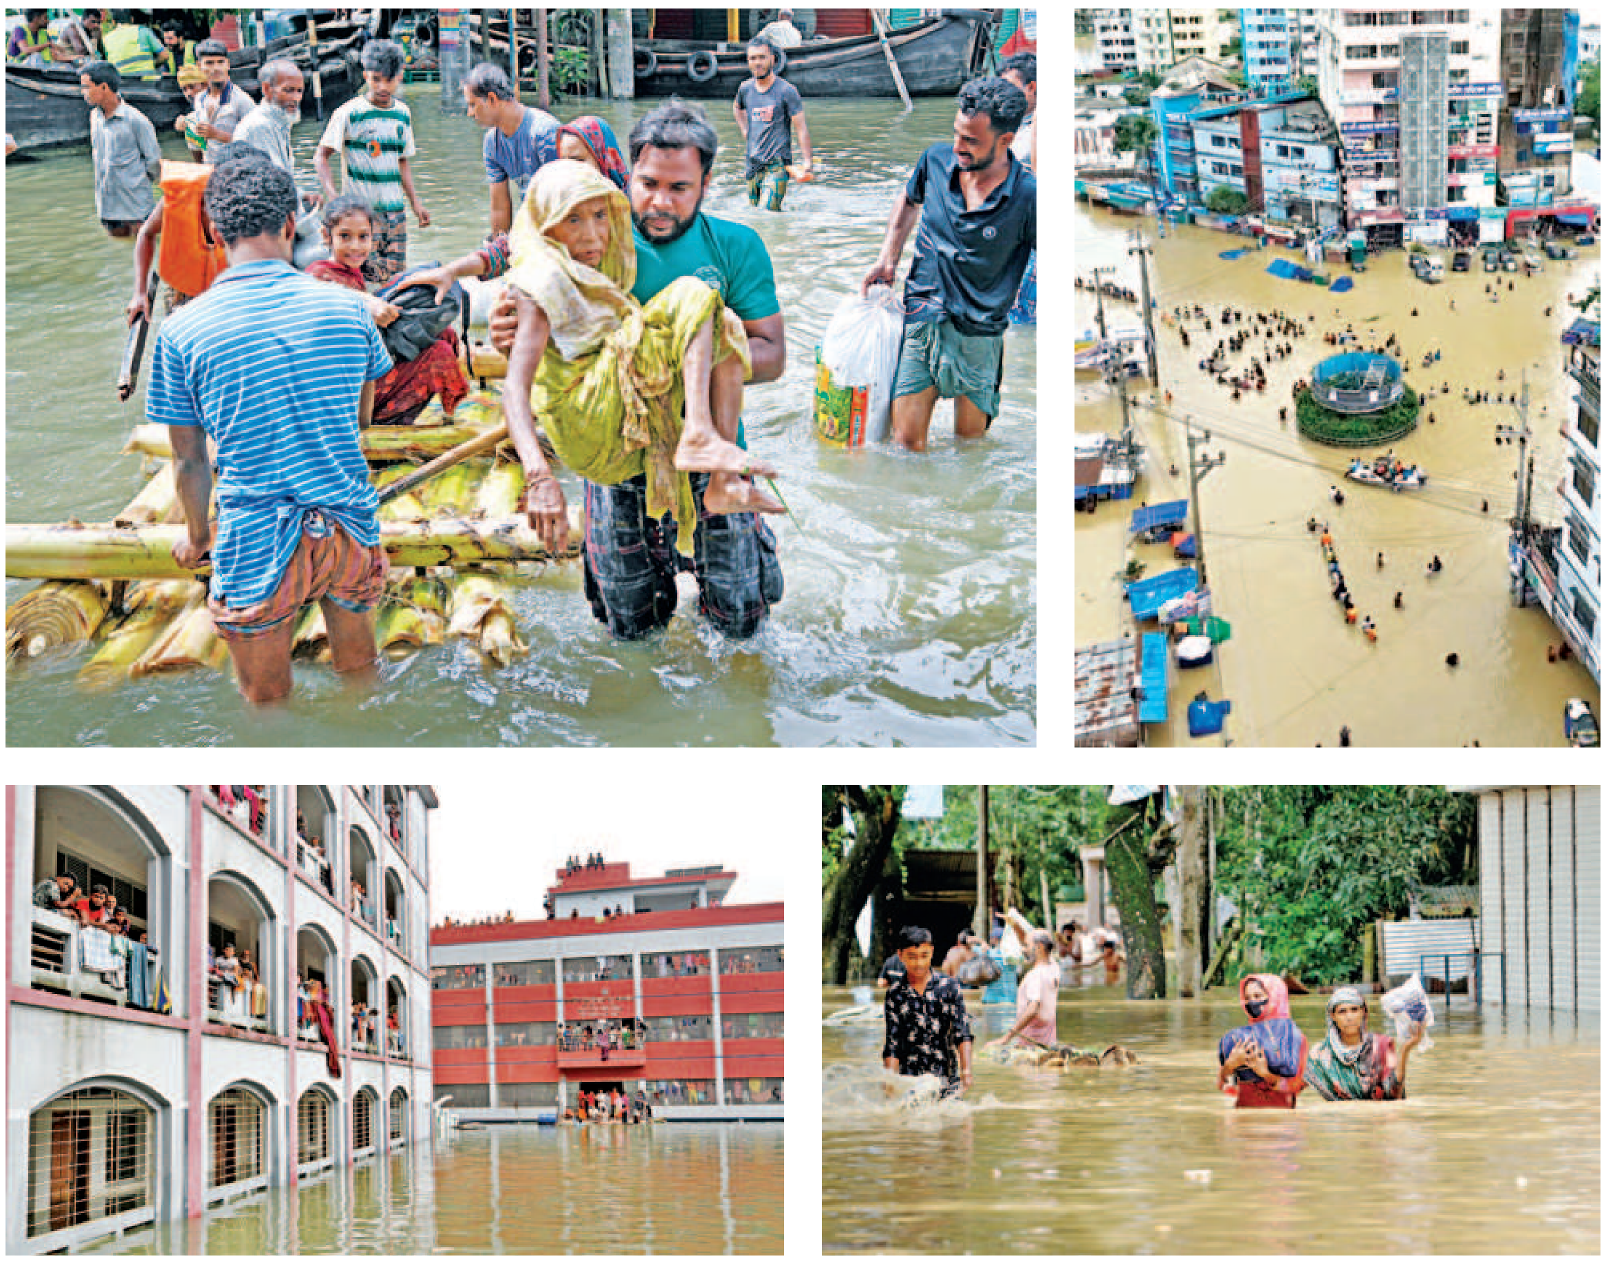
Hafiz will get the status of an adviser and will assist the chief adviser regarding defence and improving national unity.

The chief adviser's press wing announced his appointment in a statement issued yesterday afternoon.

Prof Yunus-led interim government was sworn in on August 8, four days after the fall of the Shiekh Hasina-led government amid an uprising led by students and people. The interim governments have 21 advisers, including Yunus.

Abdul Hafiz was commissioned in the Bangladesh Army in the infantry corps on May 8, 1977. He served as the chief of general staff. He also served as the force commander of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and the force commander of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) for two terms.

He got his Bachelor of Arts (BA) degree from Dhaka University in 1981 and holds a Master's in Defence Studies (MDS) from National University.



At least 3.5 lakh people have been marooned in Feni's three upazilas -- Fulgazi, Parshuram, and Chagalnaiya. Nearly 95 percent of the areas in these three upazilas have been submerged. Affected residents say they have never seen such intense flooding in the region. Road links have been snapped, the power is down, and mobile networks are disrupted in almost all areas.

AFP, Geneva

The United Nations said yesterday it fears a repeat of the 2017 atrocities committed against the Rohingya minority in Myanmar, warning a human tragedy was unfolding in Rakhine State.

UN human rights chief Volker Turk voiced grave alarm about the sharply deteriorating situation across Myanmar, particularly in Rakhine where, he said, hundreds of civilians have reportedly been killed while trying to flee fighting.

Clashes have rocked Rakhine since the rebel Arakan Army attacked forces of Myanmar's ruling junta in November, ending a ceasefire that had largely held since a military coup in 2021.

The AA says it is fighting for more autonomy for the ethnic Rakhine population in the state, which is also home to around 600,000 members of the Rohingya Muslim minority.

Hundreds of thousands of Rohingyas fled Rakhine in 2017 during a crackdown by the military that is now the subject of a United Nations genocide court case.

"Thousands of Rohingyas have been forced to flee on foot, with the Arakan Army herding them repeatedly into locations that offer scant safe haven," Turk said in a statement.

"As the border crossings to Bangladesh remain closed, members of the Rohingya community are finding themselves trapped between the military and its allies and the Arakan Army, with no path to safety."

On March 2, 2009, Manik was reinstated as a judge following an HC verdict after the AL government came to power.

He was appointed as a permanent HC judge on March 25, 2009.

On June 5, 2012, then ruling AL lawmakers said in parliament that Manik had violated the constitution by making "derogatory remarks" about the then speaker of the Jatiya Sangsad Abdul Hamid.

Earlier in the same day, during the hearing of a rule, Justice Manik observed that the Speaker (Hamid) had committed an offence tantamount to sedition by commenting in the House on an HC order. He also said the speaker was completely ignorant of the apex court and the constitution.

Senior AL lawmaker Tofail Ahmed told parliament, "I was surprised to see how Justice Manik spoke against the speaker and accused him of sedition. We have no words to censure him."

The same judge, Tofail added, had once punished a traffic police officer for failing to salute him on the road. "I think he is a sadist who gets pleasure by hurting people."

Tofail also accused Manik of forcibly sitting in business class seats on Biman flight though he bought economy class tickets through the misuse of his position.

On March 31, 2013, he was promoted to the Appellate Division. Justice Manik retired on October 1, 2015. He was removed from the bench on orders from then chief justice Surendra Kumar Sinha. Justice Manik had allegedly secretly recorded a conversation between him and justice Sinha, and published the conversation in the daily Janakantha.

In another development, ASM Feroz, chief whip of the 10th Jatiya Sangsad, was arrested from the capital's Banani last night, according to an SMS sent by Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Feroz, a former lawmaker from Patuakhali-2, served as a whip in the ninth parliament.

However, the DMP did not mention the case in which Feroz was arrested.

FLOOD RELIEF

A nation united, a DU not seen in years

SHUCHISMITA TITHI

"Move aside! Move aside!"

"Please don't gather here; let us take these inside quickly!"

These were the calls echoing through the TSC premises of Dhaka University yesterday, as student volunteers carried relief goods on their heads, one after another, tirelessly moving the supplies into the TSC cafeteria and indoor sports room.

For the past two days, students of DU have been working round the clock to collect and organise relief goods and funds for the flood-affected people in 12 districts across the country.

The scenes were nothing short of extraordinary. Vehicles of all kinds -- private cars, pickup trucks, and even large trucks -- lined up outside of TSC as people from all walks of life brought in donations. From small children bringing their piggy banks to elderly citizens offering whatever they could.

Such a display of unity and compassion has not been seen in DU for a long time, particularly not in the last 15 years of the Awami League regime, when only Chhatra League members called the shots.

The campaign began on Thursday morning, under the banner of Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, and was going on till yesterday night.

Ten-year-old Ihaan stood outside Dhaka University's TSC with his little piggy bank in hand, accompanied by his parents. The young boy was determined to do his part for the flood-affected people.

Ihaan was not alone. People from all walks of life -- corporate workers, day labourers, rickshaw pullers, etc. -- flocked to the university, bringing whatever they could, whether it was money, dry food, dates, medicine, sanitary napkins, clothes, or drinking water.

"I wanted to help the flood-affected people. I wish everyone would come forward to help," said 12-year-old Raisa Mehjabin, a sixth grader.

Marina Akhter, a homemaker who came all the way from Mirpur yesterday, said, "Since students of the anti-discrimination movement are collecting funds, I have decided to donate from a place of trust."

Not only were students from every department and dormitories of DU participating, but those from other institutions also joined in.

At the entrance of TSC, a public relief booth has been set up, where donations are registered before being moved to the indoor sports room for packaging.

The relief items are then stored in the TSC cafeteria, ready to be dispatched to the flood-affected areas by covered vans.

Several vehicles had already left for the affected regions on Thursday night, according to Nayeem, a student from one of Dhaka University's seven affiliated colleges.

Ashrefa, a DU student, shared that by Thursday night alone, students collected Tk 29,73,173 through various means.

Meanwhile, by yesterday 8:00pm, the total cash collected (excluding money coming through bank and mobile financial services) had risen to Tk 86,22,172, said Abu Baker Mojumder, a coordinator of the Anti-Discrimation Student Movement and the relief campaign.

"The relief goods we collected yesterday [Thursday], have been sent to Feni, Noakhali, Laxmipur, Cumilla, Akhaura, and Kasba this [Friday] morning. We are also sending funds to our coordinators in Chattogram so that they can get the necessary items themselves and provide those to the flood-affected people there," he said.

"Trucks will leave at 12:00am [early today] with the relief items we collected today [Friday]," he added.

Bhuiyan Asaduzzaman, a member of the Liaison Committee of Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, highlighted the unity of people from all classes, professions, and political identities in running the relief camp.

"Our struggle was against the binary identity -- the walls that were erected

'Not sure if they are alive or dead'

Say family members of flood victims

SIRAJUL ISLAM RUBEL

"I am not sure whether my sick mother and pregnant wife are alive or dead," said Abdul Kaiyum, a private job holder in Dhaka, while still in shock.

Abdul Kaiyum was unable to communicate with his family members for the last four days as mobile towers in the Feni district were not working due to the severe ongoing flood situation.

"I am concerned about my sick mother, pregnant wife and my cousin who is physically challenged," he added.

Kaiyum's family live at ward-9 in GM Union of Fulgazi upazila in Feni district.

Like Kaiyum, many others could not communicate with their family members.

The situation in Cumilla, Noakhali and Feni has been particularly worrying as the Muhuri and Feni rivers kept swelling throughout the last three days.

Many students said they were only able to reach their family over the phone three days back.

Over 90 percent of mobile towers in Feni were not working at the time of writing this report. Feni has seen the worst of the floods, disrupting service at 590 out of 656 towers, as per BTRC.

"I could not communicate with my family till now. But today [yesterday] a team informed me that they rescued my family members from their home at Chhagalnaiya upazila. But I am worried as my brother went missing," Sabbir Hossain Sifat, a student of Dhaka University, told this newspaper.

Govt mobilised 'full force' to combat floods: Rizwana

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The interim government is working "collectively with full force" to tackle the ongoing flash flood situation, said Water Resources Adviser Syeda Rizwana Hasan yesterday.

With the help of everyone, swift and effective measures are being taken to rescue people from remote areas, she said.

She made the remarks while responding to journalists' questions after visiting various flood-affected areas in Habiganj Sadar upazila, according to a media release.

Rizwana, also the adviser for Environment, Forest and Climate Change Ministry, expressed sincere gratitude to the students and general public who have been participating spontaneously alongside the government in providing services to the people arriving at the shelters.

She mentioned that discussions will be held regarding "the release of water from upstream in India without prior warning."

MURDER CASE

Menon placed on five-day remand

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday placed Rashed Khan Menon, president of Workers Party and key leader of Awami League-led 14-Party Alliance, on a five-day remand in a case filed over the death of 45-year-old trader Abdul Wadud in the city's New Market area during the quota protests on July 19.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Ali Haider passed the order after police produced him before court seeking a 10-day remand, Md Liakat Ali, a sub-inspector working in the court, told The Daily Star.

The defence also sought bail along with cancellation of the remand appeal.

Menon, a former MP who had also served in ousted prime minister Sheikh Hasina's cabinet, was arrested in Gulshan on Thursday.

On August 21, Abdur Rahman, brother-in-law of the victim, filed the case with New Market Police

More than just NUMBERS

A 16-year-old orphan fatally shot in the head in Bogura. A 24-year-old honours student shot dead by AL activists in Mymensingh. Another 28-year-old electric worker, fatally shot in the head in Dhaka. At least 400 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, parents, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

16-yr-old Shuvo killed in police firing in Bogura

MOSTAFA SHABUJ, Bogura

Md Siam Shuvo, a 16-year-old orphan from the Haddipatti area of Bogura town, was the first person to be killed in the district, during the student protests for quota reform in government jobs, on July 19.

Shuvo lived with his foster parents Ashik, a bus driver in Haddipatti area, and Shapla Khatun.

He used to collect old plastic bottles and scraps from around the town and sell them to recycling shops. The money he earned, he would give to his foster mother.

On the afternoon of July 19, Shuvo went out to collect scraps in the town's Amtola area like any other day. Around 4:00pm, protesters from the Anti-Discriminatory Student Movement were blocking the Satmata-Tinmatha road. Police tried to disperse them by spraying hot water from a water cannon, but they were unsuccessful.

'Sagor died a martyr'

Say family members of 24-year-old who was shot dead by AL activists

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Md Redwan Hossain Sagor, 24, left his home on the afternoon of July 19, saying he was going to Mymensingh Medical College Hospital. Sagor was a regular blood donor.

However, Sagor joined other students who were protesting for quota reforms in government jobs, and died as Awami League activists opened fire on protesters near the Alamgir Monsur Memorial (Minto) College area of Mymensingh city.

"We thought he went to the hospital to donate blood as usually does. However, in the evening, we came to know he died in a clash," said Sagor's father Mohammad Asaduzzaman, who runs a small business.

28-year-old Mobarak died after a bullet pierced through his head

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Mobarak Hossain, 28, went outside his house in Dhaka's Kadamtoli area on the afternoon of July 19 to buy chips for his two-and-half-year-old daughter Mehrunnesa Adiba.

Soon afterwards, he was hit by a bullet in his head as law enforcers fired at student protesters, who were demanding for quota reform, in the neighbourhood.

He was rushed to Dhaka Medical College Hospital where doctors declared him dead. His body was taken to his village home in Ananda Bazar area of Karimganj municipality in Kishoreganj the next day. He was buried at a local graveyard there.

Details of chief adviser's relief fund announced

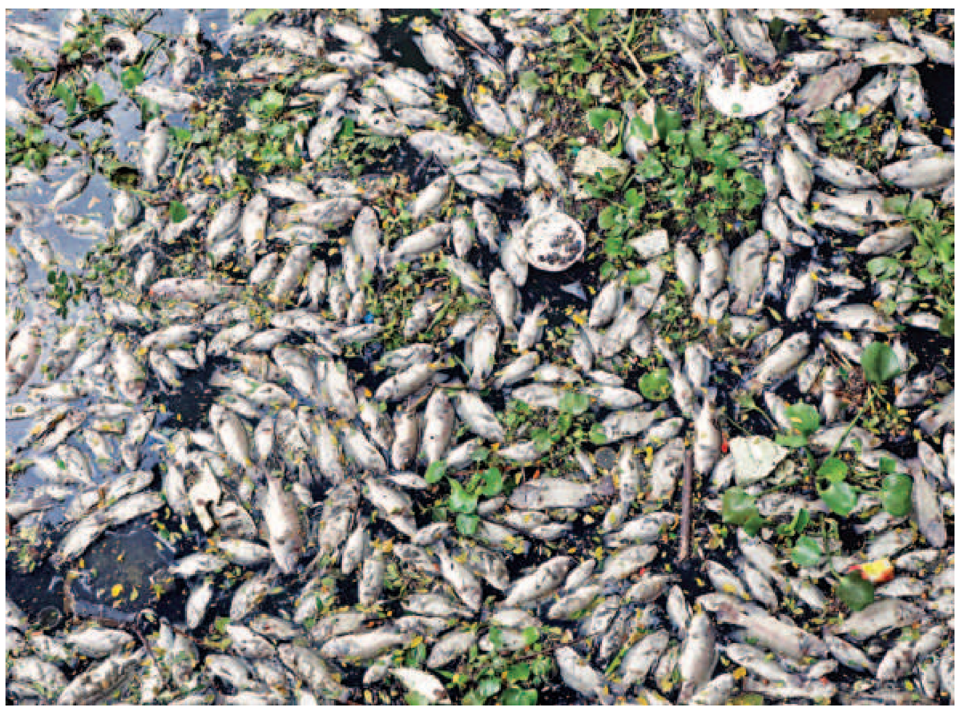
STAR REPORT

The government has expressed its appreciation for the many who are eager to assist those affected by the recent floods, according to a message from the press secretary to Chief Adviser Muhammad Yunus yesterday.

Interested individuals can send their contributions to the following account of the Chief Adviser's Relief and Welfare Fund.

Account name: Chief Advisor's Relief and Welfare Fund; Sonali Bank Corporate Branch, Chief Adviser's Office; Account Number: 010733004093.

The government assures that all donated funds will be used for relief and welfare and that proper records will be maintained.



Scores of dead fish lay on the surface of Dhanmondi lake. Locals have alleged that the fish were poisoned. The photo was taken yesterday.

Locals separate snails from their shells next to a road. Afterwards, the meat is use to make fish feed, while the shells are processed into chicken feed and sold to poultry farms. The women earn around Tk 100 for breaking each bag of snails. Around 80-100 families in the village earn their livelihood through this. The photo was taken in the Hasanpur village in Khulna recently. for him to return with chips and biscuits for her.

"Adiba does not understand that her father is no more. She still says her father will bring chips, bread and biscuit for her when he returns home," said her grandmother Jamena Begum.

Mobarak used to work at an electric shop in Dhaka's Nawabpur area. His younger brother, Mosharraf Hossain, also works there.

"As my brother returned home after offering Juma prayers, Adiba wanted to eat some chips. Mobarak then went out again to buy chips for her, when a clash between cops and students was going on outside. The cops were firing at student protesters. My brother was hit by a bullet right in front of our rented house. On information, we went out to recover his body and took him to DMCH, where doctors declared him dead," Mosharraf said.

Mobarak's untimely demise has left his wife Shanta Akter in dire straits.

"A single bullet shattered my entire family. How am I going to raise my child by myself? Who will take care of us?" she asked.

The couple had two daughters -- Mehrunnesa Adiba, and Mehrunnesa Jannat. Jannat died of Neuroblastoma, a type of cancer, a year ago at the young age of just four, said family sources.

Jannat underwent a year-long treatment before she eventually passed away. The family had to spend around Tk 9 lakh for her treatment, much of which was borrowed, leading to financial strains for the family. Mobarak's demise means this financial strain is now much worse, said Mosharraf.

"After my brother's death, the rest of the family had to remain at our village home, while I returned to Dhaka to join my job. With just my earning, it is not possible to sustain the family in Dhaka," he added.

Demanding justice for Mobarak, Mosharraf and Shanta urged authorities to properly investigate the killing to bring the perpetrators to book.

"Mobarak grew up amid poverty. He was a humble, hard-working person with no involvement in politics," said Mohammad Alauddin, the local ward commissioner.

Jahangirnagar University student Nafisa Sharmin told The Daily Star that she could not learn the whereabouts of her uncle's family for three days.

"I was able to contact my grandfather and grandmother three days back. They had said that water levels had reached the first floor of their home at that time. They were staying on the roof, but now I cannot reach them," said Jabir Abdulla, another DU student.

The ongoing floods in Bangladesh have claimed the lives of at least13 people so far, with more than 44 lakh people affected across 11 districts, according to the Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief yesterday.

Pakistan envoy meets Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

Pakistan High Commissioner to Bangladesh Syed Ahmed Maroof yesterday met BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir.

The bilateral issues, including trade and business between the two countries, and regional cooperation, came up for discussion in the hour-long meeting held at the BNP Chairperson's Gulshan office.

BNP Standing Committee Member Amir Khosru Mahmud Chowdhury and Special Assistant to the BNP Chairperson's Foreign Affairs Advisory Committee Member Shama Obaid were present at the meeting.

A nation united

between us. Through this effort, we have reached a stage where personal ideologies are set aside; what matters now is our shared identity as Bangladeshis," he told The Daily Star.

Dr Samina Luthfa, professor of Sociology at Dhaka University, said, "The way TSC became a centre for relief during the floods of '88 and '98 is something we haven't seen in a long time. These are encouraging signs. It shows that the people of Bangladesh, who have been enduring severe repression and persecution, are now trying to transform the country into a democratic one."

"Previously, everything was controlled by a specific group of people who wouldn't let others in; everything bore their mark. Since the situation changed, anyone can now contribute to any social initiative, knowing that it won't become a part of Awami League, Chhatra League, or the prime minister's relief fund," she added.

Prof Tanzim Uddin Khan echoed the sentiment.

"For the past 16 years, we have seen these kinds of initiatives be limited to the government's student organisations. But before that, during any crisis, we used to see collective participation from everyone. It seems that we have returned to that place," he said.

"This is the beauty of DU, where, in times of national crisis, everyone ensures their participation equally to overcome it," he added.

Govt mobilised

Besides, initiatives will be taken to properly manage the silt coming from upstream, while action will be taken against those engaged in illegal dredging, she added.

She said all embankments will be repaired on time to control flooding, instructing government officials to involve students and local residents in all activities.

During her visit, she was briefed on the flood situation, the condition of affected people, and the progress of rehabilitation efforts.

Prior to this, she held discussions with the local administration, media, and civil society on the flood situation in Habiganj district.

Pellets pierced his eyes

Then a clash ensued between protesters and policemen. An armoured police car came to the spot around 5:20pm and the policemen began firing pellets at the protesters indiscriminately, said Saikat Ali, a coordinator of the student protesters who was there.

During the firing, Shuvo slipped and fell while trying to flee from the spot. As he stood up again, he was hit by several pellets in his head, body and both of his eyes. Some protesters rushed him to the nearby Bogura Nursing Home, where the on-duty doctor, Md Moshiur, declared him dead at 6:30pm.

However, some protesters took his body to Bogura Shaheed Ziaur Rahman Medical College Hospital, hoping that he might still be alive, but the on-duty doctor there declared him to be dead as well.

Thus, Shuvo became the first person to lose his life amid protests in Bogura.

"Shuvo suffered a severe head injury as pellets entered his skull. He died of intracranial hemorrhage," said Md Saleh, a medical officer at the emergency department of the hospital.

Shuvo's identity could not be ascertained till around 8:30pm. Later, his foster parents were informed and they collected his body from the hospital.

"Shuvo had been living with us since he was seven-years-old. His real father was Bablu Mia of Karihat village under Nandigram upazila. Bablu had passed away earlier," said Ashik.

"I also used to collect bottles in the past, when one day I met Shuvo at Bogura Railway Station premises some nine years back. The small boy came and hugged me and called me mother. Since then, he lived with us. We have four children, but we loved him as our own son," said Shapla.

"We searched for Shuvo's family but found no one. He also refused to leave us. I demand justice for my Shuvo's death," she added.

ruined," he added, breaking into tears.

A third-year honours student of accounting at Phulbaria Degree College in Mymensingh, Sagor sustained critical bullet injuries in his chest during the clash. He was rushed to MMCH where doctors declared him dead.

Sagor's mother, Rahima Khatun, a bed-ridden cancer patient, has been unresponsive since her son's demise.

On the fateful day, Sagor repaired the water tank of the family's residence in Akua Chowrongir Mor (intersection) area before going out around 5:00pm.

"All our family's savings have been spent in the past eight years for the treatment of my mother. Due to our financial strains, bhaiya [Sagor] started working at a computer shop to bear his educational expenses as well as mine," said Sagor's younger sister Afia Tabassum Supti, a first-year honours student of management at Govt Ananda Mohan College.

"In the morning, bhaiya, our cousins and I had tea in the house. Then, in the evening, bhaiya was no more," Supti said, also breaking down in tears.

"Sagor became a martyr, shedding blood in a just movement," said his grandfather Md Siddique Hossain, 84.

Locals said Sagor was not only a meritorious student, but was always the first person to come forward and help his neighbours whenever they needed support.

Mohammad Mainuddin, officer-in-charge of Kotwali Police Station, said police lodged a case on July 20 against 600 unnamed persons over the clashes involving activists of AL and its associated organisations, and student protesters.

The clashes left Sagor dead and some 30 others injured, he also said, adding that investigation is on to identify and nab the culprits.

Army members donate one-day salary for relief

UNB, Dhaka

Members of Bangladesh Army have donated their one-day salary to aid people affected by devastating floods in various districts across the country.

According to ISPR, an amount equivalent to one day's salary of all ranks of Bangladesh Army has been donated to the Chief Adviser's Relief Fund in support of the flood victims.

"This money was paid in the service of humanity to help the victims of the recent floods in Feni, Chattogram, Cumilla, Noakhali, Sunamganj, and Habiganj," it added.

Meanwhile, the ongoing floods have claimed the lives of 13 people, with more than 44 lakh people affected across 11 districts, according to update provided by Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief yesterday.

The floods have submerged 77 upazilas, impacting 584 unions and municipalities. Over 887,000 families are suffering from the devastation, added the ministry.

US senate majority whip to visit Bangladesh

UNB, Dhaka

US Senate Majority Whip Dick Durbin, an old friend of Chief Adviser Professor Muhammad Yunus, is likely to visit Bangladesh soon.

He will meet Professor Yunus, civil society members, and media representatives during his forthcoming visit, reported yesterday.

This will be the first visit of any US politician to Bangladesh since the formation of the interim government.

Senator Dick Durbin, a Democrat from Springfield, is the 47th U.S. Senator from the State of Illinois, the state's senior senator, and the convener of Illinois' bipartisan congressional delegation.

Durbin serves as the Senate Majority Whip, the second highest ranking position among the Senate Democrats.

BARISHAL CITY CORPORATION

Uncertainty looms for Tk 797cr dev work

SUSHANTA GHOSH, Barishal

After the election to the Barishal City Corporation at the end of last year, the city authority took a Tk 797 crore mega project to develop and renovate 142 roads and 100-kilometre of drains across the city.

Upon approval by the Executive Committee of the National Economic Council, work began for renovation of 40 roads and 100-km of drains at a cost of Tk 267 crore in July this year.

However, after the Awami-League-led government resigned on August 5 following a mass upraising, all the ongoing renovation works have stopped.

With the BCC ward councillors mostly on the run, uncertainty now looms over the project's implementation.

According to BCC sources, most of the works under the project were being done by different AL influentials, including the ward councillors.

After the fall of the government, none of their whereabouts could be known. As such, all works of the project, including piling roads, construction of drains, among others, have remained suspended.

So far, at least 18 percent work for renovating 40 roads in Barishal city, including Rajkumar Ghosh Road, Nazir Mohalla Road, and Oxford Mission Road, have been completed, the sources added.

"The contractor has abandoned the work on Nazir Mohalla Road, leaving behind a pile of bricks on the under-construction road. The road is hardly in a usable state, thus causing a lot of inconveniences to commuters and local residents, especially since it is monsoon now," said Kajal Das, a local resident.

Anwara Begum, a resident of Oxford Mission Road, echoed him.

BCC sources said the mayor and ward councillors may remain absent for prolonged time amid the prevailing situation.

Contacted, Abul Bashar, executive engineer of BCC, said letters have already been sent to two contractors.

"If they leave the work, we will cancel their work orders," he added.

Nazrul Islam, owner of Latif Builders, one of the contractors, said they received several road renovation work orders in the tender and started the work, but had to stop due to lack of security in the current situation.

"We decided to observe the situation for a few days before resuming the work," he added.

Contacted, Israil Hossain, chief executive officer of BCC, said they were aware of the matter.

"A decision has been taken to speed up implementation of the ongoing development projects. If someone is unable to complete his work, the remaining work will be re-tendered," he added.

PSTU VC, treasurer resign

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Patuakhali Science and Technology University Vice-Chancellor Swadesh Chandra Samanto and Treasurer Muhammad Ali resigned yesterday evening.

Both sent their resignation letters to the education ministry amid student protests against alleged corruption and irregularities.

Md Imadul Haque Prince, deputy registrar of PSTU's publicity department, confirmed the resignations.

A wave of resignations is sweeping through the nation's higher education sector, as an unprecedented number of vice chancellors from the public universities are stepping down from their positions.

Most of these resignations took place following the ouster of prime minister Sheikh Hasina in the wake of a mass upsurge led by the students.

All the VCs' were appointed by the previous Awami League government.

Azad Majumder deputy press secy to chief adviser

STAR REPORT

Journalist Mohammad Abul Kalam Azad Majumder was appointed yesterday as a deputy press secretary to the Chief Adviser of the interim government, Prof Muhammad Yunus.

The public administration ministry issued a circular confirming his contractual appointment. Azad Majumder previously served as the joint news editor of the English daily New Age.

He was also the Bangladesh correspondent for Agencia EFE, a leading Spanish news agency, and is a former sports and lifestyle correspondent for Thomson Reuters and former sports correspondent for Agence France-Presse (AFP).

Additionally, Azad Majumder is a member of the global talent pool at The Washington Post and has written for various international newspapers. He has also worked with The Business Post, Daily Manab Zamin, and Prothom Alo. Azad Majumder is a graduate of Dhaka University.

Inst for planning and dev against cancelling DAP

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Institute for Planning and Development has urged the interim government to investigate groups pushing for the cancellation of the Detailed Area Plan (DAP)-2022 for their own business interests, warning that such moves could lead to unplanned urban development.

In a virtual press conference yesterday, IPD leaders called for the recovery of all water bodies and wetlands encroached upon by housing projects, emphasising the need for exemplary punishment for those responsible.

Adil Mohammed Khan, IPD Director, expressed concern over a recent gazette notification amending the DAP (2016-2035) to relax the Floor Area Ratio (FAR) in certain areas.

He criticised the decision as being made under pressure from real estate interests, bypassing planners and the working committee.

He warned that this could undermine the government's commitment to a livable city, especially in light of Dhaka's recent severe flooding.

IPD Advisor Prof Aktar Mahmud questioned the contribution of housing developers to the lower and lower-middle classes, noting the abundance of vacant plots in projects like Purbachal and Uttara Phase III. He stressed sustainable planning that preserves agricultural land and floodplains.

Dr Chowdhury Zaber Sadeque, an IPD director, criticised housing developers for prioritising the upper class, making homeownership unaffordable for ordinary citizens.

Station against Sheikh Hasina, Menon, and 128 others. Recently, Menon has also been made Hasina's co-accused in a number of cases over the deaths in clashes between protesters and law enforcers during the student-led movement. During the past AL governments, Menon first served as civil aviation and tourism minister, and later as social welfare minister. He was elected MP from Barishal-2 in the last national polls.

ATTACK ON POLICE STATION

Cops sue 30,000 in Araihazar

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narayanganj

Police have sued 25,000-30,000 unnamed people in a case filed yesterday afternoon over vandalising, torching and looting Araihazar Police Station on August 5.

Sub-inspector Ripon Ahammed filed the case with Araihazar Police Station, said Ahsan Ullah, officer-in-charge of the station.

However, no one has been arrested so far.

According to case documents, after the fall of the former Awami League government, 25,000-30,000 people attacked the police station around 3:45pm on August 5. They vandalised and torched the station complex and looted firearms and ammunitions.

At least 21 police personnel were injured in the incident. Police were forced to open fire in self defense and managed to escape the station before taking shelter in a local mosque, states the case report.

Floods in Tripura displace tens of thousands

Death toll rises to 23; Gomti river still above danger mark

REUTERS, Guwahati

Soldiers in lifeboats ferried people to safety in India's northeastern state of Tripura yesterday after heavy rain triggered floods and landslides, forcing more than 65,000 people from their homes and killing 23, authorities said.

Television images showed army personnel manning the rescue craft, while cars and buses were marooned in streets of knee-deep water, and disaster management officials said four days of incessant rain had swelled rivers.

"As of this morning, most rivers are flowing below the critical mark," said one of them, Suman Deb, although the intensity of the rain had reduced since Thursday night.

"However, the river Gomti still continues to flow above the danger mark," Deb said, referring to the state's main river, which flows through the district of Comilla in neighbouring Bangladesh to empty into the Bay of Bengal.

The displaced have gathered in 450 camps, the officials said, with a total of about 1.7 million affected, along with extensive damage to infrastructure, crops and livestock.

Most deaths were caused by landslides, though some followed the collapse of mud walls and drowning, another official said on condition of anonymity as he was not authorised to speak to the media.

Sit down for talks with Russia

Modi urges Zelensky in wartime Kyiv, offers to act as a friend to help bring peace; Russian strikes kill eight civilians across Ukraine

REUTERS, Kyiv

India's Narendra Modi yesterday urged President Volodymyr Zelensky to sit down for talks with Russia to end the war in Ukraine and offered to act as a friend to help bring peace as the two leaders met in wartime Kyiv.

The first visit by an Indian prime minister in modern Ukrainian history comes at a volatile juncture in the war launched by Russia in February 2022, with Moscow making slow gains in eastern Ukraine as Kyiv presses a cross-border incursion.

Modi, whose visit to Moscow last month was criticised by Kyiv, said he had come to Ukraine with a message of peace and called for dialogue between Russia and Ukraine at the earliest opportunity.

"The road to resolution can only be found through dialogue and diplomacy. And we should move in that direction without wasting any time. Both sides should sit together to find a way out of this crisis," Modi said.

"I want to assure you that India is ready to play an active role in any efforts towards peace. If I can play any role in this personally, I will do that I want to assure you as a friend," he said.

The remarks were made during joint statements, in which both leaders hailed the visit as "historic". Modi spoke second and Zelensky did not have an opportunity to respond to the call for dialogue.

But the Ukrainian leader said in his remarks that "the matter of ending the war and a just peace are the priority for Ukraine".

Ukraine has repeatedly said it wants the war to end but on Kyiv's terms, not Russia's. Ukraine has been pushing to hold a second international summit later this year to advance its vision of peace and involve representatives from Russia.

Meanwhile, Russian strikes killed eight civilians across Ukraine, regional authorities announced yesterday.

Attacks killed two in northeastern Sumy region, the national police said. Further to the east, in the Kharkiv region bordering Russia, two civilians died in an attack, regional governor Oleg Synegubov said.

Lanka flags civil service pay hike ahead of vote

AFP, Colombo

Bankrupt Sri Lanka will offer hefty salary increases and higher pensions to civil servants, President Ranil Wickremesinghe's office said yesterday just weeks before September 21 polls in which he is seeking re-election.

Wickremesinghe is seeking a mandate in September's presidential polls for his efforts to repair the island nation's ruined finances after an unprecedented 2022 economic crisis and $46 billion foreign debt default.

Despite hiking taxes and reining in public spending, in line with an International Monetary Fund (IMF) rescue plan, his administration has backed a government committee's recommendation to boost public sector pay from next January.

"Regardless of which government is in power, there is a pressing need to increase the salaries of public servants," his office said in a statement.

The committee recommended increasing salaries by 25 to 50 percent, boosting pensions and expanding healthcare benefits for government workers.

Israeli strikes on Lebanon's south kill seven people

AFP, Beirut

Lebanon's health ministry said yesterday Israeli strikes killed seven people including a child in different parts of the south, with Hezbollah saying three of its fighters were among the dead.

Hezbollah, which is backed by Iran, has exchanged regular fire with Israel in support of its ally Hamas since the Israeli offensive in Gaza began on October. The health ministry said an "Israeli enemy drone strike" killed two people including a "seven-year-old" in Aita al-Shaab, and two other "Israeli" strikes killed five people in three other locations in the south.

Lebanon's state-run National News Agency said a "hostile drone" targeted a house in Aita al-Shaab with "two guided missiles". The health ministry said Israeli strikes included a raid "on the village of Tayr Harfa that killed three people", with Hezbollah later mourning three fighters killed by Israeli fire, including a man from that same village.

Shadman

316-5 at stumps on day three after Pakistan declared at 448 for six late on Day 2.

Bangladesh saw a stable opening pair in Joy and Zakir Hasan in their last five Tests in between June 2023 and March 2024 and the injury of the former surely brought some anxiety in the camp before the opening Test as Shadman, who was a reserve opener in the current 16-member squad, hadn't played a Test since April 2022.

The southpaw was dropped following his poor show against South Africa in Durban where he could make only nine and zero in both innings and was unpicked in Bangladesh's next 13 Tests.

Bangladesh found their back against the door on the third day after they resumed on 27-0 as they soon lost Zakir (12) and skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto (16) to get reduced to 53-2.

Despite the fall of two wickets, Shadman showcased great patience, playing a composed innings from one side with his partner Mominul Haque taking charge from the other hand.

Shadman's determination could be gauged from the fact that he struck his first boundary during the 24th over of the day.

The 29-year-old reached his third Test fifty in 123 balls with another boundary -- a pull at deep backward square leg off Naseem Shah.

Shadman's fifty was also a big relief for Bangladesh as ever since the historic 312-run opening stand between Tamim Iqbal and Imrul Kayes in Khulna in 2015 -- a game in which both openers struck tons -- no Bangladeshi openers were able to score a fifty against Pakistan in the following four Tests.

The only instance when Shadman looked to be troubled by Pakistani bowlers was when he was given LBW off an Agha Salman delivery just after the lunch break, but that decision had to be reversed following a review.

However, he failed to finish on a high as he was bowled by pacer Mohammad Ali in the last ball before tea.

By the time Shadman got dismissed, he already laid a solid platform for his side and also for himself as he had all but regained his lost spot in the Test eleven.

Bangladesh now trail by 132 runs and would hope at least one of the unbeaten set batters -- Liton Das, who scored 52 off 58 deliveries, and Mushfiqur Rahim, who is on 55 off 122 deliveries -- get to the three-figure mark that Shadman had missed out on.

UN watchdog wants action on UK 'racist acts and violence'

AFP, Geneva

A United Nations committee yesterday voiced concern about recurring racist violence in Britain following the recent anti-immigration riots, and called for measures to curb "racist hate speech" by politicians.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) demanded thorough investigations into racist hate crimes, and strong penalties for the perpetrators.

"The committee expressed its concern about the persistence of hate crimes, hate speech and xenophobic incidents on various platforms and by politicians and public figures," it said in a statement.

"It was particularly concerned about recurring racist acts and violence against ethnic and ethno-religious minorities, migrants, refugees and asylum-seekers by extremist far-right and white supremacist individuals and groups, including the violent acts committed in late July and early August 2024."

More than a dozen English towns and cities saw unrest and riots. Officials have accused far-right elements of stirring up the disorder, which targeted mosques and hotels housing asylum seekers as well as other properties and police officers.

NSU VC Atiqul Islam, also an ex-officio member of the reconstituted trustee board, refused to clarify the current situation.

"I don't have any clarification regarding the prevailing situation. I don't know anything," he told this newspaper yesterday.

Prof Biswajit Chanda, University Grants Commission (UGC) member responsible for overseeing private universities, declined to make comments.

On Tuesday, the High Court bench of Justice Naima Haider and Justice Sashanka Shekhar issued a stay on the government's decision that reconstituted the NSU trustee board in August 2022.

The court passed the order and a rule after hearing two writ petitions filed by Aziz, Azim, Benajir, MA Kashem, Rehana and Shahjahan.

Md Imam Hossain and Kazi Akhtar Hosain, lawyers for the petitioners, told reporters that the previous trustee board was revived through the HC order.

The NSU, one of the leading private universities in the country, was established in 1992. It has about 23,000 students.

WHY BOARD WAS RECONSTITUTED?

Then president Abdul Hamid on August 16, 2022, reconstituted the NSU Board of Trustees, dropping seven of its former members.

Hamid, also then chancellor of the university, reconstituted the board as some members of the previous board were found to be "involved in anti-state activities, sponsorship of militancy, corruption and arbitrariness" in a probe by the UGC.

He also cut the number of board members to 12 from 16.

The seven dropped previous trustee board members are Azim Uddin Ahmed, Benajir Ahmed, Aziz Al Kaiser, MA Kashem, Rehana Rahman, Mohammed Shajahan, and Nurul H Khan.

The ex-president, however, kept nine of the previous board members in the new one -- ex-officio member Atiqul Islam, MA Kalam, SM Kamaluddin, Abul Kashem, Yasmin Kamal, ASF Rahman, Junaid Kamal Ahmad, Fawzia Naaz and Tanveer Harun.

Three new faces were added to the board -- Javed Munir Ahmed, Faiza Jamil and Sheema Ahmed. Javed was later made chairman of the board.

This correspondent did not find the names of the trustees on the NSU website yesterday.

A member of the previous trustee board yesterday said the decision on reconstituting the board came following pressure from different offices and agencies of the previous Sheikh Hasina-led government. He said four members of a single family were even made trustees.

Meanwhile, a group of NSU students have been staging demonstrations for more than a week to press home their 30-point demand, including removal of the VC and several top officials, reformation of the proctorial body, ban on student politics and waiver of tuition and other fees.

Kaiser yesterday said students have put forward some demands, including removal of the VC. "We are yet to take any decision on terminating him."

the independence of the judiciary, protecting the rights of workers and farmers, and ensuring democratic campus free of occupation," reads the press release.

After every mass uprising, it was seen that fascism was reestablished and all the achievements made at the cost of human lives were in vain, it said.

"This mass uprising cannot be allowed to fail. So, a unified platform comprising all forces that took part in democratic movements is necessary. That is why this committee has been formed."

The joint conveners of the committee are Prof Haroon-ur-Rashid, Abdullah Kafi Ratan, Prof Tanjimuddin Khan, Seema Dutt, Maha Mirza and Kallol Mustafa.

The committee members include Prof Anu Muhammad, Prof Salimullah Khan, Prof Akmal Hossain, Prof Mamun Al Rashid, Prof Mohammad Azam, Moshahida Sultana Ritu, Snigdha Rezwana, journalist Abu Saeed Khan, Ashraf Qaiser, Bidhan Riberu, Anis Raihan, Chowdhury Mufad Ahmed, ASM Kamal Uddin, Afzalur Basar, Mazharul Islam Babla, lawyers Jyotirmoy Barua and Manzoor Al Mateen, writer and artist Mostafa Zaman, artist Arup Rahi, Mofizur Rahman Laltu, Bithi Ghosh, Sushmita Roy Supti, Azimun Nuzhat Manisha, Omar Tarek Chowdhury, Jamshed Anwar Tapan, film producers Amitabh Reza Chowdhury and Kamar Ahmad Simon, Prof Kazi Rafiqul Islam, Baki Billah, Joydeep Bhattacharya, Nasimul Khabir Deik, Taslima Akhtar Lima, Jolly Talukder, Amena Khatun, Sunayan Chakma, Haroon-or-Rashid Bhuiyan, Manas Nandi, Shamim Imam, Satyajit Biswas, Iqbal Kabir, Afzal Hossain and Rashed Shahriar.

was rushed to the hospital with bullets in his chest and stomach. He died on August 7.

Hasina is also facing charges of ordering the killing of Dhaka Commerce College student Abdul Ahad Saikat in Savar. His father Nazrul Islam also accused 126 others in the case yesterday, Savar Model Police Station OC Atiqur Rahman said.

The other accused include AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader, ex-minister Asaduzzaman, former state minister Arafat, and former state minister for disaster management Enamur Rahman.

According to the case details, they ordered the Chhatra League, Jubo League, and Awami League members to carry out the attack.

Nazrul said in the case that his son was killed when he participated in the student-led mass uprising against "systematic inequalities" on August 5, the day Hasina resigned and fled.

According to the case dossier, Saikat was brutally beaten and shot on Mukti Road. He was declared dead upon arrival at the hospital. OC Atiqur said they were investigating the incident.

Another case was filed at the same police station over the death of Malaysian expatriate Shraban Gazi, 20. Shraban's father Mannan Gazi filed the case against 85 AL leaders and activists, including Quader, Asaduzzaman, Arafat, and Enamur.

Protest victims' families filed nine other murder cases against AL leaders in different parts of the country, including five in Ashulia and three in Sirajganj.

The Ashulia victims were meat seller Lebu, 20, Maulana Sadiqur Rahman, Tanzil Ahmed Sujoy, Class VIII student Arafat Munshi, and BNP activist Mamun Khandkar. All of them were shot dead in the Baipile area on August 5. Their family members named a total of 78 people and around 1,200 unidentified individuals in the cases.

In Sirajganj, ex-MPs Jannat Ara Henry, Millat Munna, former cabinet secretary Kabir Bin Anwar, and 461 AL men were sued in three cases on charges of killing three BNP men – Md Ronju Sheikh, a joint convener of Sirajganj district Jubo Dal, Jubo Dal activist Abdul Latif and Chhatra Dal activist Sumon Sheikh.

Their family members filed the cases at Sirajganj Sadar Police Station on Thursday night, OC Md Humayun Kabir said.

In Dhamrai, former Dhaka-20 MP Benjir Ahmed and 81 others were sued over the death of Ariful Islam Sader, 18, a student of Savar Cantonment Public College, by his father Azim Uddin.

In Barishal, the accused in a case over vandalising and looting the BNP office include former state minister for water resources Zahid Farooq, and former city corporation mayors Abul Khair Abdullah and Serniabat Sadiq Abdullah.

Staying silent is never an option: SAFA KABIR

At the outset of the anti-discrimination student movement, only a few artistes voiced their support. Among those who did was actress Safa Kabir, who felt a sense of duty and stepped out of her comfort zone to ask, "Why are these kids being beaten on the roads?" She also suggested that these students are young and need to be dealt with love, not aggression, leaving her message to the protestors, "Dear students, I'm with you all."

SHARMIN JOYA

In a conversation with The Daily Star, she shared her thoughts on her vision for a new nation, the current crisis in the entertainment industry, and more.

Feeling suffocated by the situation, Safa decided to raise her voice against the injustice and stand in solidarity with the students. On July 19, she, along with her friends, joined the protests on the streets, determined to support their cause.

"For any sane and sensible person, staying silent was not an option after witnessing the brutal treatment of innocent students on the streets," remarked Safa. She was devastated to see the unarmed Abu Sayeed shot to death. "I thought, this is it—as a human being, I have to raise my voice to stop such brutality."

At that time, Safa drew her strength from friends who stood by the students alongside her. They included Redoan Rony, Adnan Al Rajeev, Subrina Irine, Mostafa Monwar, Shankha Dasgupta, Aniqa Zaheen, and Sami. "I am blessed to have such compassionate friends who stepped forward. The lives of the young people lost will never return, and we all sought an immediate solution to end the conflict surrounding the protest."

Safa mentioned that she felt an instant change within herself on July 19, when she chose not to back down but move forward after seeing a group of people approaching with sticks and firebombs in their hands. "I realised these couldn't be students—these were people intent on harming innocent, unarmed citizens on the streets. Despite being extremely sensitive to any form of violence, I decided to confront the situation."

What changes does the actress want to see the interim government making? — "I want to see a country that ensures safety for all its citizens, particularly on the roads, where frequent accidents claim many lives. Second, our poorly structured systems need urgent upgrades. Last but not least, I envision a technologically advanced Bangladesh. If we want to compete globally, we must have the ability to do so. The young generation, who have opened new avenues for us, must be provided with all the resources and accessibility they need to elevate the country to an international level."

The actress, known for her humble nature, feels that her contribution pales in comparison to what others did. While the students were managing traffic, Safa supported them by providing food and water. "I did my best to stand by those who, on behalf of the nation, fought for their rights. When they stood in extreme heat or rain, I could relate to their struggle, as we endure similar conditions during shoots. Their smiles made me feel that it was a lifetime achievement."

> The actress, known for her humble nature, feels that her contribution pales in comparison to what others did. While the students were managing traffic, Safa supported them by providing food and water.

The actress returned to shooting after a long break on August 20. She noted that the industry, like many other sectors, is going through a tough time. "Many people depend on this industry for their livelihood. Although it is slowly regaining its rhythm, the main challenge at the moment is people are not willing to invest. Also, the small screen sector, in particular, needs many changes. For instance, we don't have any paperwork procedure before we take on a project, which is a mandatory task for other sectors. Implementing a systematic approach is now essential."

WHAT'S ON THE GRAM

HUGH JACKMAN AND BLAKE LIVELY

While Deadpool & Wolverine and It Ends With Us captivate audiences and shatter records in North American theatres, their brilliant stars, Blake Lively and Hugh Jackman, have graced Vogue's September 2024 issue in an homage to Alfred Hitchcock's classic 1955 film To Catch a Thief.

This exquisite tribute, captured through the lens of Baz Luhrmann, melds cinematic history with contemporary elegance in a stunning modern reinterpretation of the classic movie.

WHAT'S PLAYING

JULY

July by EIDA is a raw and poignant tribute to the tragic events of the student-led mass uprising that shook the nation. Released on August 4, the song captures the anguish and resilience of those who faced brutal repression during the July massacre.

The lyrics are haunting, with vivid depictions of violence —"Bloodstains on backpacks" and "Sound grenades, tear shells"— that bring the horror to life. The refrain, "Tell me how you kill the will?" resonates deeply, challenging the forces that sought to crush the spirit of resistance.

With Shahryar's artwork depicting "Ek" (one) written in bloody red to represent the "Ek Dofa" (one demand), July is not just a song, but a powerful reminder of the revolution the country has witnessed.

TV TALKIES

'The Umbrella Academy' Season 4:A wildly preposterous ending

The Umbrella Academy, one of Netflix's most unique and unconventional successes in recent years recently concluded its story in its fourth season in the most audaciously preposterous way.

This quirky superhero tale with several loose ends needed resolution, including those involving Gene, Jean, the Keepers, Jennifer, and Allison's betrayal, among other factors.

This season, fresh off having lived without their powers for the past six years, the Hargreeves siblings seem to find a way to get them back, albeit at the cost of their health.

The realisation that the timeline they had been living on would once again come to an end led to further confusion, especially when it was revealed that their very existence was ultimately inconsequential, with the Cleanse—another word for the apocalypse—looming.

Steve Blackman and Jeremy Slater's concoction for this fourth and final season was swift and to the point, but it was possibly the first time that the ending of a superhero series resulted in the death of all the main heroes.

We must reduce our vulnerability to flood

Signs of resilience as severe flooding tests the nation

The ongoing flood has once again highlighted the need for taking decisive actions to reduce our vulnerability to seasonal disasters. With climate change, our internal river management problems, and unresolved external issues with India exposing the fault lines for a country otherwise known for its disaster preparedness, the time has come for Bangladesh to approach this issue with the urgency that it deserves, especially considering the huge human and economic tolls. Reports coming from the ground are quite alarming: at least 13 lives lost and over 44 lakh people affected in 11 districts as of Friday evening. In other words, over 887,000 families remain marooned, with about 77 upazilas under water.

The Feni and Cumilla situations remain as dire as before. In Cumilla, the collapse of an embankment on the Gumti River has left about 500,000 people stranded. People in other districts are also facing severe challenges. Despite all that, one reason to be hopeful about the direction in which Bangladesh is going at present is the spontaneous response of people to help with the aid and rescue efforts. Besides government initiatives in collaboration with the military, coast guard, and emergency services, private platforms and student volunteers have come up in large numbers, reflecting the nation's solidarity at this moment of crisis. They are working with considerable challenges, including the lack of electricity and communication disruptions, with a large number of people in flood-hit districts still disconnected.

That said, we must turn our focus to what's causing the severe flooding and how to reduce our vulnerabilities. Since August 19, the country's eastern region has experienced extremely heavy rainfall for three consecutive days, the highest in 53 years. This, combined with upstream flooding and the narrowing of water drainage paths in Bangladesh, has rapidly deteriorated the situation. This was compounded by inadequate early warning systems. A critical factor in this is the lack of warning about upstream water flows from the Indian authorities, which experts say has exacerbated the situation. Effective cross-border water management and better coordination with India are essential to improve our response. The Joint River Commission and the National River Conservation Commission (NRCC) have a huge role to play in this regard, which they must do.

In addition to cross-border river issues, encroachments and blockages in Bangladesh's river systems are another major concern. The estimates given by the NRCC about river encroachers show how the latter have encroached river land across the country, exacerbating the impact of flooding. Going forward, we must bring these encroachers to book and improve water flow in our rivers. A comprehensive approach to flood management is necessary. This includes restoring natural river channels, addressing encroachments, and strengthening regional cooperation and the effectiveness of relevant institutions to prevent future disasters.

Enforced disappearance commission must provide answer, justice

We welcome the interim government's decision to establish a commission to investigate all the cases of enforced disappearance in Bangladesh. The government also seems on track to sign the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, making the country answerable to international forums. These moves mark a clear departure from the Awami League government's policy of denial, misrepresentation, and inaction on this issue.

Through these efforts, the country can finally expect some clarity on something the very existence of which was repeatedly rejected by the previous regime. The families of those who were disappeared, mostly critics and political rivals of the Awami League, can finally hope to get justice and closure. According to rights organisation Odhikar, at least 708 people were victims of enforced disappearance between 2009 and 2024. Although many have since returned, at least 158 are still believed missing, according to Mayer Dak, a platform for the families of victims of enforced disappearance. Meanwhile, those who returned did not, until recently, speak up about their experience in fear of further retribution.

After the fall of Sheikh Hasina, several victims were released from the secret internment facilities, including what is popularly known as Aynaghar. This gave many hope that their loved ones might still be alive in one of the other 23 facilities apparently run by the Directorate General of Forces Intelligence (DGFI). The challenge now is to ensure transparency and accountability in the investigative process without the interference of political and security entities that stand accused of committing the crime. The decision to appoint a person with the rank of a High Court judge as the head of the commission—and members with prior experience of working on prevention of enforced disappearances—is a step in the right direction, but they must be empowered enough to do their job right. The chief adviser's recent meeting with Mayer Dak has raised hopes of establishing justice for the victims.

As the legal framework of the commission is being drafted, we would also urge the government to create provisions to prevent future governments from exploiting security agencies to commit such heinous crimes—not just enforced disappearances, but also extrajudicial killings and custodial torture—for political purposes. For that, it is not enough to just bring to justice those involved in these gross violations of human rights. It must pursue reforms to insulate security agencies from the corrupt influences of politics and politicians, and end the culture of impunity for their crimes.

Revolutionary changes needed to deal with floods

Much of eastern Bangladesh is under water right now. The flood-affected areas extend from Sylhet in the north through Cumilla, Feni and Noakhali to Cox's Bazar in the south. People need help and it is encouraging to see that the students and young people, together with others, have engaged themselves with the relief work.

Global, regional, and national drivers have all combined to create the current flood disaster. The global driver is embodied by climate change, one of whose effects is the increase the frequency, scope, and intensity of extreme weather events, including untimely and excessive rainfall. The main cause of the ongoing flooding is excessive rainfall in India's Tripura state as well as in Bangladesh. Climate change is also causing sea-level rise, which slows down the passage of river water to the sea, thus aggravating and prolonging flooding. In the coming days, this may play a significant role in Feni and Noakhali districts, which are close to the sea.

The regional drivers are rooted in the fact that about 90 percent of the water that flows through Bangladesh's rivers originate outside—mostly in India. Almost all the water from the torrential rain that fell in Tripura (about 330mm in just two days of August 20-21) came to Bangladesh through Gumti, Khowai, Feni, Muhuri, Manu and other rivers and added to the rainwater that fell inside Bangladesh to cause the flooding. Some water also came from the reservoir (about 60 sq-km) of the 30-metre-tall Dumbur Dam that India has constructed on the Gumti River, about 120 kilometres from the Bangladesh border. Some reports suggest that gates of this reservoir were deliberately opened to release water. The Indian high commissioner to Bangladesh, however, maintained that the release was an automatic process, triggered by the reservoir's water level exceeding a certain limit. Be that as it may, there is no doubt that water, released from the reservoir, added to the volume of water that caused the flooding.

This is another example of the increasingly man-made character of flooding in Bangladesh, i.e. flooding caused or aggravated by decisions made by the operators of the dams and barrages that India has built on almost all rivers that it shares with Bangladesh. Consequently, India's river intervening structures not only reduce dry season flow in Bangladesh's rivers, but have also become a source of untimely and more severe floods. This has particularly been the case with the Teesta basin in Bangladesh, where residents have witnessed seven such floods in a recent year alone.

It is well-known that the previous government failed miserably in protecting Bangladesh's right on its rivers. For political reasons, it approached India as a supplicant and allowed it to do whatever it wanted with the rivers, with little resistance offered. Yet, just as Bangladesh depends on India for river flows, India also depends on Bangladesh for easy access to its seven northeastern states. In 2013, the Bangladesh Environment Network (BEN) put forward the "transit in exchange for rivers" formula, under which India would restore the natural flows of the shared rivers and, in exchange, Bangladesh would grant India transit and transshipment facilities to access its northeastern states. BAPA and BEN have also been urging the Bangladesh government to sign the 1997 UN Convention on the Law of the Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses, which forbids a country from intervening in shared rivers without the consent of other co-riparian countries. We hope that the interim government, with a renowned environmentalist in charge of the water ministry, will lose no time to sign the 1997 UN convention and use it in negotiations with India under the "transit in exchange for rivers" framework.

Of course, national (domestic) drivers are the ones over which Bangladesh has the greatest control. In this regard, the current floods further vindicate the necessity of moving away from the Cordon approach towards the rivers, which Bangladesh has been following since the 1950s, to the Open approach. While the former approach strives to constrict rivers (by constructing embankments) to their channels only, the latter one allows rivers to overflow onto the floodplains during the rainy season. This allows floodplains to serve as an additional passage for river water to move to the sea and for sediment to be deposited on floodplains, raising their elevation. Under the Cordon approach, the opposite happens: the elevation of floodplains cannot increase, while sediment gets deposited on river beds, raising their level. Consequently, after some time, the riverbed reaches an elevation that is higher than that of the adjoining floodplains. The Gumti River embankment illustrates this perverse outcome. In many places of Cumilla district, the riverbed has a higher elevation. One can easily imagine the catastrophe that can result if the embankment breaches in such places—as seen when the embankment collapsed in the Burichang upazila in the early hours of yesterday, flooding several villages. About five lakh people are now marooned in the area.

Once the immediate tasks related to the relief and rehabilitation necessitated by the floods are dealt with, the interim government will have to make a clean break from the Cordon approach and make the Open approach the official policy. The mindset of the personnel in all water-related agencies has to change. Instead of a money-making business of politicians, bureaucrats, engineers, and contractors, water development has to be about the noble business of serving people. Embankments have to be gradually opened up, the obstructions on the floodplains have to be removed, and the sediment has to be used to raise the ground of villages and towns. All roads in floodplains have to be built on pillars. In short, revolutionary changes have to be brought about in the water sector of the country. That is the only way we will be able to protect the people from the recurring pain and suffering caused by floods. That is how we will be able to equip Bangladesh and its people to confront the impact of climate change.

A tolerant society must respect differing opinions

is an international development worker.

LAILA KHONDKAR

The dean of Harvard Kennedy School sometimes meets students—usually a group of seven or eight—over breakfast or lunch to have discussions. There is no specific agenda; students can express their opinions or suggestions on any matter. Over a year ago, I had the chance to have such a discussion with the dean over lunch as I was studying there for a mid-career course. During our lunch, the dean listened to everyone, took notes, responded to questions, and said he would raise some of the issues that were discussed with other faculty members.

Whether everyone can openly express their opinions on political and social issues also came up in our discussion. The dean commented, "It is believed that most of the teachers and students at Harvard Kennedy School support the Democratic Party. That's why the supporters of the Republican Party here are usually reluctant to share their own opinions." He added, "It hurts both the Democrats and the Republicans." The dean was interested in having more students supporting the Republican Party so that discussions and debates could be more diverse and meaningful.

A professor who taught exercising leadership once told us, "Talk more with those with opinions different from yours. Try to understand their perspectives." His suggestion was simple. If someone says something completely contrary to one's thoughts, instead of reacting strongly, one should express interest and say, "Tell me more about it." This inquisitive mindset can lead to effective communication and generate new learning.

Listening to others does not mean agreeing with them, but acknowledging that different opinions exist and seeking to understand them is crucial. But is it actually happening? Harvard Kennedy School, like other places in the United States, has what is called the "cancel culture." If someone says or does something that others find "unacceptable," the tendency to boycott or isolate them is called "cancelling." According to some analyses, cancel culture has provided an opportunity for marginalised members of society to voice their opinions. Others believe that it narrows free speech and makes debates impossible. However, almost everyone agrees that the cancel culture has grown with the expansion of social media. As a result, many people are afraid to express their thoughts, especially if they don't conform to the views of the majority.

In Bangladesh, are we interested in knowing and understanding everyone's perspective on an issue? Can we have a constructive debate on anything—be it politics, social change, sports or entertainment? Or does it turn into an argument in no time?

Someone may have a different way of thinking from us about society and politics and their way of living, but that does not mean that they are "wrong." Has the internet liberated us mentally, or are we living in a bubble with like-minded people? Many people are constantly expressing their views on all sorts of social, political and cultural issues in private chats or on social media. But is there a real exchange of ideas?

I have observed that many people in our society suffer from confirmation bias, which means they only believe in evidence that confirms their existing views and disregard other information. However, it is important to maintain an open mind, challenge various ideas and also get challenged by others. Having candid conversations is intellectually stimulating and is a sign of maturity.

Extreme polarisation has happened in different parts of the world, making debates challenging. In any society, there has to be a space for many kinds of discussions to look at an issue from all perspectives. Unfortunately, that space seems to be shrinking every day. The rise of populism has contributed to a situation where rhetoric is more important than sound reason and evidence. The ability to critically examine an issue and not jumping to quick conclusions remains critical if we are to become responsible members of a tolerant, democratic and inclusive society.

Last year, I had an opportunity to visit the ancient Agora of Athens. This place was at the centre of public life in Athens; from trade to legislation—everything was done here. A professor of political philosophy explained that in Athens, questioning and debates were encouraged, and welcoming foreigners and their ideas was normal. Many of Athens's famous philosophers came from other cities, and they enriched the ancient city. Another Greek city, Sparta, however, was the opposite. There was no place for foreigners, and dissent was not tolerated. Are many countries in the world becoming Sparta? In that case, is that not a serious threat to democracy?

If we start a discussion with the attitude of clinging to our opinions, it does not get us very far. Prof Julia Minson of Harvard University proposed an approach so that people can have open, meaningful conversations, termed HEAR: i) hedge your claims (i.e., do not express opinions too blatantly); ii) emphasise agreement; iii) acknowledge other perspectives; and iv) reframe to the positive. The point is to respect others' opinions. In building an inclusive, democratic society, tolerance is paramount, and it is particularly important to give space to opposing views. Are we creating an environment in our society where reason prevails?

The triumphs and challenges of a generation in flux

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza
is professor of English at Dhaka University.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

The timing of the flood couldn't have been worse. The country is yet to recover from the political storm that has created an administrative vacuum both at the centre and in the periphery. The students are once again at the forefront by reaching out to the victims of the flood that has inundated the country's eastern region.

The creativity and passion with which they are collecting funds, identifying essential items, creating support networks, and undertaking rescue missions are remarkable. This is another example of our youth rising to the occasion. Social media displays their activism, allowing us to hear their humanitarian voices and connect with their peers. However, we must avoid any undue and oversimplistic expectation that this generation alone will change everything overnight. Such expectations will place huge pressure on this generation that is still coming of age. And they may not have yet developed a thorough idea of the complex and intricate nature of the problems that they are dealing with. I believe that in order for us to move forward as a country with all of its desired reforms, we need to have a reality check and emphasise intergenerational dynamics.

The young generation's rise to prominence in politics is both phenomenal and accidental. What began as a movement among some public university graduates seeking systemic changes for equal job opportunities transformed into a singular demand: regime change. The tide has turned. The autocratic regime is toppled. A new challenge has now emerged: filling the power vacuum.

We have thrust many of our students into leadership roles. Thankfully, an interim government comprising experienced civil society and public service members assists them in understanding the institutional knowledge and the intricacies of the governance machinery. But due to the movement's spontaneity and sporadic nature, there is no clearly defined leadership. The coordination team represents the movement, but many volunteers and local enthusiasts are operating in uncharted areas. This inexperience, combined with their youthful idealism, is likely to cause missteps.

There is also a risk of elevating the leaders through excessive praise. We should use constructive criticism as a stimulus for meaningful change. The nation does not require further reminders about the negative effects of hero worship and the formation of cults. Generation Z, like any generation, is not a homogenous entity. Many of them are deeply committed to political change, but they vary in their scope and conviction. Leaders of the movement, when elevated to positions of power, may not accurately reflect the diverse views and concerns of all their peers representing different social strata.

The recent cancellation of HSC exams will be a classic example. A group of students stormed the Secretariat and demanded immediate annulment of the public examination. An adviser attempted to reason with the students, but to no effect. Their threats of violence compelled the government to concede to a proposal to prepare results based on the examinations that they have appeared in so far. With the memory of the quota reform movement still vivid, the government probably did not want to risk exacerbating the situation. The caution is understandable, but it will lead to further complications. Not surprisingly, another group of students have contradicted the demand of their peers, as they feel that the compromised results based on partial exams will jeopardise their future in competitive exams, higher studies, and selection of majors. Mobocracy drowned out their response.

This incident exemplifies a troubling aspect where group interests precede institutional ones. This is also seen in the series of news reports that state how institutional heads are being asked to resign from their posts. Those who faced the call to step down ostensibly remained silent or ambivalent during the movement. These individuals are found guilty of complicity in the crimes of the previous regime. There could be many invisible local factors or hidden agendas. It is possible that different dormant regimes will return. Indeed, we need a culture of accountability. But we also need to refrain from rash judgements that can destabilise many of our already fragile institutions. At the same time, we need to be careful about less noble intentions that may take advantage of a power vacuum. As Greta Thunberg, one of the most prominent Gen Z climate activists, has emphasised, real change requires action from those in power, not just from passionate young people.

There is also a risk of elevating the leaders through excessive praise. We should use constructive criticism as a stimulus for meaningful change. The nation does not require further reminders about the negative effects of hero worship and the formation of cults. Generation Z, like any generation, is not a homogenous entity. Many of them are deeply committed to political change, but they vary in their scope and conviction. Leaders of the movement, when elevated to positions of power, may not accurately reflect the diverse views and concerns of all their peers representing different social strata. Already, we have seen madrasa students complaining that their cleaning or street monitoring activities did not get equal media attention. Private university students assert that their sacrifices received insufficient recognition. This disconnect could lead to fractures within the movement as different factions vie for influence and control. The HSC fiasco is a case in point.

The use of technology, particularly social media, plays a crucial role in the rise of Gen Z activism. It allowed activists to connect with one another, share information rapidly, and mobilise support on a global scale. However, the rapid pace of online activism can result in superficial engagement, reducing complex issues to mere hashtags and soundbites. Some groups could intensify their activism to become more radical. For instance, a group of female students went to Shahbag Police Station insisting on forcing an alleged perpetrator of sexual assault into writing a confessional statement, snatching him away from the uniformed forces. Support for a patient army officer and a radical female voice divides the internet.

A prerequisite of nation-building is continuity and stability. Gen Z has been the catalyst for change. However, a single generation cannot bring about changes. We must not overlook the contributions and experiences of previous generations. We need intergenerational collaboration, not generational rivalry, to address the multifaceted crises facing us. For instance, as a flood-prone country, we developed a disaster management model. Although we should have immediately deployed professional forces to deal with the flood aftermath, the focus appears to be more on crowdsourcing and their viral visibility.

While we are thankful to Generation Z for the ultimate sacrifice they made to bring down an autocratic regime and force far-reaching reforms, we need to bridge the intergenerational divide. We need a reality check. The future depends on whether we can channel their energy and idealism into sustainable, long-term change, highlighting each generation's role. We need to build a bridge over the troubled waters.

How Awami League soured the youth's perception of Bangabandhu is digital features coordinator at The Daily Star.

Azmin Azran

AZMIN AZRAN

August 15 this year was unrecognisable compared to how the day has been observed over the 15 years of Awami League rule. This year, the day came just 10 days after former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, in the face of a student-led mass uprising, was forced to resign and flee the country. Her government was subsequently dismantled.

Hasina's government declared August 15 the National Mourning Day and a public holiday to solemnly remember the assassination of the Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and most of his family members in 1975. Yet, on the day of Hasina's fall, statues of Bangabandhu were torn down in various places, and his residence at Dhanmondi Road 32, which had been turned into a museum, was set on fire.

The interim government subsequently cancelled the public holiday, and many individuals were stopped and harassed at Dhanmondi Road 32 on August 15, apparently for trying to pay respects at the residence of the country's first president.

But what does this mean? Does the new generation really think so little of Bangabandhu? How did it get to this stage?

We spoke to some youngsters and asked them about their perception of who Sheikh Mujibur Rahman was, and how that perception changed over time.

Rubama Amreen, 15, says she can't recall when she first learnt about Bangabandhu, but admits that she has been hearing the name for as long as she can remember. "It was more like knowledge instilled within us from birth," she said. The one thing that stood out to her when she learnt about the Liberation War in school was the "incessant glorification of Bangabandhu, which was strange, especially compared to how we were taught about other world leaders."

Sakib Rahman (not his real name), 24, points out what was missing in history lessons about Bangabandhu. "In our social science textbook, the history mostly revolved around the Liberation War and a big section about his March 7 speech. Nothing was mentioned about the Awami League rule during 1972-75. Back then, I thought of him as a national hero who was a saint."

However, the post-war period in Bangladesh's history was recent enough that many youngsters had the chance to learn about Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's time in power from family members who saw it firsthand. The advent of the internet, on the other hand, has made it doubly difficult to limit anyone's knowledge of history simply to textbooks or other government-approved media.

Sakib's interest in that period of history was recent. "I got interested in the history of post-war politics during the recent protests. Books like Bangladesh: A Legacy of Blood, Jasod er Utthan Poton, and 3 Ti Shena Obbhutthan o Kichhu Na Bola Kotha, etc painted the real picture about Sheikh Mujib for me. I knew his rule wasn't that great, but after knowing the details, it completely changed how I viewed him."

Anindya Alam, 24, shared how his perception was shaped by his family's honesty about the history of that period. "My family background is diverse. My father's side has been very pro-Awami League and has political history, while my mother's side, post-liberation, has been very critical of the Awami League. As I grew up and my family began to have more honest conversations about history with me, I had access to two different narratives." For Anindya, while one side reaffirmed the narratives taught by his textbook, the other side told him about the looting, the nepotism, the extrajudicial killings, and the terror perpetrated by the Rakkhi Bahini.

FILE ILLUSTRATION: BIPLOB CHAKROBORTY

Even if an honest reading of history is not consistent with what the younger generation has been taught, it doesn't explain the disdain with which many in this generation have treated the memory of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, especially since the fall of the Hasina government.

Some think the Awami League is to blame for that.

Wasima Aziz, 19, said, "The previous government shoved the idea of Bangabandhu being an unquestionable figure down everyone's throat, to the point of mockery. I think the previous government tainted the image of Bangabandhu themselves, by overdoing it to the point of no return."

Anindya Alam added, "Bangabandhu had a fairly positive perception among Bangladeshis and the Hasina regime took advantage of that. The previous government, in Bangabandhu's name, tried to rewrite history. By attributing every little success to him, the previous government tried to justify their authoritarian regime. All good things happened because of Bangabandhu. But people aren't stupid. We recognised our oppression, and we attributed that to Bangabandhu, because all oppression was justified in his name."

'Bangabandhu had a fairly positive perception among Bangladeshis and the Hasina regime took advantage of that. The previous government, in Bangabandhu's name, tried to rewrite history. By attributing every little success to him, the previous government tried to justify their authoritarian regime. All good things happened because of Bangabandhu. But people aren't stupid. We recognised our oppression, and we attributed that to Bangabandhu, because all oppression was justified in his name.'

Mesbah Kamal, professor of history at Dhaka University, echoed some of these sentiments and pointed out exactly where the Awami League got it wrong.

"History is non-linear in nature; every action has a reaction. The post-1975 attempts to erase Bangabandhu from our history brought about a serious reaction in 2009 when Sheikh Hasina came to power. She tried to establish Bangabandhu as the father of the nation and the commander-in-chief of the Liberation War. However, in the process of doing this, she often presented her father in a way as if Mujib is their family property and her family has a special authority over the country. No one, especially the young generation, was on board with it."

Pointing out the Awami League's mishandling of Bangabandhu's history, he said, "Another dimension is the overprojection of Bangabandhu—the tendency to force him onto the nation. Bangabandhu should have been portrayed as the champion of nationalist and humanitarian spirit, but that was not done."

So, what comes next? How do the young generation want to approach the figure of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman now, out of the yoke of Awami League?

"Frankly, the history of Bangabandhu should be regarded in the same way as that of any other historical leader. There's no need to glorify him or put his name in the mud. Acknowledging both sides provides a better chance to understand not just the heritage of our country, but also what it means to rise up to a position of that much power and act as a representative of a huge population," said Rubama Amreen.

Anindya Alam suggested, "People must be given an authentic historical account of Bangabandhu and his regime. Whether they decide to view him as the father of the nation or not should be left to them. The people of this country have never been given a choice. I hope the future is different. I hope the younger generation of Bangladeshi students are encouraged to form their own opinions."

Historian Mesbah Kamal extends hope for the future too. "Bangabandhu was a politician; he may have made mistakes alongside making many correct decisions. The young generation could have been told what the Awami League learnt from his successes and mistakes, and what other parties should learn from that period.

"Bangabandhu's contribution in the period between 1947 and 1970, in 1971, and in rebuilding the war-ravaged country is undeniable. But these histories don't just belong to the Awami League or Bangabandhu. The history that has been told until now has not done justice to people like Sher-e-Bangla AK Fazlul Huq, Maulana Abdul Hamid Khan Bhashani, Comrade Moni Singh, Muzaffar Ahmad, Syed Nazrul Islam, Tajuddin Ahmad, and Col Abu Taher. Students understand this," Kamal said. "I feel that whatever distance may have been created among the youth in understanding Bangabandhu's contribution will change over time in the synthesisation process, and Bangabandhu will eventually be recognised and respected in general."

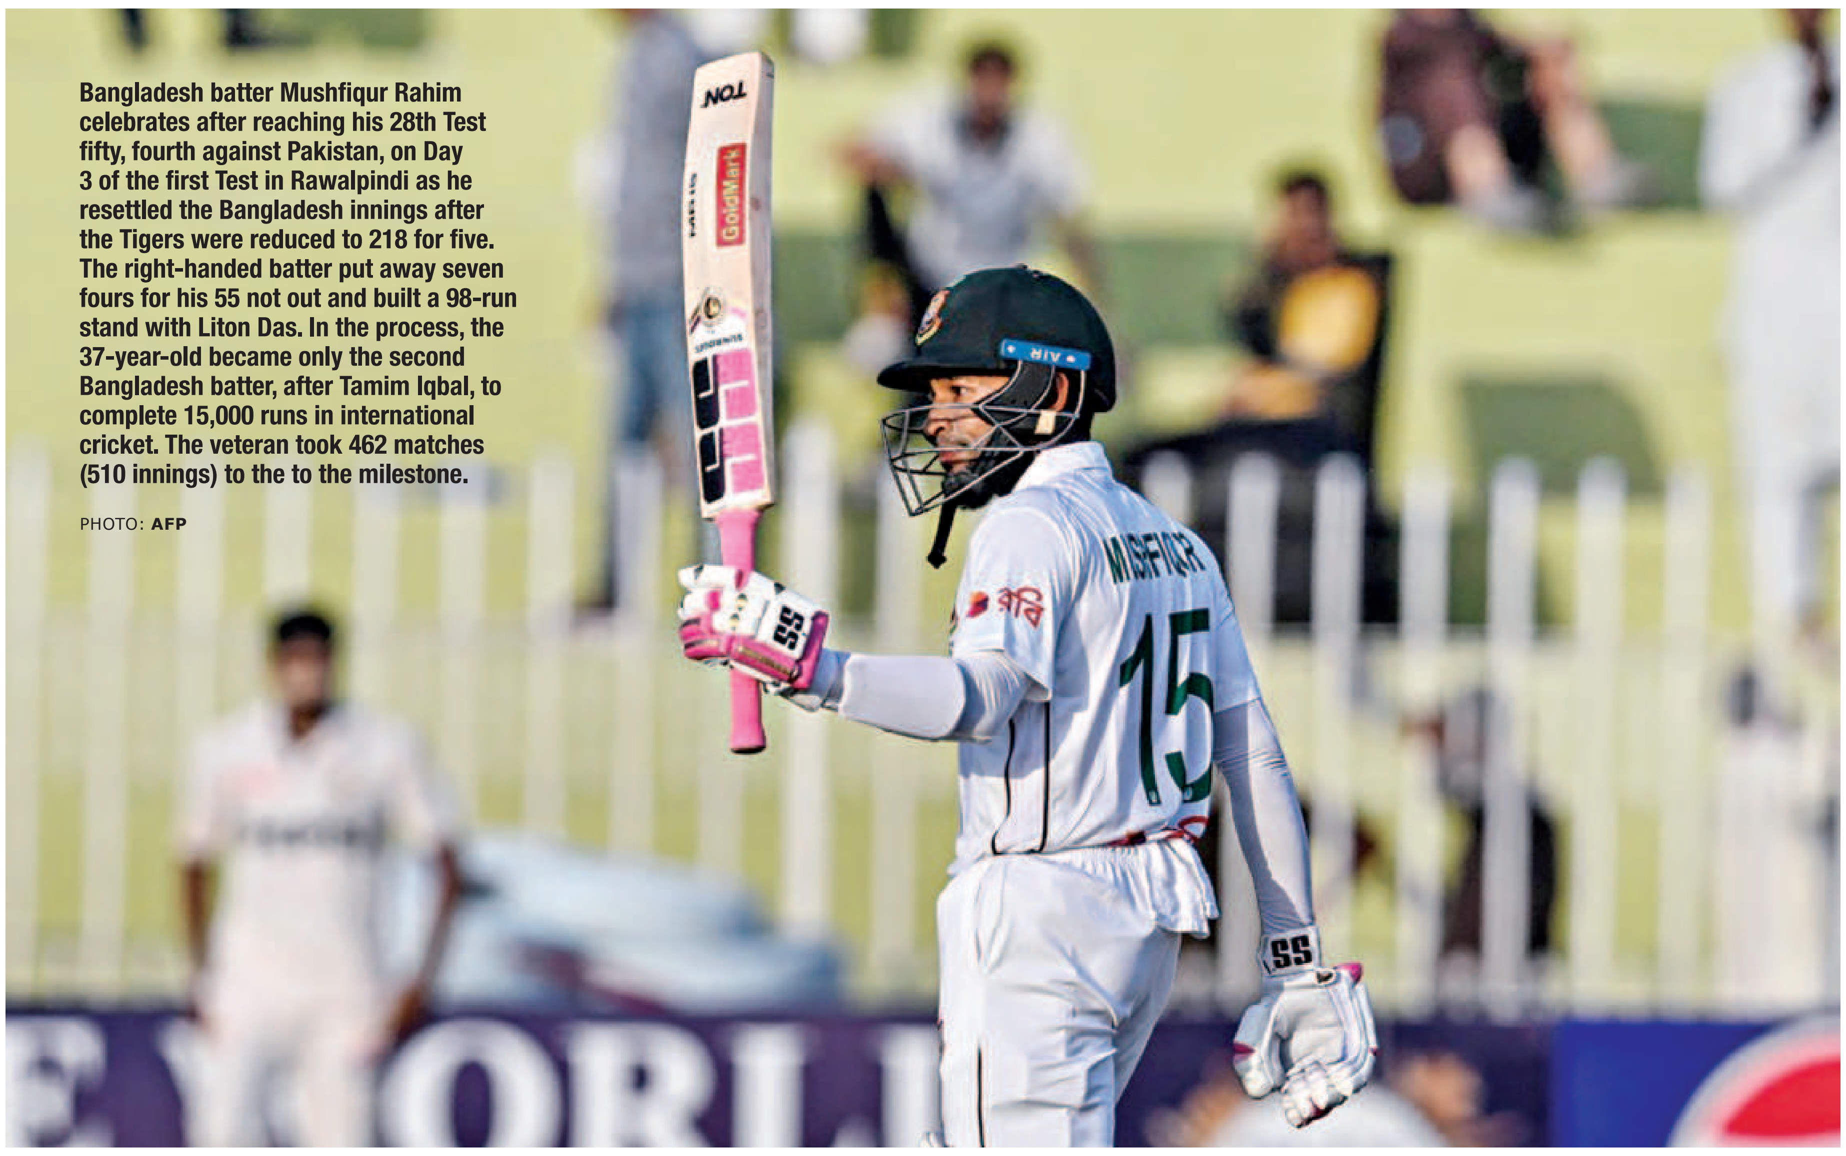
Bangladeshi-born English footballer Hamza Choudhury has finally received a Bangladesh passport, confirmed Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) general secretary Emran Hossain yesterday. The 26-year-old Leicester City footballer had earlier expressed his desire to represent Bangladesh in international level and had applied for a Bangladesh passport in June.



Bangladesh batter Mushfiqur Rahim celebrates after reaching his 28th Test fifty, fourth against Pakistan, on Day 3 of the first Test in Rawalpindi as he resettled the Bangladesh innings after the Tigers were reduced to 218 for five. The right-handed batter put away seven fours for his 55 not out and built a 98-run stand with Liton Das. In the process, the 37-year-old became only the second Bangladesh batter, after Tamim Iqbal, to complete 15,000 runs in international cricket. The veteran took 462 matches (510 innings) to the to the milestone.

Mushfiqur's role 'most important' in rare good day

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh batters had one of their better days in Pakistani conditions in the sweltering heat of Rawalpindi yesterday where a number of batters put their hands up to help the side reach 316 for five at stumps, 132 runs behind Pakistan's first innings score.

Opener Shadman Islam batted over five-and-a-half hours during a patient 93 off 183 deliveries, his resistance unwavering in the face of Pakistan's four-pronged pace attack, while Mominul Haque kept the runs ticking in his natural flair to help Shadman's cause.

Liton Das displayed his array of stroke-play in an unbeaten 52 off 58 balls. But according to Mominul, the most important knock of the day came off the bat of the veteran Mushfiqur Rahim, who on his way to an undefeated 55 off 122 balls, forged a number of crucial stands which essentially held together the Tiger's middle-order.

After the loss of Zakir Hassan (12) and skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto (16), Shadman and Mominul put up a solid 94-run stand to steady the ship. Their partnership ended when pacer Khurram Shahzad found a way through Mominul's defences after a 76-ball 50.

That partnership worked as the backbone of the entire innings and then Mushfiqur along with Shadman and later Liton, ensured Bangladesh ended the day happier of the two sides.

Mushfiqur had opened his account in the 12th delivery he faced, a sweep shot that manifested after a pressure period.

He did not make many noticeable mistakes during his patient vigil bar one inside-edge in the 82nd over off Naseem Shah, which almost ricocheted onto his stumps. He dispatched Naseem's final delivery of that very over through extra cover to show that he was in control.

Mushfiqur exemplified his experience of handling pressure in his innings and Mominul, who came to the press conference after the day's play, pointed to the many admirable qualities of the experienced campaigner.

"Mushfiqur bhai is a very dedicated person. Whatever I say about him won't be enough. His playing style is completely different from us. He plays every ball so carefully, you can just tell that he has played a lot of Test matches," Mominul said.

Following a 52-run stand with Shadman, Mushfiqur then partnered with Shakib Al Hasan (15) for a short while before forming a 98-run unbroken stand with Liton.

"Look at the way he played and managed everything when Shadman and I got out. You must have noticed how Shadman accelerated after he [Mushfiqur] came to the crease. So, there must have been some instructions. His role was the most important according to me," Mominul said about Mushfiqur. Liton's late assault against Naseem, where he took 18 runs off one over against the pacer, pushed Bangladesh's total beyond 300 on the day.

Mominul heaped praises on Liton for his late blitz and expressed optimism about his team's chances in the match.

"Spinners might get some turn and I felt pacers might get some help too [in the final two days]. The way Liton attacked in the end, I feel the game is now in our grasp. Mushfiqur bhai handled the situation brilliantly.

"Definitely as an opposition team, I always believe in thinking positively and that we can play better than them [Pakistan]. Liton is a classical batsman and he made the difference in that one over."

'A' team's Pak series ends in stalemate

SPORTS REPORTER

The two-match four-day series between Bangladesh 'A' and Pakistan Shaheens ended in a stalemate after the rain-marred second match concluded in a draw at the Islamabad Club Cricket Oval on Friday.

Resuming on 346-6, Bangladesh 'A' declared their first innings on 404-9 after Jaker Ali made the highest 172.

Pakistan Shaheens leg-spinner Abrar Ahmed took all three Bangladesh wickets that fell on the final day to finish with 4-103.

The hosts, in reply, reached 281-4 before both captains accepted a draw. Shaheens opener Al Zaryab top-scored with 117.

Pacer Taskin Ahmed, who is also in the Bangladesh squad for their second Test against Pakistan, trapped Imam-ul-Haq (0) LBW in the first ball of Shaheens innings but that remained his only success in the 15 overs he bowled on the day. Pacers Tanzim Hasan Sakib and Ruyel Miah also took one wicket each.

The first two days of the match saw no play owing to rain and a wet outfield. The first four-day match had also ended in a draw.

Both teams will now play a three-match one-day series, starting on August 26.

Jamal 'signed a contract', but with which club?

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh football team captain Jamal Bhuiyan said that he had signed a contract with a local club on Friday but the midfielder was among the ones who were excluded from the list of players registered by the clubs for the upcoming Bangladesh Premier League (BPL).

Jamal, midfielder Masuk Mia Jonny and forward Matin Mia were the big names left clubless following the conclusion of the transfer window ahead of the 2023-2024 BPL season.

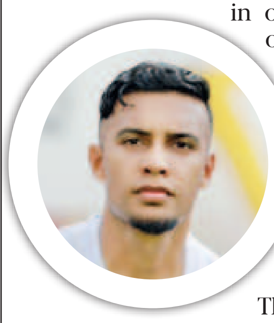
"I have signed a contract with a local club and will let you know within a couple of days what exactly happened," Jamal told The Daily Star yesterday.

However, Jamal's name was not found in the players' list of any of the 10 clubs who completed the players' registration formalities on Thursday night – the deadline day for the transfer window.

Before the window closed, there were talks of Jamal playing for Brothers Union as he played for Abahani in the latter part of last season after coming from Argentina's third-tier Club Sol de Mayo.

Meanwhile, three-time champions Sheikh Jamal DC and treble winner Sheikh Russel DC pulled out of the upcoming 2023-24 season owing to financial constraints. The withdrawal of two outfits from the top-tier league meant at least 60 local players lost the opportunity to play BPL this season.

Also, a good number of footballers who were supposed to play for Sheikh Jamal DC and Sheikh Russel KC have been forced to lower their payments in order to sign contracts with other outfits.



Jonny, who was supposed to play for Sheikh Russel this season, said he did not join any club for family reasons after Sheikh Russel failed to form a squad. "I was supposed to play for Sheikh Russel but they did not form the squad. There was also an offer from Brothers Union but I have decided not to play this season for family reasons," Jonny told The Daily Star.

Jonny also informed that Matin Mia was also offered contracts from different clubs like Sheikh Russel, Abahani and Brothers Union but he too did not accept any offers to stay out of football this season. The Daily Star was unable to reach Matin for confirmation on the matter.

Meanwhile, Chittagong Abahani, who were uncertain about forming a squad, finally completed their players' registrations at the eleventh hour with the help of former national striker Zahid Hasan Emily and former captain Mamunul Islam, who reportedly took permission from the club officials to form the squad.

Jamie Smith scored his maiden Test hundred before England reduced Sri Lanka to 107-4 at Tea in their second innings as the hosts strengthened their grip on the series opener at Old Trafford on Friday. Surrey wicketkeeper Smith's 111 on the third day was the centrepiece of England's first-innings 358 all out. PHOTO: AFP

NSC clarifies Faruque, Fahim appointments at BCB

SPORTS REPORTER

The National Sports Council (NSC) on Friday offered an explanation for the appointments of Faruque Ahmed and Nazmul Abedeen Fahim as directors of the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) a day after former NSC nominated director Sajjadul Alam Bobby alleged the sports ministry of 'direct interference' with BCB's functioning.

During BCB's board meeting on Wednesday, held at the sports ministry, the NSC named Faruque and Fahim as its two mandated nominees in the 25-member board of directors at the BCB, replacing Sajjadul and Jalal Yunus. In the same meeting, Faruque was elected as the BCB president, replacing Nazmul Hassan Papon.

While Yunus had resigned from his directorship role on Monday after being asked by the NSC, Sajjadul, who was also asked to step down, had refused.

Sajjadul claimed he was not invited to Wednesday's board meeting and was only sent a notice of the new appointments on that evening.

"I am extremely surprised and disappointed. What the NSC did is akin to direct interference in the board's functioning. It is completely unacceptable," he told The Daily Star on Thursday.

NSC, seemingly in response to Sajjadul's claim, issued a clarification yesterday regarding the new appointments, two days after they were nominated.

"In accordance with Article 9.3.2 of the Constitution of Bangladesh Cricket Board, Mr. Mohammad Jalal Yunus resigned on August 19, 2024 from among the 05 (five) representatives previously nominated by the National Sports Council in the Councillor category and Mr. Nazmul Abedeen Fahim was appointed for the 01 (one) stated vacant post Nominated by Sports Council," the NSC press release read.

"On the other hand, Mr. Faruque Ahmed and Mr. Nazmul Abedin Fahim have been nominated by the National Sports Council in the director category according to Article 13.2 (kha) 4 of the constitution, which is being widely appreciated.

"Such nominations are made on the basis of Philosophy of Jurisprudence with the utmost careful application of prevailing rules. The government is committed to keeping the activities of all federations/associations, including the Bangladesh Cricket Board fair, efficient, active and uninterrupted," the press release stated further.

Article 13.2 (kha) 4 explains that the NSC can nominate two directors from three councillor categories of the general council. Both Faruque and Fahim are councillors under category 3 of the BCB constitution (Article 9).

'Crazy love' for Rashid and Co on home turf

AFP, KABUL

Afghan student Basit Wali Hotak travelled hundreds of kilometres overnight to Kabul on Thursday for the chance to glimpse his cricket hero, Rashid Khan, on a home pitch.

The Shpageeza T20 league kicked off last week, with the usual cricket fever fanned by the promised inclusion of national players, many of whom have not joined domestic tournaments since the Taliban authorities swept to power in 2021.

Thousands of fans turned out at the Kabul International Cricket Stadium to see the famous players.

"I am extremely happy," Hotak told AFP, as he waited in a crowd jostling for tickets and fried snacks before filing past Taliban security guards to enter the stadium.

"I hardly noticed how long the line was out of joy that I would finally get to see Rashid Khan," Hotak said of the ace spinner and captain of the T20 national team.

Hotak left the southern city of Kandahar on Wednesday night to reach Kabul by 6 am (0130 GMT), sleeping only an hour before rushing to the stadium.

In cricket-mad Afghanistan, the national team's strides on the international stage have provided rare moments of widespread celebration in a country ravaged by four decades of war.

Hotak was one of many who made long journeys over accident-prone and poorly maintained roads and spent their limited cash to buy the 50 Afghani (70-cent) tickets.

"For Rashid Khan, even if the ticket was 1,000 Afghanis ($14), I would still have bought one," said the 21-year-old, who has a picture of the Afghan sensation as his phone background. "This has been my biggest dream."

Much to Hotak's dismay, Khan and other star players expected to join the match between the Speenghar Tigers and Mis-e-Ainak Knights were not part of the playing eleven.

Still, when the cameras showed the Afghan captain sitting in the dugout, loud cheers erupted in the all-male crowd.

After the match, Khan signed autographs at the edge of the stands, with fans injuring themselves on barbed wire along the barriers as they scrambled to reach the star.

"If you see my room and my social media accounts, they are flooded with photos of king Rashid Khan," said 18-year-old Abid Usmani from Kapisa, who had printed a banner covered with Khan photos.

During the match, a chant of "heroes, long live heroes" periodically boomed from loudspeakers, occasionally drawing jubilant responses from the crowd.

Former captain and allrounder Mohammad Nabi did take to the pitch, facing off against his son, Hassan Eisakhil -- both wearing "Number 7" jerseys.

Another fan, Kamil Shah Mashal, travelled hours with his friends to the capital. "It is crazy love that has brought us here to Kabul from Khost," which borders Pakistan, he told AFP.

Bringing Gundogan back was a no-brainer Guardiola

REUTERS, Manchester

Manchester City manager Pep Guardiola said the decision to re-sign former captain Ilkay Gundogan was an easy one, considering the season the German international enjoyed at Barcelona.

Midfielder Gundogan, who played seven seasons for Guardiola's men before departing for Spain, could feature in Saturday's home Premier League match against Ipswich Town.

"(Gundogan) called me and asked me the situation, the chance to come back and we said yes immediately," Guardiola told reporters on Friday.

"He played really well last season and I know how competitive it is. I love his qualities and he will give us an incredible alternative.

"If he has to play (Saturday) then he knows everything."

Gundogan left City for Barcelona in 2023 on a free transfer after leading Guardiola's side to the treble, among 14 major trophies he won with the English champions including five Premier League titles.

Gundogan made 51 appearances last season, helping Barca to a second-place finish in La Liga.

He described City's offer as the "perfect package" and Guardiola agreed.

"It is a privilege for all of us (to be at the club). It is an honour," the manager said. "The club is being ran for everyone amazingly. (The players) have everything they need to perform at the highest level possible."

Manchester City will hope that Erling Haaland's flying vigour continues against newly-promoted Ipswich Town at home on Saturday in the Premier League and also throughout the season after the forward got things going in the right direction with his opening goal of the season in City's 2-0 win against Chelsea in the last game week.

Bangladesh contingent for Paris Paralympics reduced after crticism

SPORTS REPORTER

The Youth and Sports Ministry of Bangladesh yesterday revised a government order (GO) that cut the list of members set to go to the Paris Paralympics, running from August 28 to September 8, following criticism.

It cancelled GOs of six members, revising the Bangladesh contingent from 13 to seven members. They will accompany the two athletes – archers Joma Akhter and Al Amin Hossain - who will participate in the tournament.

The National Paralympic Committee (NPC) on July 18 secured the approval for a 13-member contingent from the ministry which saw the NPC come under immense scrutiny.

Now, the new government order approved five officials – NPC acting president Dr Sheikh Abdus Salam, chef de mission Fakhruddin Haider, physician Monirul Islam, team official Ashif Sobhan, and coach Nisith Das – to accompany the athletes.

International Paralympic Committee guests Rebeca Sultana and Maksudur Rahman, chef de mission's support Nigar Haider, team official Mohammad Faisal Ahsan Ullah, and two government officials – Aminul Islam and Mohammad Sanaul Haque – were excluded from the contingent.

Sri Lanka to host NZ Test during presidential vote

AFP, Colombo

Sri Lanka will host New Zealand for a two-match Test series during next month's presidential election, Sri Lanka Cricket board said Friday.

The first Test will begin on September 18 at Galle, but there will be a rest day on September 21 when the voting is set to take place, the board said.

The final match will also be played at Galle from September 26.

New Zealand's last tour of Sri Lanka was in August 2019, when they drew a two-match Test series with the hosts.

Next month's presidential election is the country's first poll since it declared a sovereign default in 2022 during an unprecedented economic crisis.

Months of protests over shortages of food, fuel and medicines forced then-president Gotabaya Rajapaksa to step down after an immense crowd of angry Sri Lankans stormed his compound.

His successor Ranil Wickremesinghe introduced tough austerity measures in line with an IMF rescue package negotiated last year.

Arsenal seek Villa REVENGE

United travel to Brighton

AFP, Manchester

Arsenal's Premier League title aspirations face an early test away at bogey team Aston Villa on Saturday, while Manchester United's defence are set for a stiff examination at Brighton.

Arsenal's two defeats to Villa last season cost them the chance of a first league title in 20 years.

"They scored and we didn't, it's very simple," Arteta told reporters of the two defeats by Villa last season.

"In two games, even though we had an enormous amount of chances to do that, and that was one of the big differences, one of the details we have analysed. We have to do better tomorrow [Saturday]."

The Gunners are gearing up to again try to dethrone Manchester City but a trip to Villa Park begins a tough run of fixtures so early in the season.

Arsenal will also travel to north London rivals Tottenham and City in their opening five games.

Mikel Arteta's men got off to a winning start at home to Wolves as Bukayo Saka and Kai Havertz showed no sign of fatigue from their exertions at Euro 2024.

Arsenal need more of the same against a Villa side that also got off to an encouraging start by winning 2-1 away at West Ham.

Villa have strengthened their squad in preparation for their first Champions League campaign since the competition was the European Cup back in 1982/83.

Doubts remain over Villa's ability to maintain a fight for the Premier League top four alongside their European commitments, but with just one game a week early in the season they are well capable of dealing an early blow to Arsenal in the title race.

Two sides to Man Utd start

Manchester United's 1-0 win over Fulham on the opening night of the season could be read one of two ways.

After finishing eighth in a torrid campaign last season, Erik ten Hag's men badly needed a winning start as a sign that a new era off the field at Old Trafford will be accompanied by an improvement on the pitch.

The fact new signing Joshua Zirkzee came off the bench to score the winner helped raise belief United have sufficiently strengthened to at least threaten the top four with defenders Leny Yoro, Noussair Mazraoui and Matthijs de Ligt also arriving in the transfer window.

Yet, the ease with which Fulham created chances was eerily reminiscent of how United were consistently cut open last season.

A truer test of United's credentials come at the Amex on Saturday against a Brighton side themselves flying high after a 3-0 win at Everton.

The youngest ever manager in the Premier League Fabian Hurzeler, 31, takes charge of his first home match for the Seagulls, who have Kaoru Mitoma back fit and could hand a debut to new £40 million ($52 million) signing Georginio Rutter.

Slot 'trusts' Liverpool squad without signings

AFP, Liverpool

Liverpool manager Arne Slot said on Friday he was relaxed about his new club's lack of transfer activity after inheriting a "very good team" at Anfield.

Slot has the unenviable task of succeeding Jurgen Klopp but got off to a winning start by beating newly-promoted Ipswich 2-0 on the opening weekend of the Premier League season.

Liverpool are the only side in the English top flight yet to make a single signing in the window.

Spain international Martin Zubimendi rejected the opportunity to leave Real Sociedad, while a deal for Valencia goalkeeper Giorgi Mamardashvili is reportedly close that would see the Georgian stay at the Mestalla this season on loan.

"I trust the team," said Slot on why he is not stressing about the lack of new signings.

"I've said before, I have inherited a very good team, with young players. We trust them a lot. They proved that they have earned our trust."

Slot takes charge of his first competitive game at Anfield on Sunday when Brentford are the visitors.

The Dutchman, though, said he was too focused on getting the three points to feel the nerves of having to impress the home fans.

"I am not nervous at all. Certainly not at this moment because I'm in the middle of preparation, prepare the team for Sunday," he added.

"It wouldn't be a good thing if you have nerves. I trust what me and my staff do to prepare the team in the best possible way. I trust the team a lot."

Liverpool's window has been more dominated by sales.

Sepp van den Berg and Fabio Carvalho have joined Brentford for combined fees of close to £50 million, while Bobby Clark has joined Red Bull Salzburg.

Mbappe set for 'beautiful' Bernabeu debut

AGENCIES

Real Madrid coach Carlo Ancelotti said striker Kylian Mbappe will enjoy a "beautiful day" when he makes his home debut for the Spanish giants on Sunday in La Liga.

Los Blancos face Real Valladolid in their first match at the Santiago Bernabeu this season with supporters clamouring to see the French superstar in action.

Mbappe scored on his debut for Madrid in Warsaw against Atalanta in the UEFA Super Cup win but could not find the net in a 1-1 league draw at Mallorca.

"I think it will be a beautiful day for Mbappe, to play at the Bernabeu for the first time in a Real Madrid shirt," Ancelotti told reporters Friday.

"The fans are very excited about him, and he will have a great game, because of the quality he has -- the fans will enjoy themselves."

Mbappe was linked with Real Madrid for several years while at Paris Saint-Germain and was finally able to make his dream move this summer at the end of his contract in France.

Even with Mbappe joining Vinicius Junior, Rodrygo Goes and Jude Bellingham in attack, Ancelotti has complained his team have lacked balance in their first two matches.

"We have prepared well for the game on Sunday... we know very well what happened against Mallorca and we have tried to fix it for this weekend," said Ancelotti.

"I think facing Valladolid will be a good test... we lacked balance at times and we have to work on that.

"It's not so hard to look for a solution when the problem is clear, there is also a clear solution."

Bellingham could be sidelined for a month

However, as things stand, Ancelotti will have to find balance without Bellingham for a number of upcoming matches as, according to Spanish reports, midfielder Bellingham is set to be sidelined for around a month after suffering a calf injury in training on Friday.

Bellingham will miss La Liga games against Real Valladolid, Las Palmas and Real Betis, as well as England's Nations League matches against the Republic of Ireland and Finland in September.

"(Bellingham) took a knock, we're evaluating it," Madrid coach Carlo Ancelotti told a press conference earlier Friday.

Training behind closed doors

Meanwhile, Ancelotti, who usually talks to the media one day before each Real game, decided to change the schedule so he could hold his final training session before the Valladolid game behind closed doors at the Santiago Bernabeu stadium today.

Ancelotti said his unusual move had nothing to do with Real's drab performance at Mallorca last weekend which left the usually calm and collected Ancelotti fuming at his players' effort.

"It's nothing special, I'm doing it just to test the pitch, because it has changed compared to last year. I want the players to try the new pitch to see how they feel there. There is nothing superstitious or anything else behind it," Ancelotti said.

Barca hope to register Olmo for Bilbao clash

REUTERS

Barcelona hope to have new signing Dani Olmo available against Athletic Bilbao amid the midfielder's LaLiga registration issues due to Barca's breach of Financial Fair Play (FFP) rules, manager Hansi Flick said on Friday.

Barcelona host Bilbao on Saturday after winning 2-1 at Valencia in their LaLiga opener.

Former Germany midfielder Ilkay Gundogan, one of the top earners at the club, re-signed for Manchester City on Friday, clearing the way for Olmo's arrival.

"(The registration) is not my job, we have worked well this week, (Olmo) is ready to play and I hope he will be in the team, that will be very positive for us," Flick told reporters.

"In training he is amazing and it is important to have him as soon as possible."

Flick's side will be missing Pedri, Gavi, Ronald Araujo and Frenkie De Jong due to injuries but will welcome back midfielder Fermin Lopez, who rejoins the squad after winning the European Championship and Olympic title with Spain.

"From what I see, he will be ready to play. It was important for him to rest after two tournaments," Flick said.

Flick said former Barcelona midfielder Gundogan had told him he wanted to help the LaLiga side but changed his mind.

"It happens. At the end, I know him as a person and as a player. He has been a fantastic player for Barcelona and the German national team," Flick said.

Flick was asked about the threat of Bilbao forward Nico Williams, who was superb during Spain's Euro 20244 run alongside Barca's Lamine Yamal.

"It's not my job to talk about a player from the opposing team," he said. "Bilbao are physically very strong and they have a great coach. It will be a tough game."

Row among trustees spells trouble for NSU

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR

The country's first private university, North South University, is in trouble over running its operations due to a conflict among the trustees.

The problem emerged as the trustee board members, who were part of the board before its reconstitution in August 2022, held a meeting on the campus on Wednesday.

Among them, five then trustees -- Azim Uddin Ahmed, Mohammed Shajahan, Benajir Ahmed, MA Kashem and Rehana Rahman -- were facing a case filed by the Anti-Corruption Commission over irregularities worth Tk 304 crore involving land purchase and other matters.

Two members of the previous trustee board confirmed this newspaper that they held the meeting on the campus, with Azim Uddin in the chair.

A source who attended the meeting said the trustees decided to make decisions that would benefit the university, taking into account the opinions from students and teachers.

Aziz Al Kaiser, a member of the previous trustee board, said they secured a High Court stay order on a government decision that reconstituted the NSU trustee board in August 2022.

"The High Court order means the previous trustee board has been revived," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Asked about the ACC case against the five former trustees, Kaisar said the case was "politically motivated" and the allegations were "baseless".

Bangladesh opener Shadman Islam plays a shot down the leg side during the first session of Day 3 of the first Test against Pakistan in Rawalpindi yesterday. The left-handed batter fell seven runs short of a century as he was castled by Pakistan pacer Mohammad Ali.

Shadman makes statement on return

SAMSUL AREFIN KHAN

Left-handed batter Shadman Islam can claim himself lucky to be part of the opening Test against Pakistan as he hasn't been the first-choice opener of the Bangladesh Test team in recent years.

Regular opener Mahmudul Hasan Joy sustained a Grade 1 adductor strain in the right groin while playing for Bangladesh 'A' in the opening four-day match against Pakistan Shaheens, and that saw Shadman start the first of the two-Test series against Pakistan in Rawalpindi.

However, when he finally got an opportunity to showcase his merit, Shadman made it count. He might have missed out on a well-deserved ton but managed to strike a resilient 93 off 183 balls, helping the visitors reach

Hasina, Rehana, S Alam sued over worker's killing

The tycoon's two sons, Shakib Al Hasan also made accused

STAR REPORT

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and S Alam Group Chairman Mohammed Saiful Alam have been accused in a case over the death of a garment factory worker in Dhaka during the recent uprising.

Hasina's sister Sheikh Rehana, cricketer and ex-MP Shakib Al Hasan, Saiful's sons Ahsanul Alam and Ashraful Alam, former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan, former state minister for information Mohammad A Arafat, and former Dhaka South mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh were also named in the case.

Victim Md Rubel's father Rafiqul Islam filed the case at Adabor Police Station on Thursday, Inspector (Investigation) Mintu Chandra Banik told The Daily Star yesterday.

Other accused include AL leaders Amir Hossain Amu and Jahangir Kabir Nanak, JaSad President Hasanul Haq Inu, Workers Party President Rashed Khan Menon, Tarikat Federation President Syed Nazibul Bashar Maizvandary, Samyabadi Dal General Secretary Dilip Barua, and Jatiya Party (JP) President Anwar Hossain Manju.

The former and current police officers named in the case include ex-IGP Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, ex-RAB DG Haroon-ur-Rashid, former DMP chief Habibur Rahman and former DB chief Harunor Rashid. About 500 more unidentified people were also accused in the case.

According to the case documents, Rubel was shot on direct and indirect orders from the accused when he took part in a procession on Ring Road on August 5. He

Freeze bank accounts of Papon, family

BFIU directs banks

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) on Thursday instructed all banks to freeze accounts of former president of Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) Nazmul Hasan Papon and his family members.

The anti-money laundering agency directed banks to suspend transactions of all personal and privately-owned institutional accounts of Papon and his family members for a period of 30 days, BFIU officials said.

The BFIU also sought an update of the accounts within five working days since the issuance of the letter.

Nazmul Hassan Papon resigned from his role of Bangladesh Cricket Board president during the board of directors' emergency meeting at the Ministry of Youth and Sports on Wednesday.

Israeli negotiators in Cairo for Gaza talks

Hamas slams Netanyahu's 'refusal' to reach final truce deal; 18 more Palestinians killed in strikes

AGENCIES

Israeli negotiators were in Cairo yesterday for talks on a Gaza truce, a spokesman said, but a dispute over the presence of Israeli troops on Gaza's southern border remained among sticking points.

Mossad spy agency chief David Barnea and Ronen Bar, head of the Shin Bet domestic security service, were in the Egyptian capital and "negotiating to advance a hostage (release) agreement", Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's spokesman Omer Dostri told AFP.

Egypt with fellow mediators Qatar and the United States are trying to reach a deal that would end more than 10 months of offensive in the enclave.

A Hamas official yesterday accused Israel's prime minister of refusing to agree to a final truce accord for Gaza. But Hamas representatives were not taking part and an official from the movement, Hossam Badran, told AFP that Netanyahu's insistence that troops remain on the Philadelphi border strip reflects "his refusal to reach a final agreement".

Witnesses yesterday reported combat in the Gaza Strip's north, heavy shelling in the centre, and tank fire in the far south near Rafah city. Israeli attacks have killed 18 Palestinians since yesterday morning in Gaza, as it continues to expand its ground operation in Khan Younis and Deir el-Balah.

Israel's military campaign has killed 40,283 Palestinians in Gaza, according to the Hamas-run territory's health ministry. The UN rights office says most of the dead are women and children.

The United Nations said tens of thousands of civilians have been on the move again this week from Deir el-Balah and the southern city of Khan Yunis after Israeli military evacuation orders, which precede military operations.

The offensive has displaced about 90 percent of Gaza's population, often multiple times, leaving them deprived of shelter, clean water and other essentials as disease spreads, the UN said.

Bimstec summit postponed

REUTERS, Bangkok

Thailand has postponed its hosting of next month's Bimstec summit of the leaders of seven mostly South Asian countries until after a new administration is formed, its foreign ministry said yesterday.

Thailand currently has a caretaker government following a court's dismissal of Srettha Thavisin as premier last week and his successor, Paetongtarn Shinawatra, has yet to name her cabinet.

The summit had been due to take place in Bangkok from Sept 3-4. The Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation (Bimstec) includes Thailand, India, Myanmar, Bangladesh, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Bhutan and its leaders meet every two years for a summit.

Earlier, foreign ministry officials said that Chief Adviser Professor Muhammad Yunus may attend the Bimstec summit.

CPJ worried over arrest of journo couple Rupa, Shakil

UNB, Dhaka

The Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) has expressed concern over the arrests of journalist couple Shakil Ahmed, former head of news at Ekattor Television, and its former principal correspondent Farzana Rupa.

"We urge authorities to respect the reporters' procedural rights, ensure their safety, and drop any investigation brought in retaliation for their journalistic work," it posted on X yesterday.

The journalist couple was arrested by immigration police at Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport in Dhaka on Wednesday while attempting to leave for France. They were subsequently handed over to the detective branch of the Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Later, a Dhaka court yesterday granted a four-day remand for them in connection with the murder of government employee Md Fazlul Karim.

US PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Harris accepts Democratic nomination

REUTERS, Chicago

US Vice President Kamala Harris sealed the Democratic presidential nomination with a muscular speech, laying down broad foreign policy principles and sharp contrasts with Republican rival Donald Trump with 11 weeks left in the race for the White House.

On the final night of the four-day Democratic National Convention (DNC), Harris, 59, promised to be a "realistic," "practical" president for all Americans, as she battles Trump, 78, in a razor-close campaign.

"In the enduring struggle between democracy and tyranny, I know where I stand and I know where the United States belongs," she said on Thursday night, accusing Trump of bowing down to dictators. She promised to back Nato, Ukraine and "stand up to Putin's aggression," a reference to Russia's president.

After days of protests from Palestinian supporters who were disappointed at not getting a speaking spot at the convention, Harris delivered a pledge to secure Israel, bring the hostages home from Gaza and end the offensive in the Palestinian enclave.

"Now is the time to get a hostage deal and a ceasefire deal done," she said to cheers. "And let me be clear, I will always stand up for Israel's right to defend itself and I will always ensure Israel has the ability to defend itself."

She said she wanted to end the offensive in a way that provides for Israel security and allows the Palestinian people to realise their right to self-determination.

Graffiti vs Regime

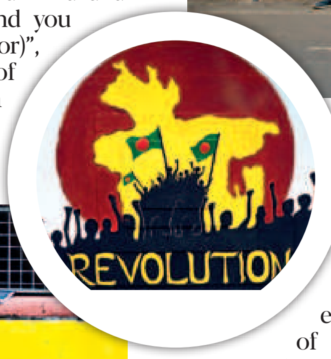
When street art becomes a voice of dissent against authoritarianism

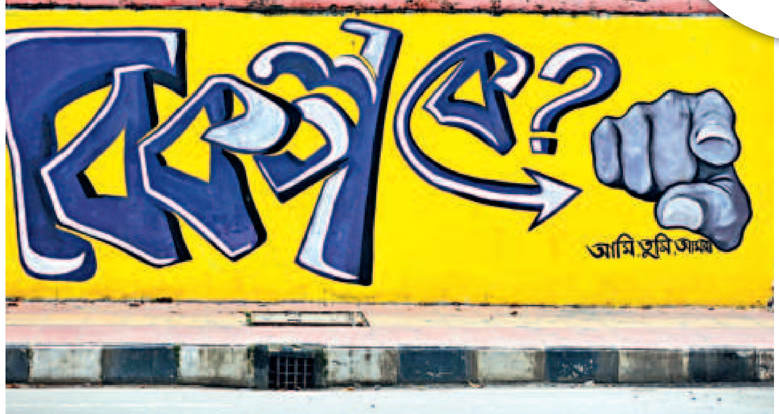
Throughout July 2024, a series of increasingly violent protests erupted in Bangladesh. For every unjust act, students responded with graffiti and other forms of visual art, showcasing the government's disregard for human rights and excessive use of violence. This persistence in the face of oppression helped to turn the student protest into a people's uprising.

RAFFAT BINTE RASHID

The early stages of the quota reform movement in Bangladesh saw the use of a subtle yet powerful language of protest: graffiti. University students, who were at the forefront of the Anti-discriminatory Student Movement that started in July, used public walls and streets to express their anger and frustrations as a potent form of resistance. These expressions, painted boldly in public spaces, became symbols of defiance against an oppressive regime.

Slogans like "No signal," "Pani lagbe pani?" (Do you need water?), and "Desh ta karo baaper na" (The country does not belong to anyone's father) echoed the frustration of a generation unwilling to be silenced. Who can forget the graffiti "Chaite gelam odhikar, hoye gelam Razakar (We asked for rights and you tagged me as a traitor)", which was a reflection of the sentiment of youth against the prevailing culture of tagging.





These strong messages helped ignite a movement that ultimately toppled an autocratic government that had ruled with an iron fist for more than 15 years.

As the government increasingly restricted free speech, cracked down on political dissent, and implemented internet shutdowns, graffiti became a critical tool for protest. It allowed students to voice their dissent in a way that was visible, accessible, and difficult to censor. Public walls turned into canvases of resistance, where the youth painted their grievances and aspirations.

Graffiti as a form of protest is not new to Bangladesh. In our struggle leading to the Liberation War and in the political upheavals of the 1980s and 1990s, graffiti was used by various groups to voice dissent. However, the wave of graffiti during the quota reform movement was distinct in a sense that it involved a generation many had presumed to be politically detached. This new generation's graffiti not only expressed specific political grievances but also raised broader issues of social justice and human rights.

This time around, young people from all backgrounds used graffiti to voice their rebellion. They owned the consequences and demanded justice, and many adults found themselves relating to the bold thoughts they had not dared to articulate.

Their work reflected deep emotions -- stories of betrayal, hope, and resistance. The walls of cities were splashed with colours -- bright reds, greens, blacks -- each stroke carrying a message. Anti-government and pro-democracy slogans covered walls and streets, while images of mosques, churches, temples, and pagodas called for coexistence and secularism.

When protests turned violent, graffiti captured the brutality. One powerful image depicted student activist Abu Sayed standing unarmed, arms stretched out, holding only a stick, facing police brutality. This image, etched on walls across the country, became a symbol of courage against a merciless authoritarian government -- a visual reminder of the sacrifice made by those who stood up for their rights.

Public spaces became storytellers of the resistance. Graffiti depicted the police attempting to silence protesters by covering their mouths. The portrayal of Mugdho, a student, handing out bottles of water to fellow protesters while struggling to cope with tear gas just minutes before he was shot in the head, will be forever in our memory. His final words, "Pani lagbe, pani?" became a symbol of the selflessness of the young protesters. His graffiti has become a part of our collective memory.

Throughout July 2024, a series of increasingly violent protests erupted in Bangladesh. For every unjust act, students responded with graffiti and other forms of visual art, showcasing the government's disregard for human rights and excessive use of violence. This persistence in the face of oppression helped to turn the student protest into a people's uprising.

It was inspiring to see students from schools, colleges, madrasas, and universities come together, using public spaces to protest through witty slogans and powerful images. 'If you repeat a lie often enough it becomes politics instead' (they scratched off the word truth and replaced it with politics). They documented the stories of scores of martyrs like Abu Sayed and Mugdho who were mindlessly killed during the violence.

Even after the fall of the government, students continued to draw graffiti, repainting erased images, and creating new ones on the ruins of burned-down buildings in areas like Dhanmondi, Agargaon, and Uttara -- hotbeds of the violence. Their graffiti focused on themes of secularism, human rights, freedom of the press, and clean politics against autocracy and anarchism.

"Bangladesh is a resilient nation, shrouded in geopolitical problems. We love to raise our voice. We are opinionated, and we are driven by emotions," said rights activist Shahana Huda.

"Drawing graffiti in public spaces gave our frustration and desperation an animated expression," she said, noting that this informal expression of anger and resistance of youth captured the attention of both the authorities and adults who had chosen to remain silent.

"Graffiti, often created in defiance of the system on public property, is typically deemed illegal by authorities. This illegality is intrinsic to its role as a form of protest and rebellion. If graffiti is created with permission, it becomes a mural, losing its rebellious edge," explained Syed Rashad Imam Tanmoy, a cartoonist and graphic novelist. He sees graffiti as akin to cartoons -- both are forms of visual communication that must be quick and easy to understand. "Throughout history, when oppressive regimes controlled public media to suppress voices, people took to public spaces to express their opinions through graffiti," Tanmoy added.

This time around, young people from all backgrounds used graffiti to voice their rebellion. They owned the consequences and demanded justice, and many adults found themselves relating to the bold thoughts they had not dared to articulate.

For photographer Farhana Setu, a graffiti image of a man running with a cage and a sun trapped inside it, drawn around 2017 with the words "Subodh tui paliye ja, ekhon shomoy pokkhe na" (Get away Subodh, time is not on your side), spoke volumes. 'Subodh,' metaphorically, means good sense and reasonable judgment. "I felt as if I was the one trapped inside the cage, unable to speak out against the social and political injustice around me. But this time, I saw the graffiti again on Fuller Road, with a slight alteration that said: 'Subodh fireh esheche' (Subodh has returned). I was elated! These kids taught us to talk back," Setu says.

Morshed Mishu, assistant editor of UNMAD Magazine, believes the street art that students enthusiastically created at the beginning of the quota reform movement exposed the brutal suppression and moral bankruptcy of the ruling party. "The way students expressed their souls' content through graffiti, this should be called the 2024 renaissance. They rewrote history by fighting for their rights, taking a stance against corruption and extremism, and ultimately toppling an autocratic regime. After the initial success, they continued to voice their concerns about reform through graffiti," Mishu said.

Mishu, who strongly believes that this graffiti should be preserved for documentation, is helping students finish the half-done walls and redo those that were erased with his illustration team. Other teams of artists are doing the same near Dhaka University, Agargaon, Mirpur, and Uttara to preserve the ethos of the movement.

Renowned performance artist Reetu Sattar agreed, noting that anarchism often casts away societal formalities. "Graffiti expresses a particular time and a society's deep feelings. It is a beautiful form of anarchism that captures a society's power, wrath, and humanity. It also helps to build opinions. These graffiti were drawn by the young generation, braving the fear of bullets. They represent a time when we adults chose to remain silent about the corruption and social atrocities committed by the party in power," she said, emphasising that these efforts should be recorded for historical reasons.

However, the younger generation believes it is time to say no to any form of extremism, whether political or religious. Morshed Mishu argues that it is truly the era of citizen journalism, where political cartoons, graffiti, and social media vlogs should become integral to the press.

"Talk about everything -- the good, the bad, and the ugly. Respect all opinions. We have seen enough socio-political tyranny. The current times demand a generational change and reform," Mishu said.

Rhymes, rebellion, and revolution

ABIR HOSSAIN

> Any tool that has the capacity to unite is a threat to the powers that be. Reducing polarity, after all, allows people to recognise that their suffering is united by one common factor: the oppressor. More so, it is the methods employed by the oppressor that enable hip-hop to be used as a tool for resistance.

Movements leave an indelible mark on the psyche of the people, and thus, the culture. As people are pushed to the brink of intolerance through oppressive measures, fear eventually evaporates and the sentiments of the people are amplified causing seismic shifts in the zeitgeist. From its humble beginnings in the Bronx in New York City, hip-hop and rap have since transitioned into a global phenomenon. Its inception, however, is a tale of resistance and revolt. In recent times, the spirit of this tradition has been witnessed in Bangladesh during the July uprising.

Following a series of historic changes in legislation that empowered Black communities from the early '60s, the rate of progress they made eventually stagnated after the passing of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. This period saw economic and political inequalities widen with reduced investment in Black communities. But the Black Arts Movement was on the rise—seeking to reimagine and expand the horizons of art made by Black Americans. The trait that truly made hip-hop a tool for resistance, however, was its ability to gather people and reinforce a sense of community—one that was marred by the deficiencies of the system.

Any tool that has the capacity to unite is a threat to the powers that be. Reducing polarity, after all, allows people to recognise that their suffering is united by one common factor: the oppressor. More so, it is the methods employed by the oppressor that enable hip-hop to be used as a tool for resistance.

Hip-hop has the potential to shift and dismantle such perceptions, and the music that has come out as a result of the Quota Reform-turned-Students Against Discrimination Movement in Bangladesh sought to do precisely that. The songs reflect the outrage and aggression of the students who initially revolted against an unjust and discriminatory recruitment system and later, called for the fall of the regime. They also commemorated the martyred.

"Kotha Ko" by SHEZAN begins with a high-pitched ring of the flute, evoking an ominous feeling. This short intro comes to an abrupt halt and is drowned by SHEZAN's abrasive delivery. His lyricism is rife with rage as he demands answers to confrontational questions. "Amar bhai-boin more rastay, tor cheshta koi re?" (My brothers and sisters are dying on the streets, where are your efforts [to stop it]?) and "Kalshaap dhorse gola pechay, bair kor shaaper matha ko?" (The black snake has us by the neck, find out where its head is). It is only in the former lyric that SHEZAN refers to the martyred students as his own brothers and sisters. In contrast, when speaking of the snake, he doesn't precisely point out whom it is choking. He doesn't let any one person or group become the victim. Instead, the phrasing insists that everyone is gasping for air. What he isn't subtle about though, is his contempt for the regime which he calls a black snake. The colour black, while synonymous with malice, is perhaps also a reference to the saree the former Prime Minister wore when addressing the nation on July 17.

However, it is the line "Raja johon projar jaan loi, jiga taile raja kaar?" (When the king kills his people, whom does the king belong to?) that resonated with me the most. It is framed as a basic question but the answers are jarring, and encapsulate all that is wrong with the former government. It is also worth noting that the line employs a double entendre through the last two words that sound a lot like Razakaar. It almost feels as though he is asking who the traitors really are. As the track progresses, the imagery becomes more scathing. SHEZAN references a blood-soaked Bangladeshi flag, goons gorging on the flesh of their own brothers, and the battering of the nation's backbone.

While "Kotha Ko" inquires, "Awaaz Utha" by Hannan commands. His delivery encapsulates the full spectrum of rapture that ran rampant throughout the country. As he breaks into flow, the pain he feels is just as palpable as the anger. The track is a call for mobilisation, both of the people and the truth. Hannan shatters the lies that Sheikh Hasina and her party tried to push. Instead, he makes it clear that the students don't represent an agenda or a political party. They are here to stand in solidarity with their fallen comrades, no matter what it takes. He also juxtaposes the courage of the students with the cowardice of authority.

Throughout the fourth stanza of the verse, he grimly illustrates the greed that plagued the regime. The line "Amar boin re maira dili, tor ghorer ta marti tui?" (You killed my sister, would you kill your own?) is evocative. It is a reminder that such brutal and mindless violence would never be inflicted on any of them, as if their lives were of greater value. As a song of resistance, it shatters such notions by commemorating the students.

The journey of "Awaaz Utha" is poetic albeit greatly distressing. In the line, "Kotha hoile murdar deshe, nyayer awaaj tulbi ke?" (Speaking in the nation of dead men, why will you raise the voice of morality?), Hannan speaks of the suppression of justice. This is something the rapper himself fell prey to when he was arrested and placed in remand. He was later released along with all those unjustly arrested during the protests.

For the first time in years, artists have expressed themselves even in the face of adversity with little restraint. What enabled it was the infectious courage of the movement. "Kotha Ko" and "Awaaz Utha" are a testament to that. As history writes itself before our very eyes, these songs will aid in retelling it without any distortions. More importantly, it will serve to remind us that we must wield our tools of expression without fear.

Look out the windows

SNATA BASU

In the blanks of muddy moonlight two happy shards of kill sing like feathers in a wound, a child to a milking womb;
tonight there isn't a door that sleeps, and homes close their blinds and draperies in fear that there will be more fear; more nights to hide behind the barbed cables bulleting the sky sprouting fire and filthy rain that's rotten to the flesh.
Kneeling by the ledgers as the storm clouds gather in between the umbrellas of bleeding soil and the earth, bare hands collar a handful of sand, picking up weapons as deadly as the sea: a pen, a screaming voice
a paper piece.
I want to be an eagle there by the tombs freed immovable, and cradle their carcasses, rotting and orphaned by flickering street lamps that glow low like spattered confetti, snow to the angels hovering by the floating dust. Don't look out the windows!
You say,
but how can we keep still?
How can we keep at all,
from clawing out our hearts and laying it by the songless limbs on the ground smeared so cold
by the reaper's feeding hand, lost in time forever to the sounds of rising arms.

All hail July

AMARYLLIS

The July wind brought in the scent of new beginnings
With the end of summer break and a new term starting
What once began as a bright blue sky soon turned into a furious hailstorm
The black clouds threatening the incessant want to reform
The deafening sound of hail overtook the street
In hopes that soon enough, the masses will retreat
But there are ways to fight the hail
And people will continue to fight without fail
The hailstorm will soon start to clear
But the hails on the ground won't just disappear
The damage done by hails will continue to persist
Because hailstorms like this will never stop to exist
But we'll learn how to fight as we continue to grow
Just because July hailed on us, doesn't mean August won't be a better tomorrow.

Magic boys and girls of Bangladesh

For the students of Bangladesh

DILRUBA Z. ARA

Magic boys and girls of Bangladesh, I love you.
Your brave hearts and your unified voice,
A distinctive bell that rocks the stars above.
Magic boys and girls of Bangladesh, your beautiful minds,
Your daring footprints on the page of history,
Echo the spirit of Abu Sayed—boundless bravery.
Magic boys and girls of Bangladesh,
Your voice carries the outline of caged souls.
Freedom of speech: gagged mouths, batons, and bullet rains.
Magic boys and girls of Bangladesh,
The souls of the martyrs walk with you, assertive in death.
Your blood shines like fluid gold on the streets of Bengal.
Magic boys and girls of Bangladesh,
Amidst mad dogs' barks and chase, you walk with heads high.
Your unified voice for justice is a gigantic cry.
Magic boys and girls of Bangladesh,
Under the clouds of flame and fire, you are ploughing
The dark land and sowing the seeds of a bright future.
No boundaries can contain you; no dogs can stop you.
You are the power, you are the designer, you are the lighthouse
For future magic boys and girls of Bangladesh. You are my Bangladesh!

EdTech platforms offer courses on PROTESTS AND MARCHING

'We're just responding to market demands,' says 7-minute pathshala founder Bebshachandra Biddapukur

JEAN PAUL SATIRE

In a move that has left both educators and politicians scratching their heads, EdTech platform 7-Minute Pathshala has launched a new course on organising protests and marches. The course, launched by Bebshachandra Biddapukur, a business graduate turned EdTech mogul, promises to revolutionise the way citizens engage in democratic demonstrations.

Biddapukur, known for his previous ventures into short-term educational content, claims that his new course will offer "quick and effective" strategies for organising protests.

"In just seven minutes, students will learn everything they need to know about rallying support, planning routes, and crafting the perfect slogan," said Biddapukur. "After all, who has time for long lectures when there's a government to topple?"

> "In just seven minutes, students will learn everything they need to know about rallying support, planning routes, and crafting the perfect slogan," said Biddapukur. "After all, who has time for long lectures when there's a government to topple?"

The course comes at an ironic time for Bangladesh, where protests have been frequent and intense since the government was recently ousted, causing chaos and confusion throughout the country. Critics argue that Biddapukur's timing might be a tad too opportunistic, but the platform's supporters believe it's a necessary innovation.

Biddapukur is not alone in this new educational endeavour.

Competitor Laser, a platform known for its "intense and immersive" 5-minute modules, has also jumped on the bandwagon. Laser's latest offering, "Protest Planning in a Pinch", promises to teach users how to stage effective demonstrations in a format even more condensed than 7MP's.

"We believe in efficiency," said Laser's founder Olposhikkha Ohonkari, yet another business graduate.

"Why spend 7 minutes when you can do it in 5?" he asked, winking.

Meanwhile, Shikhbi na, mane? (which translates to "What do you mean you won't learn?") has introduced their own course titled "Protest 101: The Essentials". This course prides itself on its no-nonsense approach, focusing on the bare basics of protest organisation and emphasising "learning by doing".

"We've cut out the fluff," said their founder Pikachu Electra, "and provide actionable strategies that you can apply immediately. Perfect for when your country is in turmoil and you're fresh out of ideas."

Despite the proliferation of protest-focused courses, not everyone is convinced of their value.

"It's a troubling trend," said Dr Jawaharlal Jinnah, a political science professor. "While these platforms might be tapping into current events, they're reducing complex social movements to mere checklists. Protests are about much more than efficient planning -- they're deeply rooted in societal issues that these courses overlook, and they're also about going viral on Facebook."

In response to the criticism, Bebshachandra Biddapukur defended his course, arguing that it was not meant to replace in-depth political education but to offer practical, immediate solutions for a highly volatile situation.

""We're just responding to market demands. Our course doesn't pretend to solve all the problems," he said. "It just helps people get out there and make their voices heard quickly. We even have a vibrant digital marketing course to help young budding politicians, and everyone knows how useful those are. We want to help create a whole new category of politicians who are entrepreneurs. Politipreneurs, if you will."

As Bangladesh navigates its political upheaval, the surge in protest-oriented EdTech courses underscores a curious convergence of technology and activism. Whether these short-form educational tools will genuinely impact the country's tumultuous landscape remains to be seen, but for now, they provide a snapshot of how modern technology intersects with age-old struggles for democratic change, and how some people will do anything to sell a course.

Hibernating influencers awaken as flood visits Bangladesh

MAHBUB ALAM MUNNA

"Please send money to my bKash and Nagad accounts (bKash 01*, Nagad 01*)," was how Superstar Kumon, one of the country's unrivalled social media legends, finally broke his silence on social media since the student movement began.

"I have 14 cows. If needed, I won't hesitate to sell them and stand by the flood-affected people. Remember, it is what I do," Superstar Kumon posted again after realising that his previous plea went in vain as people weren't responding and the accounts were yet to hit the Tk 1,000 mark.

Like Kumon, hundreds of other influencers stormed the internet as the flood hit the country. They were previously thought to have retired from social media and helping people in front of a camera, as their presence for the past few weeks was as rare as an Olympic medal in Bangladesh's trophy cabinet.

Naaraaz Cream Bahaduri, a prominent influencer who likes to work in water, took it to heart and raised his voice against all odds.

"Listen, you might think I am just a regular human being, but deep down, I am a fish. I cannot function unless there's enough water to paddle around in a boat. Flood is a wonderful phenomenon that finally lets me do something for the people I love," he said.

> "Listen, you might think I am just a regular human being, but deep down, I am a fish. I cannot function unless there's enough water to paddle around in a boat. Flood is a wonderful phenomenon that finally lets me do something for the people I love."

Speaking on condition of anonymity, some bankers from several banks reported a sudden influx of influencers rushing to open new bank accounts.

"I have opened five such influencers' accounts today," one of the bankers said. The account names were something else -- Manobotar Feriwala, Humanity First, Bonna Ebong Bonna, Mayer Doaa Fund and my personal favourite was Bonna Hole Amake Daiken. It's more of a naming competition to tug at heartstrings than actual bank accounts."

"Today Slowman Dukhon showed up at my branch to open a charity account. I asked him where he had been since I had been missing his life-changing words so much on social media, especially during the recent protests. He smiled and said he was enjoying a gadget-free life and preparing for a motivational session on that. So, he couldn't say anything on social media regarding the ongoing issues, but he outcome of the protests were exactly what he wanted," another banker said.

Our Satireday correspondent wanted to collect at least one such influencer's opinion. We confronted the country's veteran influencer Noheed Zafridi about how he managed to end his hibernation. "Water! Yes, water is life. See how these waters brought me as well as my other fund-seeking brothers to life from a deep hibernation."

Salman caught while pretending to be garden gnome

AAQIB HASIB

Following another escape attempt, Salman F Rahman was once again foiled from fleeing the country while still on remand. He was caught while pretending to be a garden gnome on the lawn of a residential house in Gulshan.

This was his sixth escape attempt after he was originally arrested from a boat in Sadarghat on August 13, while attempting to flee the country and simultaneously participate in a photoshoot dressed as a fisherman.

Unlike the previous five jailbreak attempts, Salman was caught within a matter of only a few hours and did not immediately soil himself upon being captured.

Speaking to The Daily Star, police personnel at the scene said, "Our efficiency is through the roof. This time we only took three hours to catch the rat. I think we should be given an award for this record."

Asked how Salman had managed to flee police custody in the first place, one officer spilled the beans, saying, "We believe some corrupt officials aided him in the escape. Currently, we believe there is some spiritual aura left over from when Harun bhai was chief, so you cannot stay in that building for too long without engaging in some kind of corruption."

> "Even after we captured him, he kept asking us for a loan. He was desperately trying to reach into our pockets and take out our wallets."

Another officer echoed him, saying that he too felt the urge to start taking bribes whenever he was in the building.

"That is why I avoid staying there for too long. It's real spooky how Harun bhai's spirit just lurks there in that building," he said.

The first officer on the scene explained that they received a tip-off via 999 that Salman was originally asking passersby for loans near Shahabuddin park, which is when they rushed to the area.

"Even after we captured him, he kept asking us for a loan. He was desperately trying to reach into our pockets and take out our wallets," he explained.

Speaking to the officers in charge of prisoners at the interrogation centre regarding the jailbreak, they proudly exclaimed, "Well Salman sir offered us around Tk 2 crore each to allow him to escape. We thought we should take the offer and keep his money within the country's economy."

Export diversification STILL A FAR CRY

Experts identified that policy and financing barriers and a lack of infrastructure development in the non-RMG sector have slowed export diversification

JAGARAN CHAKMA

Although the need to diversify Bangladesh's export basket has been a subject of great discussion for more than two decades, there has been little progress in this regard.

In fact, there has been no reflection of diversification in exports. On the contrary, readymade garments (RMG) continue to dominate, accounting for around four-fifths of all of Bangladesh's exports.

Though garment exports surged from $1.18 billion in the early 1990s to $47 billion by 2023, non-RMG exports grew from $811 million to just over $8 billion.

Between FY02 and FY23, exports soared by 828 percent from $5.9 billion to $55.55 billion, buoyed by a 925 percent rise in apparel exports.

However, despite the overall growth, the ratio of non-RMG exports to total exports declined from 24.86 percent in FY02 to 15.42 percent in FY23.

At present, Bangladesh's exports are largely made up of knitwear (44.6 percent) and woven garments (37.2 percent), with home textile (3.3 percent), footwear (2.3 percent), jute products (1.9 percent), and fish (1 percent) being other notable products.

Bangladesh's overwhelming dependence on RMG means that its export basket is among the world's least diversified.

Bangladesh's export basket is four times more concentrated than the developing-country average, according to a report by the Asian Development Bank (ADB) titled "Fostering Export Diversification in Bangladesh".

Along with product concentration, Bangladesh also suffers from a lack of export market diversification.

More than four-fifths of its exports are destined for North American and EU markets. Furthermore, Bangladesh's top-10 export destinations account for 72 percent of its total exports, while the corresponding figures for India and Sri Lanka are 52 percent and 64 percent.

Experts identified that policy and financing barriers and a lack of infrastructure development in the non-RMG sector had slowed export diversification.

"There were four major barriers in expansion of export diversification -- policy issues, financing barriers, lack of infrastructure, and weak bargaining power of non-RMG exporters," said Selim Raihan, executive director of the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (SANEM).

He also said that non-RMG and RMG exporters cannot practically avail the same benefits.

As an example, he said RMG exporters can import capital machinery at zero duty while non-RMG exporters have to pay high tariffs to import necessary equipment.

Non-RMG exporters cannot even avail bonded warehouse facilities as easily as RMG exporters, which is a significant barrier to expediting export diversity, he said.

He also said the agro-processing sector had been failing to live up to its potential to increase exports due to a lack of infrastructure and proper government support.

Ferdaus Ara Begum, CEO of Business Initiative Leading Development (BUILD), said: "Export diversification has not happened because of several reasons. Even within the RMG sector, little diversification has happened."

Bangladesh exports only four to five products in the RMG sector, which has given buyers the chance to bargain for the prices of cotton garments, she said, adding: "Prices are falling lower and lower."

The need is to invest in manmade fibre, which requires huge investment and utility support, she said.

She added that the gas crisis, which has been affecting industries in recent years, was preventing industries from running operations smoothly. This poses a significant barrier to large investments in the country.

According to her, financing support is another issue as the export development fund is used by limited entrepreneurs.

CHALLENGES FROM LDC GRADUATION

Intensifying its diversification initiatives in preparation for the country's graduation from least-developed country (LDC) status in 2026 is imperative for a smooth transition.

As an LDC, Bangladesh enjoys unilateral trade preferences in markets in Canada, the EU and the UK. Such duty-free market access has endowed Bangladesh with a significant competitive edge.

In fact, more than 70 percent of the country's merchandise exports enjoy some LDC-specific trade preferences, which is far higher than other LDCs in Asia and the Pacific.

However, these benefits will cease after graduation unless they are extended.

For example, Bangladesh's duty-free access to the EU is set to expire in 2029 given the EU's additional 3-year transition period for graduating LDCs.

Post-graduation market access provisions in the EU are not yet settled, but under currently proposed terms, the average tariff rate facing Bangladesh's garment exports to the EU would increase from zero percent to about 12 percent.

At the same time, Bangladesh's exporters could see average tariffs on exports rising from zero to 17 percent in Canada, 16 percent in China, 8.7 percent in Japan, and 8.6 percent in India.

"The post-LDC scenario will be grave. After the reduction of cash incentives, exports of almost all sectors will decline," Ferdaus Ara cautioned.

A mismatch in export figures between the Bangladesh Bank, Export Promotion Bureau, and National Board of Revenue has worsened the situation, she added.

She said large investment in the export sector as well as utility, financing and tax policy support must be extended for export diversification.

"RMG is our success. We need to diversify the RMG products with a view to achieving at least $150 billion in exports from this sector by the next 5 years, which is possible," she said.

"We also need a clear sector-specific strategy."

Mustafizur Rahman, a distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD), said the RMG sector's faster rate of growth led to its dominance in Bangladesh's export basket.

However, he added that the growth of non-RMG sectors was very slow and, in some cases, even witnessed degrowth.

Rahman added that Bangladesh had received very little export-oriented foreign direct investment (FDI), which is one of the factors holding back export diversification. Another reason is that export-centric special economic zones are yet to be implemented.

He suggested mobilising export-oriented FDI and ensuring proper one-stop services would help export diversification efforts.

He added that a lack of technology and skilled human resources, particularly at the managerial level, was also restraining non-RMG sectors.

Although many studies have been conducted to identify the sectors with export diversification potential, practically the same sectors have been identified over time.

"The strategy of "picking winners" or targeting specific sectors for growth, such as the leather sector and information technology and IT-enabled services sector, has not succeeded as export targets have been consistently unmet," the ADB said.

"For the leather sector, the government had set an ambitious export target of $5 billion by 2021. Despite this focus and support, the sector's current exports are just above $1 billion, demonstrating the inability of the 'picking winners' strategy to produce the expected results."

M Masrur Reaz, chairman of the Policy Exchange of Bangladesh, said non-RMGs' share in Bangladesh's export basket had declined due to a lack of policy reforms.

"We need to bring the right support for those sectors to build up efficiency, including logistical support and adoption of technology," he said.

He also said an initiative to bring in export-oriented FDI is imperative because it is very difficult to diversify exports without foreign investment.

Another barrier to export diversification was posed by significant differences in the income tax rates between the RMG and non-RMG sectors.

The RMG sector has historically benefitted from a relatively lower corporate tax rate, ranging from 10 percent to 12 percent.

In contrast, non-RMG sectors, such as textiles, leather and leather goods, agro-processing and home textiles, have faced higher tax rates ranging from 15 percent to 30 percent.

Only recently, in FY23, a uniform income tax rate of 12 percent for both services and goods exports was introduced. This move is expected to rectify the existing bias in income tax rates for export-oriented industries.

In its paper, the ADB recommended addressing policy-induced disincentives against exports, boosting export market responsiveness and accelerating diversification.

'End facility bias favouring RMG'

JAGARAN CHAKMA

The interim government's first task should be to address the disparity in government facilities between readymade garment (RMG) and non-RMG sectors to facilitate export diversification, according to one of the leading exporters of leather shoes.

"Eliminating inequal facilities for the RMG and non-RMG sectors will automatically lead to export diversification," said Nasir Khan, managing director of Jennys Shoes.

In an interview with The Daily Star recently, he said the former government had been all talk and no show over the last 15 years.

It offered unique facilities for the RMG sector while the latter was deprived of many benefits, resulting in poor export diversification, he said.

"We, who are non-RMG goods exporters, have been demanding for a long time to introduce the same rules for both RMG and non-RMG sectors but the government never listened to us. Instead, it gave more priority to the RMG sector," Khan said.

According to him, businesses should need only five licences, as is the case in Vietnam, so that entrepreneurs can run their operations smoothly.

The five licences are certifications for industry, fire safety, environment clearance, export and import.

He added that these licences should remain valid until the companies cease to function.

If the government introduces this system, entrepreneurs will not need to spend time in government offices to renew their licences every year, said Khan.

However, the licence providers must regularly monitor the businesses to ensure their compliance with regulations, he said.

Khan, also vice president of the Leather Goods and Footwear Manufacturers & Exporters Association of Bangladesh, alleged that government entities often harass businesspeople over the smallest of errors to eventually blackmail and extort money from them.

Export-oriented factories need not be monitored very closely as their buyers ensure that they meet certain production standards, he said.

"If they find any faults, they instantly raise questions and postpone their work orders. For this reason, exporters have to strictly maintain compliance with regulations," Khan said.

He pointed out that entrepreneurs currently need to collect 30 licences and 153 documents to set up a business, which was one kind of harassment on its own.

He also alleged that businesspeople face harassment when trying to avail services from government offices and ultimately have to give in to extortion demands.

Officers of the value added tax and customs offices extort entrepreneurs to benefit from their exports even after they meet all the necessary rules and pay all fees, Khan said.

Due to all these irregularities, it is very difficult to keep the price of products competitive in the international market, which is a big obstacle for export diversification, he said.

"Eliminating these problems should be a priority for the interim government and if it can be solved, exports will be diversified," Khan added.

Bangladesh earned around US$1,224 million through the export of leather and leather products in fiscal year 2022-23.

Millions cut off without food, power

Situation dire in Feni, Noakhali, Cumilla; many flood shelters overcrowded

MD ABBAS and ANWARUL HAIDER

Millions of people were still left without electricity and any means of communication, and relief materials had not reached many remote areas where families were stranded in flooded villages for days.

Even the shelters opened by the government in the affected districts have become overcrowded yesterday, locals said.

The situation was particularly dire in Feni, Noakhali and Cumilla where relief materials had not reached many remote areas.

Five upazilas of Feni still remained inaccessible by road yesterday even as the waters were receding.

Family members could not reach each other over the phone as almost every cell phone tower in the district was offline.

> "We only had time to go to the roof of a neighbour's house. The water gushed in very fast. The walls of the corrugated iron sheet of our hut fell apart within a short time. Soon, the water was as high as the tin roof of our house."
> Aleya Begum of Chhagalnaiya, Feni.

Locals said there were severe crises of drinking water and food in many areas of the district.

"Our house was submerged. We only had time to go to the roof of a neighbour's house. The water gushed in very fast. The walls of the corrugated iron sheet of our hut fell apart within a short time. Soon, the water was as high as the tin roof of our house," said 45-year-old Aleya Begum, a resident of Khopal area of Chhagalnaiya upazila.

She, her 70-year-old mother-in-law Saleha Begum, and six others of the area had spent three days on the roof of their neighbour's one-storey building.

Saleha said, "I have never fought such a battle with water. I thought I was dying. We cannot contact anyone. My husband and sons had not returned home. We survived only on some dry food and little drinking water."

Officials said three people drowned in the flood-affected districts yesterday, taking the toll from the floods to 18.

According to a statement from the chief adviser's office, almost 9.8 lakh people were marooned in 11 districts. They were in desperate need of drinking water, oral saline, and food.

About 50.94 lakh people in 77 upazilas of 12 districts have been affected by the floods so far.

Over 3 lakh people took shelter at the 3,513 shelters opened by the government.

As the downpour stopped, the situation improved in Cumilla, Noakhali, Brahmanbaria, Laxmipur, Sylhet, Moulvibazar, Habiganj, Khagrachhari, Rangamati, Chattogram, and Cox's Bazar, said the Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre.

However, more areas were flooded in Senbagh upazila

The economic lifeline of the country, the Dhaka-Chattogram highway, remains flooded in Feni.

Police and highway officials have reported that the flooding of around five to six kilometres of the highway in Feni's Lalpol area caused a nearly 50km tailback.

Passengers and cargo vehicles have been stranded for days. Those rushing to Feni and Chattogram's Mirsarai to help the flood affected people with relief materials are also facing difficulties.

Many drivers told this correspondent that they have been stuck in Feni for the last three days.

Khairul Islam, Superintendent of Highway Police Cumilla Region, told The Daily Star over phone, "Due to floodwater on the highway, vehicles have remained stranded for the last three days. The

Reshuffle of officials for ensuring reforms

Law Adviser Asif Nazrul tells Star, says efforts on for withdrawing false cases

GOLAM MORTOZA

The interim government aims to reform the administration in order to make it people-oriented, inclusive, transparent, and accountable, says Law Adviser Asif Nazrul.

"Reforms involve more than just appointing qualified individuals. Competent people are being placed in positions to ensure that no one can obstruct the reform process. Reforms signify a shift towards a more people-oriented, inclusive, transparent, and accountable administration. We must make that happen," he said in an exclusive interview with The Daily Star.

Before the reforms, the administration, the judiciary and the police must get rid of those who helped an autocratic government sustain for over one and a half decades, he said, replying to a query on the massive reshuffle in different tiers of the administration and other bodies.

"Is it possible to bring reforms keeping in place the people committing extrajudicial killings? Is it possible to reform the police administration with Harun [Harunor Rashid, former chief of DMP's DB] still in the force? These people should be replaced by honest and competent ones," Asif said.

After bringing in these people, he said, reforms will be done in the institutions, laws and policies. Efforts were already made to withdraw false cases filed over the killings during the uprising in July and early August. "Now we will try to change the policy and laws

Immediately unveil roadmap for elections

Fakhrul asks govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday urged the interim government to place immediately a roadmap to the next general election.

He also called for an urgent dialogue on the national polls between the new government headed by Professor Muhammad Yunus and the political parties.

Fakhrul made the call at a discussion organised by the Bhasani Anusari Parishad at the Jatiya Press Club in Dhaka to mark the ninth death anniversary of former prime minister Kazi Zafar Ahmed.

"We have a lot of expectations from the interim government. We think they will hold the elections within a reasonable time," he said, voicing the party's confidence in the Yunus-led government. "But it [election] must be done within a specific, limited and reasonable time."

Civil society members yesterday called upon the government to publish a white paper on the recent use of software and technology to suppress dissent and civil rights in the country.

They made the call at a dialogue organised by Civil Reform Group Bangladesh 2.0 at the capital's BASIS auditorium.

Speakers at the event highlighted that thousands of crores of taka was spent on purchasing advanced software and technology from Israel and some other countries over the past decade.

Citizens have the right to know about those technologies and their applications, they observed.

Although the authorities claimed to have bought those expensive technologies for national security, those have mainly been used for political purposes to stifle dissent, the speakers said.

The dialogue titled "Surveillance, the Right to Privacy,

Hasina, 7 journos sued for murder in another murder case filed at Uttara East Police Station. They were arrested at Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport on Wednesday.

An organisation of broadcast journalists has expressed concerns over their arrest.

The case accusing Hasina and the seven journalists was filed over the death of Nayeem Howlader, 17, an HSC student at Shanarpar Rowshan Ara Degree College. He was shot dead in Jatrabari during the anti-quota protests that culminated in an uprising. His father Kamrul Islam filed the case at Jatrabari Police Station on Thursday.

Multiple former ministers and MPs, mayors, police officers, Awami League leaders, Jubo League and Chhatra League members, as well as Rapid Action Battalion officials, 80-90 police officers and members assigned to the Wari Zone on the day of the incident, and 250-300 unidentified individuals, were also accused in the case.

Dozens of cases have so far been filed against Hasina, her party members and law enforcement officers over the killings during the protests.

Journalists have also been named in some of the cases, a feature of the previous Awami League government.

Asked why such cases are still occurring, Asif Nazrul, the law adviser to the interim government, said: "We cannot prevent a parent of a slain student from filing a case based on their judgment."

The previous government had institutionalised the practice of filing such broad cases, he said.

"Perhaps we are witnessing the aftermath now. However, we will ensure that no one is harassed without a proper investigation," the adviser added.

In the case filed at Jatrabari Police Station, the father said some "reckless, corrupt, self-serving and overly enthusiastic officers" of the police, Rab and BGB indiscriminately opened fire on the protesting students and civilians on direct and indirect orders from Hasina and 14-Party Alliance leaders.

The accused, armed and intending to launch an armed assault on the peaceful protesters, recklessly fired shots at the innocent students, the plaintiff said.

This resulted in the deaths of over a thousand people including his son Nayeem, with countless others injured, according to the first information report.

The other accused include Hasina's son Sajeeb Wazed Joy, daughter Saima Wazed Putul, currently serving as the South East Asian regional director for the World Health Organisation, Hasina's cousin and former MP Sheikh Helal Uddin, and his son and ex-lawmaker Sheikh Sarhan Naser Tonmoy.

AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader, leaders Amir Hossain Amu, Anisul Haque, Dipu Moni, Tajul Islam, Mohammad A Arafat, SM Rezaul Karim, Muhiuddin Khan Alamgir, Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, AFM Bahauddin Nasim, Hasan Mahmud, Shajahan Khan, Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury, and Zunaid Ahmed Palak were accused too. The allies of Hasina who were named in the case include Anwar Hossain Manju, Hasanul Haq Inu and Rashed Khan Menon.

Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh, former mayor of Dhaka South City Corporation, Atiqul Islam, former mayor of Dhaka North City Corporation, former MP Haji Mohammad Salim, former BCL president Badiuzzaman Sohag, its former general secretaries Zakir Hossain and Siddique Nazmul Alam, Jubo League Chairman Sheikh Fazle Shams Parash, General Secretary Mainul Hossain Khan Nikhil, former MP and actor Ferdous Ahmed, and Ghatak Dalal Nirmul Committee president Shahriar Kabir are also among the accused.

The police officers accused in the case include former IGP Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, former DMP commissioner Habibur Rahman, former DB chief Harunor Rashid, DMP's Wari Division Deputy Commissioner (DC) Iqbal Hossain, former Special Branch chief Monirul Islam, former DMP joint commissioners Biplob Kumar Sarkar and SM Mehedi Hasan, and assistant commissioner of Lalbagh Zone Nazrul Islam.

BJC EXPRESSES CONCERN

The Broadcast Journalist Center (BJC) has expressed concern over the arrests of journalist couple Shakil and Farzana.

Television journalism was hampered and questioned due to repressive laws, authoritarian behaviour, and ownership patterns during the previous regime, BJC said in a statement yesterday.

The recent mass uprising of students and people has raised hopes of creating a field of independent journalism, the statement said.

But a series of events have revived old concerns about TV journalism recently, it said.

The BJC has urged all stakeholders, including the interim government, to play their role in ensuring the safety of journalists and a conducive working environment.

They demanded legal aid for Shakil and Rupa, and justice for another journalist couple, Sagar Sarwoar and Meherun Runi, who had been murdered in 2012.

and Freedom of Speech," brought together politicians, lawyers, human rights activists, journalists, and IT experts. The event was moderated by former BASIS president Fahim Mashroor.

The discussants said that Article 43 of the country's constitution guarantees every citizen's right to privacy. Despite this, the ordinary citizens' phones have frequently been tapped in recent years through telecom networks, supposedly under certain "unconstitutional provisions" of the Telecommunications Act.

This surveillance, carried out at the discretion of a select group of people without any regulatory oversight, has raised serious concerns. Alarmingly, the ousted government of Sheikh Hasina had acquired technologies that can hack smartphones and recording private calls, messages, photos, and videos without needing to access telecom networks.

The speakers termed such activities "illegal and a blatant violation of human rights".

Fahim said the interim government should publish a white paper detailing the surveillance activities conducted by the Hasina government.

He said the current advisory council of the interim government includes four human right activists who had been subjected to privacy breaches and harassment by the former authoritarian government. The advisers should understand the importance of this issue.

"We don't want the next political government to employ the same surveillance tools and technology to oppress the opponents. Full transparency is needed regarding how government agencies keep an eye on us and for what purpose. If surveillance is necessary for national security, it should be regulated by specific rules instead of being at the discretion of a few individuals," he observed.

Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh, said the surveillance-based state structure has been established mainly to cling to power.

Mentioning that surveillance has been used as a tool to suppress dissent and retain control of power, he said there is no need for organisations like National Telecommunication Monitoring Centre (NTMC) and Department of Telecommunications.

He called for a complete overhaul of the current surveillance of digital communications.

Sara Hossain, honorary executive director at Bangladesh Legal Aid and Services Trust, said irrelevant and unsubstantiated cases are being filed and statements made by some accused on remand are being published by the media even during the tenure of the interim government, raising serious ethical concerns.

She said discussions should be held on how the process of surveillance should be handled keeping in mind the international standards.

Journalist Zulkarnain Saer Khan Sami, who joined the event virtually, said surveillance practices are not unique to Bangladesh as similar measures exist in almost all countries, including the United Kingdom.

However, the governments in other countries exercise their powers without invading citizens' privacy, and they gather information to fight terrorism and ensure security. But the surveillance tools were used in Bangladesh against those who were critical of the Awami League government.

"After Sheikh Hasina left the Gono Bhaban [on August 5], numerous CDs were recovered from its premises. I have obtained copies of them. The contents of those CDs are so damaging that, if made public, they could potentially destroy the careers of many politicians. So it is quite clear that Sheikh Hasina used this disturbing information to manipulate others, keeping it in her possession as a tool for blackmailing others and create a political narrative."

Golam Mortoza, editor of The Daily Star Bangla, demanded full transparency from the interim government regarding the information on Israeli technologies acquired by Bangladesh, including Pegasus, and the illegal activities involving their procurement.

"As citizens, we want to know from the government on whose orders and under what processes those purchases were made, and how the money was spent. We want to know whether the truth is what we know, or if there are truths beyond our knowledge," he said.

of Noakhali yesterday and there was a severe crisis of drinking water and food in eight upazilas.

Sobhan Miah, a 68-year-old farmer in Char Elahi village of Companiganj, said he had not drank safe water in a week.

"The water is receding, but there is still two foot deep water in my house. There is no rice and the stove is submerged. We are starving," he said, requesting a correspondent of this newspaper to send some relief materials.

Many residents of the area could not go to a shelter because they did not have boats.

Muhammad Yusuf, his 58-year-old neighbour, said, "There are no means to go anywhere. We are forced to sit on the cot the whole time."

The water levels of the Khowai dropped below the danger level in Habiganj town, the Manu in Kulaura, the Gumti in Debidwar, and the Halda in Fatikchhari.

Several rivers were still flowing above the danger mark in Cumilla, Sylhet, and Moulvibazar.

Officials said another bout of downpour is not likely in affected districts and the upstream regions of India today and the situation would improve in Feni, Cumilla, and Chattogram.

Meanwhile, Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus yesterday urged the government agencies, NGOs, student organisers, volunteers and expatriates to work in a coordinated manner to help the people in distress.

He made the call at a meeting with 44 NGOs at the state guest house Jamuna, said his Press Secretary Shafiqul Alam.

After the meeting, BRAC Executive Director Asif Saleh said he told the chief adviser that post-flood management should be done through coordinated efforts, zone-wise activities, and relief collection as per demand.

Representative of an NGO told Prof Yunus that Tk 1,000 crore may be needed for the post-flood management.

Officials in Chattogram said 2.7 lakh people were stranded in the district.

The authorities were scheduled to release water from the Kaptai dam in Rangamati today. Officials said it would have no effect on the floods.

RELIEF EFFORTS

Medical teams, army, navy, coast guard, fire fighters, border guards, and student organisers are working in Feni, Noakhali, Chattogram, Brahmanbaria, Cumilla, Habiganj, and Lakshmipur along with local administration.

According to the chief adviser's office, 769 medical teams are working in 11 districts.

[Nazrul Islam and Arun Bikash Dey from Chattogram contributed to this report].

so that this does not happen again in the future."

He said a lot of work had been done on reforms in Bangladesh in the past – the framework of the three alliances in 1991, constitutional reforms proposed by Serajul Alam Khan in the early 80s, and by many civil society organisations in different times.

"What was absent then was a lack of goodwill. Now, I believe we can deliver some good work because we have a leader [Prof Muhammad Yunus]," he added.

Speaking of reforms in the judiciary, the law adviser said a popular opinion about judicial reform is that the lower courts should be reformed first. However, to get an independent judiciary, the higher courts must be reformed first, according to him.

"Ensuring an independent lower court is to ensure the higher court's full authority on it. The higher court will govern and control the lower court, and the government will not intervene here. What's the point of giving [the control of] lower courts to the higher court if the higher court functions as a subordinate to the government?"

"So, we have to reform the higher court," he said.

Asif said the interim government has been working to this end as there was "anarchy" in the appointment of higher court judges during both Awami League and BNP governments with "incompetent, corrupt and partisan" people.

Steps for higher court reform will include amending the recruitment act and policy, rationalising the chief justice's sole authority over the entire judiciary, reforming the general administration committee of the Supreme Court's Appellate Division and the High Court Division, establishing an independent and dedicated secretariat for the higher court, and putting an end to recruiting retired judges in any post, he said.

Asked if the spree of filing cases against top Awami League leaders and their arrests on various charges are ridiculous, as seen by many, Asif said questions could be raised against these cases but those are not ridiculous.

"Many people have filed cases as they have lost their children during the July massacre. They filed the cases after losing their children, and if they think that the former prime minister was responsible for the murders, will the cases be controversial?"

He said filing a case against someone does not mean they are already punished.

"Even after taking the case into cognisance, there can be an investigation and the accused person can be out on bail. But things will not be like what they used to be during the Awami League regime, whose target was to keep people behind bars by filing cases without granting bail."

Asked whether the cases would hinder the judicial process, Asif said no one has the right to prevent a father who lost his children from filing a case.

He said the July mayhem not only saw people killed but thousands of others were hurt to different degrees, such as loss of eyesight.

"If the people file cases accusing Sheikh Hasina or her former ministers as instigators, we cannot prevent them from doing it.

"We are not encouraging anyone to file cases either. People are filing cases spontaneously. We will only ensure that justice is done," he added.

Commenting on the harassment of some arrested AL leaders, including former social welfare minister Dipu Moni, on the court premises, Asif said, "I felt bad about such incidents, especially about what happened with Dipu Moni. But isn't the recently ousted regime responsible for the situation that unfolded on the court premises?"

It is not proper to expect people to be humble after the anarchy the ousted regime had created in the name of justice and snatched the people's voting rights for the last 15 years, he added.

Speaking of the interim government's tenure and the next parliamentary election, he said the people of Bangladesh will decide how long the government will continue.

If the people want reform and the next election to be fair, then this government should be given time, he said.

BNP, one of the country's biggest political parties, said it will wait as long as it takes, Asif said. "At this moment, we need to do the 'urgent things' first."

The law adviser also said the interim government is trying to learn from its mistakes.

"Many of us don't have the experience of running a government. If any person goes to work with little experience, s/he will make some mistakes. But one should consider whether I have the will to do something good, whether I am working hard and trying to learn from the mistakes," he said.

Asked if a "judicial coup" was going to take place as a counter-revolution, the adviser said, "Since it didn't happen, we don't know what the truth is. However, there was an apprehension that such a thing would happen."

About the student-led movement, he said although six student coordinators are often referred to when it comes to the movement, many others played major roles.

He praised their maturity and sense of consciousness, urging them to be patient so that the revolution, which came in exchange for many people's supreme sacrifice, does not become futile.

Asked about their steps on repressive laws against the media, he said his stance on the issue is nothing different from that of the journalist community.

"I can tell you that the application of these laws will not be the same as before. We will review them very seriously. We will take the stakeholders' views and then see which sections could be scrapped and which are amendable. We will try to give a good news in a month," he added.

About the seven journalists accused in a murder case yesterday, Asif reiterated they cannot prevent a parent of a slain student from filing a case.

"The previous government had made it an established culture to file such cases. Perhaps, we're seeing a continuation of it. However, we will look into the matter so that no one is harassed without proper investigation," he added.

The BNP leader said his party expects the interim government to work to meet the needs of the people as soon as possible. To do this, the government has to hold discussions with the political parties about ways to speed up an election and implement the necessary reforms, he said.

"I want to emphasise the election. Elections are crucial for reforms that have come to the forefront. Because [without elections] how will the reforms be completed? These will be done through an elected parliament. There is no alternative.

"I don't believe that a few people will be able to make reforms. I believe that reforms should come through people's participation," he added.

Fakhrul then called upon the interim government for a roadmap for the election. "We believe those in the government are sincere and qualified people. But we want their work to be more visible.

"We want to see that the chief adviser will soon present to the people what he wants to do – give a roadmap on how he will organise elections very soon, how he will bring about the necessary reforms and give relief to the people and move forward for elections."

Fakhrul stressed the need for dialogue and said, "So far, there has been no real agenda-based discussion between the political parties and this government. Opinions of the political parties should be taken."

Regarding the appointment of vice-chancellors to the universities, he said, "No vice-chancellor has been appointed to the universities so far although the previous vice-chancellors have resigned. We want to see people acceptable to all as vice-chancellors."

DEALING WITH FLOOD

Chief adviser calls for utilising NGOs expertise

UNB, Dhaka

Interim government Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus yesterday emphasised utilising local knowledge and NGO expertise to efficiently manage the flood situation and post-flood activities.

"NGOs are a power of Bangladesh. We need to materialise the dream of the youth. We can do that. We need to tackle the flood together in a coordinated way," Chief Adviser's Press Secretary Shafiqul Alam quoted Prof Yunus as saying.

Alam briefed reporters at state guesthouse Jamuna following a meeting between Prof Yunus and NGO representatives.

The meeting, which lasted about two hours, included NGOs collaborating with the government to address the ongoing flood crisis. Around 44 NGOs, including small and community-level organisations, were invited.

The press secretary said the meeting stressed the importance of coordination among all partners and discussed strategies for conducting rehabilitation and relief distribution efforts in a unified manner.

"We are impressed by how people have engaged with the same spirit we saw during the student movement," Alam quoted Prof Yunus, also noting the remarkable relief distribution efforts at TSC, Dhaka.

The discussion also touched on post-flood challenges, including restoring telecom connectivity and electricity supply. Alam highlighted the vital role NGOs have consistently played in Bangladesh's development, dating back to 1971.

Adviser Ali Imam Majumder, SDG Coordinator Lamiya Morshed, economist Dr Debapriya Bhattacharya, Executive Director of Manusher Jonno Foundation Shaheen Anam, Executive Director of Campaign for Popular Education Rasheda K Choudhury, ActionAid Bangladesh chief Farah Kabir, and Brac Executive Director Asif Saleh were among those present. In response to a question from UNB, Asif Saleh stressed the need for mobilising international funds to address the flood situation.

FROM TSC to flood zones

Sea of relief supplies fills DU campus

SIRAJUL ISLAM RUBEL

Sacks and sacks of relief materials are being lined up inside the TSC complex of Dhaka University. They are then sorted, packaged and loaded on trucks, to be carried to flood affected areas.

The TSC cafeteria and games room have been completely filled with these materials—everything from dry food and medicine to clothing and drinking water.

With no more room inside, students have started placing the sacks in front of the auditorium, and even on the TSC field.

From a bird's eye view, half of the field now resembles a sea of relief packages, a powerful symbol of collective effort.

The atmosphere at Dhaka University is electric with unity and purpose.

People from all walks of life, from corporate workers to day labourers, continue to pour into the campus for the third day in a row, each bringing what they can to support the flood-affected communities.

One such contributor, Aslam Hossain, a rickshaw-van driver, even refused to take fare from a group of students carrying relief supplies.

"I too wanted to contribute from my end. This group of students was working for the flood-affected people, who have been going through indescribable sufferings. I have just done my part," Aslam said.

At the entrance of TSC, a public relief booth has been set up, where donations are carefully registered before being moved to the indoor sports room for packaging.

With the influx of contributions, the entire DU campus has transformed into a center of hope, a place where the unified willpower of the nation is on full display.

Some bring their relief in private cars, some in vans, and others in small trucks.

But regardless of how they arrive, each donation adds to the growing mountain of supplies that promises to bring comfort to the flood victims.

"We as students have to stand by the people. It's our responsibility to help when our people are facing a crisis," said Farid Uddin, a former DU student.

FLASH FLOOD

290 medical teams deployed in Chattogram

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The Chattogram Civil Surgeon yesterday said they have formed 290 medical teams to combat the flood situation.

"Our medical teams are ready to combat any situation in the aftermath of flood," said Dr Ilias Chowdhury, Chattogram civil surgeon.

People stranded in different upazilas -- including Fatikchhari, Hathazari, Rangunia and Raozan in Chattogram district - urgently need purified water, as almost all the tube wells and other sources of drinking water have been submerged.

More than just NUMBERS

A 15-year-old shot fatally through the side of his head in Dhaka. Another 17-year-old shot to death in a similar manner in the capital. And a teacher from Bogura hacked to death by AL activists for trying to support his students. At least 400 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, parents, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

'I realised how good my son was only after his death'

Keeps telling father of 15-yr old shot dead in Mirpur

SHAHEEN MOLLAH and SHARIFUL ISLAM

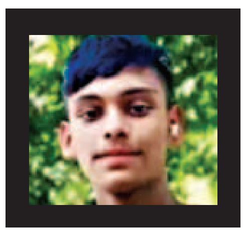
Fifteen-year-old Mahfuzur Rahman took to the streets of Mirpur on July 19 for two reasons -- to stand against the discriminatory quota system in government jobs and to protest the government's crackdown on students.



As the students protested, suddenly law enforcers, along with ruling party members, opened fire on the crowd.

As bullets flew, one found its mark in Mahfuzur's head. Within moments, the young boy collapsed, his life cruelly cut short.

"I realised how good my son was only after his death," said Abdul Mannan, his father.

A rickshaw van puller by profession, Mannan had always worried that his son, who spent much of his free time playing with friends, might go astray. But his fears were misplaced.

"My son sacrificed his life to free the people from an autocratic government," he said, the pain in his voice was palpable.

He added, "My innocent son was killed heinously. I want justice."

This correspondent met the grieving family in their small, rented home in Madina Nagar, Mirpur 11.

Mahfuzur's mother, Mussammad Begum, is inconsolable.

She fainted halfway through Mannan recounting the horrors of that fateful day, only to wake up to the same, unbearable reality.

"My heart continues to bleed since I lost my son," she cried.

Mahfuzur was the only son of Mannan and Begum, born after three daughters. He was the apple of their eyes.

The family had pinned their dreams on Mahfuzur's shoulders. After passing his HSC exams, they hoped Mahfuzur would join the Bangladesh Army, a dream that held the promise of lifting them out of poverty.

But now, those dreams lie shattered, thanks to law enforcers' bullets.

"Initially I was worried and decided not to let him go out. But he deceived me, saying he would just go to Friday

'Police killed my son on Jul 18'

Says father of 17-year old shot dead in Badda

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

"Of our four sons, Ahadun was the most meritorious. Police took his life on July 18."

This is what Mujibur Rahman, a shopkeeper in Dhaka's Purba Badda area, told this correspondent recounting the day he was killed.

His son, Md Ahadun Kabir, 17, was an SSC equivalent examination candidate for next year from Hazi Sekander Ali Technical School in the area.

Besides studying, Ahadun used to help his father in their grocery shop at Badda area of Dhaka.

"On July 18, Ahadun left the shop for home in the evening. He reached home and shared mangoes with his younger brother Utsob, then went out again. Later, as he did not return even after a long time, we got worried," Mujibur said.

"Meanwhile, serious clashes between protesters and police involving firing of bullets ensued in Badda and adjacent areas. Amid this, I went out to search for my son, but did not find him that night," he said.

Mujibur said on July 19 they came to know from TV channels about two unidentified bodies at Dhaka Medical College morgue, and went there.

"We found our Ahadun's lifeless body lying at the morgue. He was hit by two bullets in his head near right ear, and his waist. However, we faced a lot of difficulty to receive his body

'My husband was hacked by Awami League men'

Says wife of Selim, a school teacher killed in Bogura protests

MOSTAFA SHABUJ, Bogura

Selim Hossain, an assistant teacher of Muril Light High School in Bogura's Kahaloo upazila, stood by his students during the quota reform protest.

He couldn't just stay silent while the streets of the country were painted red with the blood of students, said his wife.

For this 'crime', he was hacked to death by Awami League activists on August 4.

Selim has been living in Telipukur area of Bogura town for past nine years with his family.

"My husband loved his students. He loved this country. As the students' protests intensified, he said he could no longer remain home, and joined the protests. He sacrificed his life for the students," said his wife Jasmine Akhter.

She held her one and half-year-old son on her lap as she spoke to this correspondent.

Uzzal Hossain, his younger brother, said, "Bhaia was not involved in politics. He never went to any meeting, rally or demonstration. But the inhumane violence inflicted on the protesting students made him wary. He felt restless at home, watching news channels and surfing the internet to know what was going on. Eventually, prayers and have lunch with me afterwards. He even asked me to keep the food ready," Begum recalled.

When Mahfuzur did not return, Mannan, along with his son-in-law and some of Mahfuzur's classmates, went searching in the Mirpur 10 area. They eventually learned from a student who knew Mahfuzur that he had likely been shot around 4:00pm, when police and ruling party members fired indiscriminately at a procession Mahfuzur had participated in.

Desperate and anxious, Mannan and his relatives searched various hospitals throughout the night and the next morning.

At around 10:30am on July 20, their worst fears were confirmed.

A morgue assistant at Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College identified Mahfuzur from a photograph on Mannan's cellphone and informed him that his son's body was in the morgue.

When Mannan went to the Sher-e-Bangla Nagar police station to request the return of his son's body, the police agreed on the condition that the body be taken directly to their village in Morelganj, Bagerhat, for burial.

However, students from Mirpur, who had gathered at the hospital, took the vehicle carrying Mahfuzur's body to Mirpur for a funeral prayer (janaza).

There, members of the Awami League and Jubo League prevented the vehicle from entering Madina Nagar.

So, students hastily conducted a brief janaza before transporting the body to Mahfuzur's village, where he was buried around midnight that day.

"While I was attending my son's janaza, I received several phone calls, urging me to flee to avoid going to jail, as police were planning to arrest me," Mannan said.

After his son's death, local members of the Awami League and Jubo League pressured his landlord to evict the family, labeling them "razakars".

Fearing for their safety, Mannan did not return to Dhaka until Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina was forced to step down and flee the country.

Mahfuzur's classmate, Atiq Raihan, remembered him as an individual driven by a sense of justice. "Mahfuzur joined the protest to stand against injustice," Atiq said, adding that he and other students demanded that a playground in their area be named after Mahfuzur to honour his memory.

Reform the state, punish criminals

Say speakers at Shujan event

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan), a civil society platform, yesterday demanded that the interim government build a democratic, non-communal and human state through reforms.

In a human chain at the capital's Manik Mia Avenue, they urged that steps be taken against those involved in the recent attacks on minority communities across the country.

They also demanded that compensation be provided to the families of those who died during the recent protests and that medical expenses be given to the injured.

Badiul Alam Majumdar, secretary of Shujan, said, "The interim government has to work with two issues simultaneously. One is to bring those who were involved in corruption, mischief, killings and other criminal activities in the past to justice, while the second is to take necessary steps for reforming the state."

He said the current opportunity to reform the state shouldn't be wasted.

In the programme, Robaet Ferdous, a professor of Dhaka University, said, "Proper steps must be taken to bring back all the money laundered out of the country."

victims of the ongoing flood and donate to the Chief Adviser's relief fund," said Dr Tofail Ahmed, Shujan's executive member, said, "Everyone, particularly those who are well-off, should extend their hands to the victims of the ongoing flood and donate to the Chief Adviser's relief fund."

He also urged everyone to remain cautious of propagandas regarding Bangladesh from foreign media outlets.

In a press release, Shujan also urged that the election commission be reformed with honest, eligibe and impartial individuals, and that repressive laws like the Cyber Security Act should be removed. They also recommended holding students' union elections at the educational institutions.

They also urged for political unity to amend the constituion and setting term limits for future prime ministers.

NSU chairman urges govt to uphold current board

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Javed Muneer Ahmad, chairman of the reconstituted North South University trustee board, urged the government to protect the current management of NSU.

His statement comes as tensions rise due to a conflict among trustees after the High Court ordered the reinstatement of the previous board on August 21.

Javed criticised the High Court's decision, calling it "highly abnormal" as the order was issued without hearing the respondents and without representation from the Attorney General's office. He urged the Attorney General to be present at the August 27 hearing in the Chief Justice's court.

The previous board included five trustees facing an Anti-Corruption Commission case involving Tk 304 crore in alleged irregularities.

They are: Azim Uddin Ahmed, Mohammed Shajahan, Benajir Ahmed, MA Kashem and Rehana Rahman.

In 2022, President Hamid reconstituted the board, reducing its members from 16 to 12 after a UGC probe found some members involved in anti-state activities, militancy sponsorship, and corruption.

Sadek Khan arrested over murder

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police arrested former Dhaka-13 Awami League lawmaker Sadek Khan in the West Nakhalpara area of the capital yesterday, in a case filed for killing a trucker Sujan, 24, on July 20 during the student movement.

Victim's brother Rafiqul Islam filed the case with Mohammadpur Police Station on August 22.

Sadek was arrested in the case, according to a text message sent by the Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

In the FIR, Sadek Khan was named as the 21st accused out of 79 named including the former prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

officials still remain in the posts, he said adding, "How the trust can be brought back by keeping these officials in the chair."

"This is an ongoing process. It may take some time. But you [addressing journalists] will see clean policing. Those [unprofessional officials] will not be in posts, who create a crisis on trust," he added.

"The issue of departmental action is ongoing," he said.

"We want to create a well-disciplined police force... where all policemen will work professionally," he said.

Asked about the unprofessional officers who might be evading accountability, the commissioner noted that their whereabouts are currently unknown but efforts are being made to address these issues.

He also refuted claims that favouritism based on district affiliations influences police appointments, asserting that professionalism should be the sole criterion for police roles.

Regarding "corruption" within the police force, Mainul pledged to form a professional police service devoid of corruption, irregularities, and injustice. He acknowledged the challenge of rebuilding trust and called for public support in overcoming the current crisis.

290 medical teams deployed for 24 hours, around 2.6 lakh people in Chattogram district were stranded in flood water, according to officials of Chattogram District Administration.

According to local sources, the district health staffers were supplying water purification tablets (WPT) and oral saline (ORS) to the people affected by flood in the upazilas, but many of them feared that these supplies would run out due to high demand.

"Almost all the tube wells in Narayanhat union in Fatickchhari upazila have gone under water, while most of the ponds were also submerged by flood water," said Abdul Halim, a resident in the union, adding, "We have received oral saline and water purification tablets from the relief teams."

However, officials of the district civil surgeon office assured that there was sufficient stock of WPT and ORS, so people should not panic.

Chattogram District Civil Surgeon Dr Ilias Chowdhury said, "We have sufficient stock of WPT and ORS to combat the present situation and we have already sent requisition for more supplies."

Asked about the stock, he said at present there are 1.11 lakh pieces of WPT and 3.48 lakh packets of ORS in stock in the district.

According to experts, many of the flood affected people would likely suffer from various water-borne diseases -- including diarrhoea, cholera, dysentery and jaundice.

Contacted, Dr Aniruddha Ghosh, professor of Medicine at Chittagong Medical College, said people in the flood affected areas are vulnerable to many diseases. Infants, young children and elderly people are the most vulnerable groups.

"So, they will need immediate medical care," he also said.

"Their drinking water and water for cooking and washing hands and mouth must be purified," he added.

His name was not included in FIR, but he was shown arrested in the case.

On August 20, the victim's father filed the case against Hasina and 90 others with Bhatara Police Station.

On August 14, Salman and Anisul were placed on a 10-day remand in a case filed over the death of shop employee Shahjahan Ali, 24, in the New Market area on July 16.

They were arrested in Dhaka's Sadarghat in the case on August 13.

On August 16, Ziaul was placed on an eight-day remand in the same case. He was arrested in Dhaka's Khilkhet on August 15.

On July 17, Ayesha Begum, mother of the victim Shahjahan, filed the case with New Market Police Station against some unnamed miscreants.

On August 20, Dipu Moni was placed on a four-day remand in the case filed over the death of a grocery shop owner, Abu Saeed, in Mohammadpur on July 19.

She was arrested from the capital's Baridhara DOHS area on August 19.

On August 13, Amir Hamza Shatil of Mohammadpur filed the murder case against Hasina and six others with a court.

In this case, the name of Dipu Moni was not included in FIR, but she was shown arrested.

Monjur Kabir said this terminal has special importance as a gateway for the economic growth of the country and global communication.

He emphasised completing the remaining work of the terminal-3 at the earliest.

The CAAB chairman expressed his satisfaction with the progress of the overall work and thanked all those involved in the project.

The third terminal project, costing Tk 21,300 crore, commenced on December 28, 2019. The government contributed Tk 5,000 crore, while the Japan International Cooperation Agency (Jica) provided the remaining funds.

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina made the soft launch of the much anticipated third terminal on October 6 the last year.

"On August 4, bhaia joined the protest at Bogura's Satmatha area. I was also there. Police hurled tear shells at the protesters while Awami League and Chhatra League activists also attacked them. I returned home around 2:00pm after sustaining injuries," he said.

"Around 3:00pm, facing two-pronged attacks by police and AL-BCL men, the protesters at Satmatha fled from the spot but bhaia took shelter on the Dak Bungalow premises. The AL-BCL goons swooped on him and stabbed and hacked him numerous times, leaving him dead," Uzzal alleged citing witnesses.

Some student protesters informed Uzzal about Selim's death around 3:30pm.

Selim's father, Sikandar Hossain, filed a murder case against Sheikh Hasina, Obaidul Quader, and 99 other local AL leaders and activists with Bogura Sadar Police Station on August 16, said Saihan Oliullah, OC of the police station.

Youth sent to jail for vandalising temples

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Rajshahi

A Rajshahi court has sent an 18-year-old youth to jail on charges of vandalising three temples in Bagha upazila, Rajshahi, on Friday.

Bagha Police Station Officer-in-Charge Abu Siddique said Rabbi Hossain, of Kaligram Miapara, was caught red-handed by villagers while damaging idols and equipment at Kaligram Pundaripara Temple.

Rabbi confessed that his actions were driven by anger over several Facebook posts regarding the flash floods in Bangladesh, which he blamed on India's decision to open several dams.

A case was filed against Rabbi, a local madrasa student, by Arun Sarkar, the president of Kaligram Pundaripara Temple.

Sujit Kumar Panday, president of the Bagha Upazila Puja Udjapan Committee, confirmed that Rabbi also broke into and vandalised equipment at the Palapara and Ghospara temples earlier that day.

This rickshaw puller donates a portion of his daily earnings to students who were collecting relief for victims of the ongoing flood situation. Despite his own financial struggles, the man wants to stand by his countrymen in this moment of crisis. The photo was taken from the Sadar road in Barishal city yesterday.

Tk 50cr embankment sinks under sand in a month

Locals allege use of low quality concrete blocks, geo-bags

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

Construction of an embankment on Teesta river was completed on June 30 in Gobordhan area of Mahishkhocha union under Aditmari upazila of Lalmonirhat.

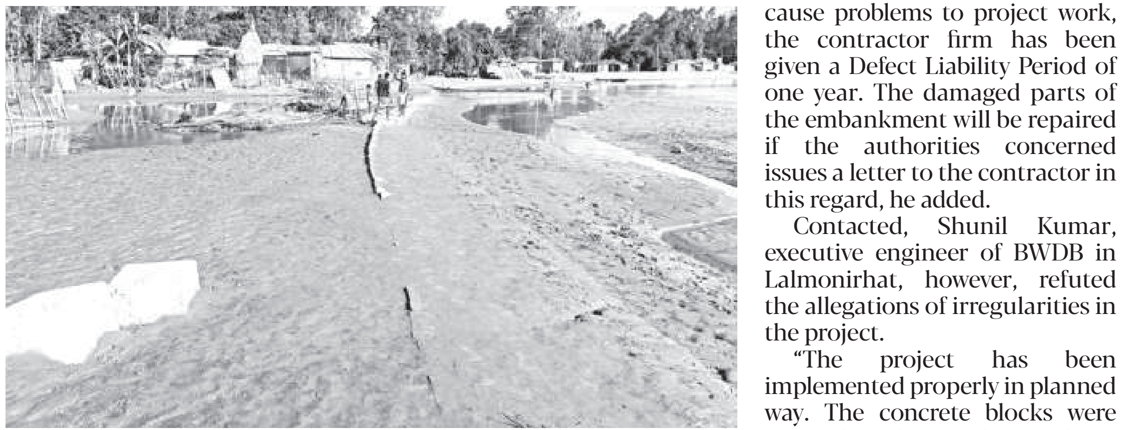
Bangladesh Water Development Board implemented the project, aimed at enhancing protection to the people on a 2,450-metre stretch of the riverbank from erosion, at a cost of Tk 49,34,95,000 in eight phases.

However, within just a month after completion, the embankment sank under sand.

Locals alleged of gross irregularities in implementation of the project.

Wishing anonymity, some locals alleged that the contractors had not only used inferior quality concrete blocks and geo-bags for the project, but also illegally lifted sand from the project area and sold it for around Tk 7 crore, which in turn made the embankment area vulnerable and eventually led it to sink under sand after a flash flood hit the area a few days after the project's completion.

"Earlier, in case of flash floods, water would recede in a couple of days. This time, the water is not receding even in two weeks. The embankment has become a curse to the riverside people instead of a boon as it was not implemented in a planned way," said Mafizul Islam, a local farmer.



According to sources at BWDB in Lalmonirhat, four contracting companies -- M/s Rupantar, Techbay International, M/s Mostafa and Sons and MC-BC JV – were tasked with the project and a total 4,55,284 concrete blocks and 1.30 lakh sand-filled geo-bags weighing 250 kilogrammes were used to construct the embankment in eight packages.

Wishing anonymity, a BWDB official in Lalmonirhat said five of the eight packages of the project were controlled by Ershad Hossain, younger brother of Mizanur Rahman, APS of former social welfare minister.

Due to Ershad's political influence, the BWDB officials could not supervise the project work properly, he added.

Contacted, Ershad Hossain declined to comment in this regard.

Farhad Hossain, proprietor of the contracting firm M/s Rupantar, said he did not visit the project site as the site manager took care of everything.

Since a natural calamity may cause problems to project work, the contractor firm has been given a Defect Liability Period of one year. The damaged parts of the embankment will be repaired if the authorities concerned issues a letter to the contractor in this regard, he added.

Contacted, Shunil Kumar, executive engineer of BWDB in Lalmonirhat, however, refuted the allegations of irregularities in the project.

"The project has been implemented properly in planned way. The concrete blocks were covered under sand as a huge amount of sediment was brought by the flash flood. The BWDB team tasked with the Project Completion Report will visit the project area very soon. If any defect is found, the contractor will rectify it during the DLP period," he said.

Salman, Anisul, Dipu Moni on fresh remand

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday placed Salman F Rahman, private industry affairs adviser to former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, former law minister Anisul Huq, former social welfare minister Dipu Moni, former chief whip ASM Feroz and former army officer Maj Gen Ziaul Ahsan on different terms of remand for interrogation in murder cases.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Mohammad Jashim passed separate orders in the cases, a sub-inspector working in the court told The Daily Star.

Salman, Anisul and Ziaul were placed on a fresh 10-day remand in two cases filed over deaths of a honurs forth-year student, Sabuj Ali, 26, in the New Market area and a 11-grader, Khalid Hasan Saifullah, in the Lalbagh area of Dhaka during quota reform protests on July 16 and 18.

The three were produced before the court with a 20-day remand prayer in the cases on completion of their first phase remand.

On July 17, Nur Nabi, brother of Sabuj, filed a case with New Market Police Station against some unnamed miscreants.

In this case, the names of Salman, Anisul and Ziaul were not included in the FIR, but they were shown arrested.

On August 19, Kamrul Hasan, father of Saifullah, filed a case with Lalbagh Police Station against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, Salman, Anisul and 49 others.

In addition, Dipu Moni was placed on a fresh four-day remand yesterday in a case filed over the death of Suman Sikdar in the city's Badda on July 19.

She was produced before the court with a fresh 10-day remand prayer in the case on completion of her first phase remand.

On August 20, Masuma, mother of the victim, filed the case with Badda Police Station against Hasina, Dipu Moni and 178 others.

Yesterday, Feroz was placed on a seven-day remand in a case filed over the death of Sohag Miah, 16, in Bhatara on July 19.

Shama Obaid sued over murder

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Faridpur

A murder case was filed yesterday against Shama Obaid, the suspended BNP central organising secretary (Faridpur division), along with 95 others, including 35 named individuals, in Faridpur.

The case was registered at Nagarkanda Police Station around 1:00am in connection with the death of Kabir Bhuiya, who was killed during a clash between supporters of Shama Obaid and those of Shahidul Islam Babul, the suspended general secretary of the Krishak Dal's central committee, on August 21.

Monzilla Begum, 44, the wife of the deceased, filed the case, according to Aminur Rahman, officer-in-charge of the police station.

As per the case statement, Shama Obaid had allegedly instructed her supporters to disrupt a road meeting organised by Babul in the Nagarakanda petrol pump area around 11:00am on August 21. Shama's supporters reportedly hacked and beat Kabir Bhuiya to death near Nagarkanda Bazar that day. Several others were also injured in the clash.

No arrests have been made yet, the OC said, adding that efforts are underway to arrest the accused.

Implement CHT accord fully Demands CHT Accord Implementation Movement

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Chittagong Hill Tracts Accord Implementation Movement has called on the interim government to develop a clear and actionable plan with specific deadlines and mechanisms to ensure accountability in order to fully implement the CHT Accord.

Representatives of the movement made the call at a press conference at Dhaka Reporters' Unity yesterday, stressing that it was essential to implement the core elements of the accord, which remained largely unfulfilled for 26 years, to establish peace and stability in the CHT region.

They presented a seven-point demand in this regard.

The demands also include: ending military supervision in CHT region; empowering the regional councils and the CHT three district councils under the Accord, ensuring democratic, representative, and effective local governance; ensuring land rights and rehabilitation for people of CHT; integrating them into the country's mainstream economic progress; reserving special seats for indigenous people in all local government bodies in the plainland districts; and establishing a separate land commission for the indigenous people of plainlands to address their specific needs and challenges.

Khairul Chowdhury, a teacher of sociology department at Dhaka University and also joint coordinator of the movement, presented the demands.

To implement these demands, the movement proposed five immediate actions to the government, including reconstitution of the CHT Accord Implementation Committee, urgent reform of the CHT Land Dispute Resolution Commission, initiating dialogue with the Regional Council, and reconstitution of the advisory council to the CHT affairs ministry.

The demands include ending military supervision, empowering regional councils, ensuring land rights, rehabilitation, special seats for indigenous people, and a separate land commission for plainland indigenous communities.

Prof Robaet Ferdous of DU's mass communication and journalism department, said it was time to address the oppression faced by indigenous communities in the hills.

"For the past 50 years, people in the hill areas have been living under harsh military rule. If the country's 61 other districts have democratic governance, why should three remaining districts be under military control?" he asked.

Dipayan Khisa of the Adivasi Forum and Myentthein Promila of Bangladesh Indigenous Peoples Forum also spoke, while Jakir Hossain, joint coordinator of the movement, moderated the event.

DMP chief pledges to restore public trust

Police interrogated the arrested VIPs to know about those, who provided money, advice, and statements against the students' movement, said Dhaka Metropolitan Police Commissioner Md Mainul Hasan yesterday.

He was replying to a reporter's query at the "Commissioner's Meet the Press" at the media centre in the capital's Minto Road.

Mainul provided updates on the investigation against several high-profile arrestees, including former ministers, a state minister, and an adviser from the previous government.

The commissioner also addressed the issue of unprofessional behaviour of law enforcers, which he attributed to a loss of public trust.

MANIFESTING TRUE EQUALITY

MITHILA

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Actress and activist Rafiath Rashid Mithila firmly believes that whenever one witnesses injustice, they should stand up against it. According to her, the more people who take a stand against wrongdoing, the more likely it is that positive change will occur.

"When I saw students being mistreated, I couldn't stay silent—I had to speak out," shared the actress, who gained widespread admiration and support when she joined the anti-discrimination student movement.

Even now, she continues to be embraced by the love and respect of many. Reflecting on this, she said, "The students were the heart of the movement—they deserve all the credit for any praise or love received. We were simply there to support them and stand by their side in whatever way we could."

She continued, "In the fight against discrimination, students united setting aside differences in religion, race, or background, and took to the streets. That's exactly how it should be. We need to speak out against injustice wherever it occurs. Only then can we build a better nation."

"When people protest against injustice, we must stand in solidarity with them. Those who have lost a loved one are the ones who truly feel the depth of that pain and loss—a sorrow that lingers for a lifetime. Witnessing these tragic killings, I felt compelled to raise my voice out of a sense of basic human compassion," Mithila asserted.

When asked about her hopes for the future, the actress shared, "I wish for a future without injustice, where people feel secure in their lives, and power is not abused. I envision a country of true equality, where everyone has equal rights and opportunities."

Mithila also reflected on how people come together to support flood victims, regardless of religion or background. "This is the true essence of Bangladesh. I hope for a nation where equality prevails, and people support one another in times of need."

Several districts across the country are facing severe flooding, leaving millions stranded. When asked what should be done in such a situation, Mithila said, "I am doing what I can within my means. Whenever floods occur, I make an effort to contribute, and I'm doing the same now. It's heartening to see everyone, regardless of political affiliation or religion, coming together to help as much as possible. Unity in crisis makes us stronger than ever."

Regarding the flood victims, she added, "Many people, both domestically and internationally, are eager to donate funds for relief efforts. This aid must be used effectively. From my end, I am coordinating and verifying necessary sources to ensure that the donations are being properly allocated."

As the conversation came to a close, Mithila expressed her current emotional state, saying, "Right now, I'm not in the right emotional state to return to acting."

'Joruri Shongjog' concert raises over Tk 21 lakh for flood victims

Last Friday, the Joruri Shongjog concert at Dhaka University's Raju Memorial Sculpture raised funds for flood victims, drawing a large crowd in the afternoon.

The concert featured performances by more than 30 bands and artistes, including Shironamhin, Shonar Bangla Circus, F Minor, Arghya Deb, Krishnakali, and Shayan, among others. Attendees contributed both funds and essential relief items to support the flood victims.

According to Shironamhin, one of the pro bono performers, the concert raised Tk 21,41,200 and accumulated about 20 truckloads of relief supplies for flood-affected communities.

Taylor Swift shatters Michael Jackson's record at Wembley

Taylor Swift's Eras Tour has set a new record, making her the first solo artiste to perform at London's Wembley Stadium the most times in a single tour, according to The Hollywood Reporter.

During her Tuesday show, she announced to her fans, "You just made me the first solo artiste to ever play Wembley eight times in a single tour," as reported by the BBC. "We will never, ever be able to thank you enough for it."

Swift broke the previous record held by Michael Jackson, who performed at the stadium seven times during his 1988 Bad Tour. Additionally, the pop group Take That also performed there eight times during their 2011 Progress Tour.

many commuters waiting long hours to reach their destinations.

The recent protests by various groups after the fall of Hasina have only exacerbated the situation, leaving commuters to bear the brunt of the metro rail's absence.

After the fall of the Hasina-led government on August 5, the interim government instructed DMTCL to resume metro services by August 17, except at the vandalised stations.

However, DMTCL announced delays due to an "unavoidable situation," which later revealed to be a work abstention by around 700 employees from grades 10 to 20, who began striking on August 6, demanding a pay hike to match their higher-grade colleagues.

The metro rail authority decided to resume operations on August 25 [today] after the employees returned to work on August 19.

per ICC rules. He needs immediate removal from the cricket team.

He needs to be suspended from all forms of cricket for the integrity of Bangladesh cricket and sports, he said in the notice.

The case was filed with Adabor Police Station on August 22 over the killing of a garment factory worker Md Rubel.

Shakib Al Hasan has been accused in the case. Besides, former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, Obaidul Quader and 156 named and 400-500 unidentified people have also been accused in the case.

Lawyer Sajib Mahmood Alam told The Daily Star that Shakib is now in Pakistan with the Bangladesh national cricket team.

He also said that his client has not given any time limit to BCB for bringing Shakib back to the country and for removing him from the cricket team, as a new team has been appointed in the BCB administration and they will need some time to function properly.

Mushfiqur scales Asian summit

His near nine-hour vigil at the crease, which began four overs into the post-lunch session on the third day and ran until the fourth day's final session, wrested control of the match away from the hosts and allowed the visitors to head into the final day leading by 94 runs.

Mushfiqur has previously scored six Test centuries at home, including a couple of double hundreds against Zimbabwe, a 200 against the Lankans in Galle back in 2013 -- which was the maiden Test double hundred by a Bangladesh player -- and made 127 against India in Hyderabad, 2017.

The 37-year-old also has centuries in New Zealand and West Indies, making him the only Bangladesh batter with Test tons in six Test nations.

On the fourth day, Mushfiqur lost his overnight partner Liton Das (56) early but found ample support from Mehedi Hasan Miraz, with whom he batted for 56 overs and accumulated 196 runs, forming the best-ever eighth-wicket stand in Test cricket for Bangladesh.

Mushfiqur, who was unbeaten on 55 after the third day, reached the three-figure mark right at the cusp of lunch, with a glance down fine leg against off-spinner Agha Salman.

As he completed the second run to reach his 11th Test hundred, he punched the air and let out a deafening roar, releasing the emotions he had held in for hours. He then proceeded to perform a Sajdah before putting back his gear, regaining his composure, and resuming his vigilance.

After playing out the entire second session alongside Miraz, and also getting a life on 150 thanks to Babar Azam, Mushfiqur seemed destined to score his fourth double ton.

But when he was just nine runs away from joining the likes of Sunil Gavaskar and Zaheer Abbas, he fell to pacer Mohammad Ali, playing a loose shot on a delivery that bounced a tad more than he anticipated, took an outside edge, and nestled into the gloves of Mohammad Rizwan.

The agony of missing the double ton was apparent in Mushfiqur's expression; however, falling nine runs short of 200 does not diminish the effort it took to score the previous 191 runs.

Even though the match is likely to end in a draw unless something dramatic happens on the final day today, fans of Bangladesh cricket will remember it as the game where Mushfiqur conquered the Asian summit.

Worry over fresh influx grows abuses tragically reminiscent of the military atrocities in 2017," said Elaine Pearson, Asia director at Human Rights Watch in a statement on August 21.

Prof Sk Tawfique M Haque, director at the South Asian Institute of Policy and Governance at North South University, said the AA once was soft on the Rohingyas, but now the rebel group is not happy with them.

The reality in Rakhine suggests that the AA will be eventually taking full control of the state. In that case, Bangladesh needs to make contact with AA through a backchannel, while the diplomatic relations with whoever is in the central control should continue, he told The Daily Star yesterday.

"We don't see any scope in the near future of Rohingya repatriation. However, the current interim government is well accepted, especially in the western world. This can also be an opportunity to pressurise the AA," Prof Tawfique said.

Meanwhile, in a meeting in Thailand last week, Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi said China supports a democratic transition in Myanmar and backs a regional plan to find a way out of the ongoing crisis in the Southeast Asian country.

Bangladesh needs to closely follow the developments relating to Myanmar. If Bangladesh can include the issue in the regional or global level negotiations, a solution may be found, Prof Tawfique said.

Providing humanitarian aid to the one million Rohingya in the camps is challenging to Bangladesh because of the dwindling supply of funds and Bangladesh's economic state.

This year, around $852 million is needed for humanitarian aid at the camps. So far, less than 40 percent of the sum has come through.

"Managing the increasing number of Rohingya will be a real challenge with declining funding. The international community must understand the multiple challenges Bangladesh faces today and extend their hand," Tawfique said.

"The rapidly escalating conflict in Myanmar is all the more reason for the United Nations Security Council to finally refer the situation in the country to the International Criminal Court. There can be no progress without accountability," Amnesty International's Myanmar Researcher Joe Freeman said in a statement.

"The future of Myanmar hinges on protecting, promoting and upholding the human rights of all people in the country."

injured detainees first and then hand them over to the jail authority. But in this case, they did not."

Manik was detained by Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) Friday night from the Dona border in Sylhet's Kanaighat upazila while trying to flee to India.

That night, he alleged that he was robbed and beaten by a group of people at the border.

After he was handed over to Kanaighat Police Station last morning, police produced him to Judicial Magistrate Alamgir Hossain's court, showing him an arrestee under Section 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The court later sent him to jail, said court inspector Jamshed Alam.

Jamshed said that as the arrestee is a retired justice, the jail authority was ordered to provide adequate facilities as per the jail code. The court also ordered treatment for Justice Manik as he informed the court of his illness.

"He is accused in murder cases filed with Dhaka's Lalbagh, Adabor, and Badda police stations. He has also been accused in several other cases," the inspector added.

of this report last night.

Moin Uddin Razib, the convener of the Anderkella Ward Jubo Dal, filed the attempt-to-murder case with the Kotwali Police Station.

Some other accused named in the FIR are former MP of Chandgaon-Boalkhali constituency Abdus Salam, former MP of Pahartali-Double Mooring constituency Mohiuddin Bacchu, MA Latif of Bandar-Patenga constituency, former MP of Sitakunda constituency Didarul Alam, former President of Chittagong University Chhatra League Shahjahan Chowdhury, city Swechchhasebak League President Debashish Debu, city unit Chhatra League President Imran Ahmed, General Secretary Zakaria Dostagir, and former central Jubo League member Rintu Das.

The other accused in the case are mostly leaders and activists of the Awami League and affiliated organisations.

According to the case statement, the plaintiff was threatened and assaulted by the named and unnamed accused with sticks, roads, and weapons while he was attending the student movement protests on August 4.

On the other hand, Inspector (Investigation) Ripon Kumar Das of Kotwali Police Station filed the case over the attack on the police station, accusing 30,000 to 40,000 unnamed miscreants under various sections of the Penal Code, the Explosives Act, and the Special Powers Act.

In the case statement, Rajon claimed that around 30,000 to 40,000 attackers stormed the police station on August 5, carrying weapons and explosives. They looted government property, damaged vehicles and documents, and stole firearms, ammunition, and cash after vandalising the station and setting it on fire.

A series of cases are being filed against the Awami League lawmakers, ministers, and advisers following the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government on August 5 amid massive protests by the students and people.

After the fall of the regime, at least 43 police officials were killed as hundreds of police establishments including police stations came under attack by the mobs.

tailback on both ends of the highway has crossed 50km. Traffic is very slow.

"Passengers travelling between Dhaka and Chattogram are facing untold sufferings, as they are forced to wade through floodwater for three to four kilometres with their belongings. We are on the ground and are working with other agencies to keep the road open... ," said the police official.

Our correspondent reported from Feni that floodwater was receding in Mahipal, but there was knee-to-waist-deep water between Lalpol and Baraiyarhat. Volunteers were seen setting up camps at various locations along the road and conducting rescue and relief operations in nearby villages.

Feni RHD Sub Assistant Engineer Muhaiminul Sohag said, "Five to six kilometres of the highway in Feni's Lalpol is still submerged, which has completely halted vehicular movement.

"We have received a report that the Lemua Bridge, over the Selonia river, in Feni has been damaged as it was submerged by floodwater."

ROBBERY NEW WORRY

Robbers are a new worry for the flood-affected people, many of whom do not have electricity.

Nighttime robberies have been reported in several areas, including on highways and villages, according to sources.

Posing as flood victims or relief workers, the robbers have been looting locals and relief workers in the flood-affected areas, they said.

Omar Faruk Emon, a resident of Paschim Joyar village in Karerhat union of Mirsarai, said, "People panicked after a group of robbers looted several homes on Friday night. To alert everyone, locals used loudspeakers of mosques."

Incidents of robberies on highways have also been making the rounds on social media since Friday night.

SP Khairul said, "We have heard about several incidents of robberies, but we could not verify them because no one reported the matter to the police. Considering the situation, we have asked local police stations and law enforcement agencies to remain alert. Drivers were also advised to stay vigilant."

GLOBAL PLASTIC TREATY

Experts meet as talks near

AFP, Bangkok

With months until crunch talks on the world's first binding treaty on plastic pollution, experts are meeting in Bangkok to discuss financing options and problematic plastics.

The four-day gathering is a largely technical waypoint on the road to final negotiations in late November in South Korea's Busan.

There, countries are hoping to seal a potentially groundbreaking deal to tackle the gargantuan problem of plastic pollution.

The scale of the issue is almost unprecedented -- microplastics have been found in the deepest ocean trenches, highest mountain peaks, in clouds and even breastmilk.

Plastic production has doubled in 20 years and at current rates it could triple by 2060, according to the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD).

Yet over 90 percent of plastic is not recycled, with much of it dumped in nature or buried in landfills.

Negotiators have already met four times to discuss a deal that could include production caps, unified rules on recyclability, and even bans on certain plastics or chemical components.

However significant gaps remain, including on whether the treaty will be adopted by consensus or a majority vote.

Other flashpoints include whether plastic production will be addressed, Eirik Lindebjerg, global plastics policy lead at WWF, told AFP.

SYNAGOGUE BLAST

France opens terror probe

AFP, Montpellier

An explosion outside a synagogue in southern France wounded a police officer early yesterday, in what authorities said was being treated as a potential terror attack.

Security around Jewish sites was tightened following the early Saturday blast outside the Beth Yaacov synagogue in the seaside resort of La Grande Motte, near the city of Montpellier.

A fire was also started at the entrance of the synagogue, but was quickly put out, with two doors damaged, investigators said.

President Emmanuel Macron called the incident "an act of terror".

Two cars outside the synagogue burst into flames after a gas canister likely exploded inside one of the vehicles, police said. The blast wounded a police officer, police said, without providing any other details.

La Grande Motte's mayor, Stephan Rossignol, said that CCTV had picked up images of an individual setting fire to the cars.

The potential suspect seen in the footage was brandishing a Palestinian flag, a source close to the probe added.

Another source said that the man was carrying two empty bottles and had a Palestinian flag draped around his waist as left the scene on foot.

Zelensky vows more 'retribution' for Russia

Signs anti-Russia laws to mark independence day; rivals exchange 230 prisoners of war

AGENCIES

President Volodymyr Zelensky vowed more "retribution" against Russia on Ukrainian Independence Day yesterday, as Kyiv and Moscow announced the exchange of 230 prisoners just over two weeks into Ukraine's surprise offensive on Kursk.

Zelensky also signed a law banning the Russian-linked branch of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church and called the legislation a "liberation from Moscow's devils".

Kyiv marked its independence from the Soviet Union at a tense moment in the long war as it mounts a push into Russia and Moscow eyes more east Ukrainian towns.

Zelensky published a video of him standing in a hilly, forested area filmed near from where Ukraine launched its shock incursion on August 6.

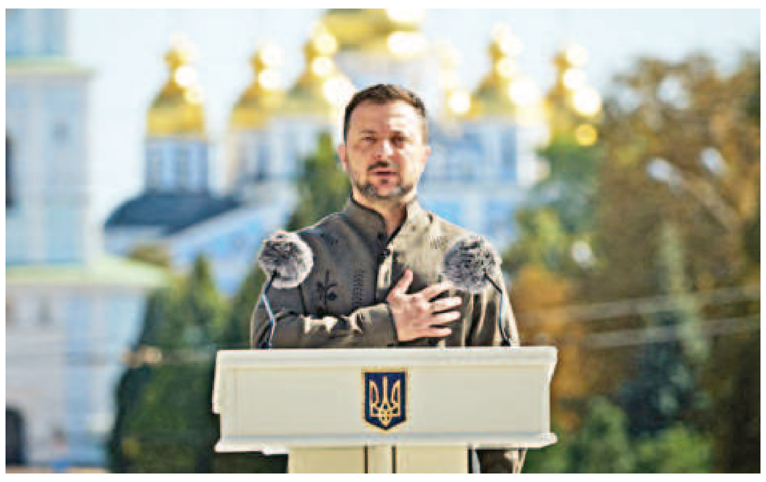
"Russia was seeking one thing: to destroy us... Instead, today we celebrate the 33rd Independence Day of Ukraine and what the enemy brought to our land has now returned to its home," he said.

The Ukrainian leader said Russia will "know what retribution is" and called President Vladimir Putin a "sick man from Red Square who constantly threatens everyone with the red button," referring to nuclear war.

Soon afterwards, Ukraine's military intelligence said it had carried out a "successful" attack on an ammunition depot in Russia's southern Voronezh region.

Zelensky held official independence celebrations on Kyiv's Sofia Square, with Polish President Andrzej Duda and Lithuanian Prime Minister Ingrida Simonyte.

In Russia, President Putin held a meeting with army chief Valery Gerasimov with the Kremlin saying they had discussed "countering enemy forces invading the Kursk region and measures being taken to destroy them."



The Kremlin's choice of language was a break from previous statements that downplayed the Ukrainian surprise move.

While it has visibly rattled Moscow, Ukraine's Kursk operation has not slowed Russia's advance in eastern Ukraine.

Kyiv yesterday said that a Russian bombardment in the eastern city of Kostyantynivka had killed five people and Ukraine has carried out evacuations from the hub of Pokrovsk amid fears it will fall.

Both Kyiv and Moscow said they had returned 115 captive servicemen each in a deal brokered by the United Arab Emirates.

Kyiv had said one of the aims of its Kursk operation was to gain more Russian captives to get back its men from Russia. There were widespread reports in Russia of young conscripts going missing in Kursk.

Ukraine yesterday also ratified a statute that paves the way for Ukraine to join the International Criminal Court (ICC).

US sanctions 400 entities for aiding Russia's war

REUTERS, Washington

The United States on Friday imposed sanctions on more than 400 entities and individuals for supporting Russia's war effort in Ukraine, the State Department said, including Chinese companies that US officials believe are helping Moscow skirt Western sanctions and build up its military.

Washington has repeatedly warned Beijing over its support for Russia's defense industrial base and has already issued hundreds of sanctions aimed at restricting Moscow's ability to exploit certain technologies for military purposes.

Friday's sanctions include measures against companies in China involved in shipping machine tools and microelectronics to Russia, according to a State Department fact sheet outlining its sanctions against 190 targets.

The US Treasury Department said it was also targeting transnational networks involved in procuring ammunition and other materiel for Russia, helping Russian oligarchs and others evade sanctions and laundering gold for a sanctioned company.

The Biden administration also added 123 entities to its US export control list known as the Entity List which forces suppliers to obtain licenses before shipping to targeted companies. Those added on Friday included 63 entities in Russia and 42 in China, according to a notice published in the Federal Register.

The US Treasury said it was imposing sanctions on several Russian financial technology, securities, real estate lending and other financial firms, but it stopped short of imposing sanctions against foreign banks for aiding transactions that support Russia's war effort.

The Treasury has warned banks since December that continued transactions in Russia's war economy could cut them off from the dollar-based financial system.

The State Department's sanctions include moves aimed at stifling Russia's energy sector and against companies in Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and Central Asian economies that the US believes are helping Russia evade sanctions, the State Department said.

Targets include the import-export arm of China's Dalian Machine Tool Group, which the State Department said had supplied $4 million of dual-use items to Russian companies.

The Treasury also targeted more than 20 Hong Kong and China-based firms it said were supplying Russia's military industrial base.

The spokesperson for China's embassy in Washington, Liu Pengyu, said Beijing "firmly opposes unilateral sanctions based on 'long-arm jurisdiction'" and added that "normal trade between China and Russia should not be undermined, still less turned into an instrument to smear and contain China."

The latest US sanctions include measures against firms supplying components used in the Orlan drones that Russia is using in Ukraine.

Washington also sought the sanctions to disrupt future energy projects in Russia and its shipment of liquefied natural gas. It targeted Russia's $21 billion Arctic LNG 2 project, which has already been hit by Western sanctions that have curbed its access to ice-class tankers, and other companies involved in future energy projects in Russia, according to the fact sheet.

FESTIVAL KNIFE ATTACK

German police hunt suspect

AFP, Solingen

German police yesterday hunted a man who stabbed three people to death and wounded eight others at a street festival in the city of Solingen, with a terror motive for the attack "not excluded".

The knifeman went on a rampage in the western town of Solingen late on Friday, as thousands had gathered for the first night of a "Festival of Diversity", part of a series of events to mark the town's 650th anniversary.

Yesterday, police announced they had detained a person as part of the probe, with a prosecutor later saying it was a 15-year-old who may have been in contact with the knifeman.

"The author (of the attack) has not yet been identified," Markus Caspers, prosecutor of Duesseldorf that lies just west of Solingen, told a press conference.

"We have not been able to identify a motive for now, but in view of all of the circumstances, we are working under the assumption that the initial suspicion of a terrorist motive cannot be excluded," Caspers said.

The people killed were men of 56 and 67 years of age and a 56-year-old woman, officials said.

"The victims were completely unknown with no known ties between them, so based on this we're concluding that it could be a terror act," Caspers said, adding that "no other motive is evident at this time".

Four of the wounded were in a "serious" condition.

Interior Minister Nancy Faeser said Germany's "security authorities are doing everything they can to catch the perpetrator" of the "horrific act", while Chancellor Olaf Scholz said he "must be caught quickly and punished".

A woman kneels at a makeshift memorial of flowers and candles for the victims yesterday close to the scene where at least three people were killed and several injured when a man attacked them with a knife late Friday in Solingen, western Germany, during a festival to mark the city's 650th anniversary.

Pakistan blast kills two children

Injures 16

REUTERS, Quetta

A bomb blast in southwestern Pakistan killed two children and injured 16 people yesterday, police officials said.

Seven policemen were among those injured when the remote-controlled bomb, attached to a motorcycle, detonated near police headquarters in Pishin, the city's senior superintendent of police, Manzoor Buledi, told Reuters.

"Explosives were planted in a motorcycle which was parked in the area," said police officer Mujeeb-Ur-Rehman, adding that the two children killed were passing through the area when the blast occurred.

Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif expressed deep sorrow and grief over what he called the martyrdom of young children in the explosion. In a statement he expressed condolences to their families.

An extraordinary flood relief campaign

Let's keep up this culture of volunteerism

An extraordinary example has been set on the Dhaka University (DU) campus over the past three days. Under the leadership of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, DU students have launched a massive relief campaign for the flood-affected people of the country. The campaign, which began on the morning of August 22, is still ongoing, with people from all walks of life—from corporate workers to homemakers, from small children to elderly citizens, from day labourers to rickshaw pullers—contributing whatever they can. While students from DU are working around the clock to collect and organise relief goods, students from other institutions and volunteers have also joined the effort. The nation has not witnessed such a display of compassion and unity in a long time.

Since the start of the student-led mass uprising that led to the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government, Bangladesh has witnessed the power and unity of students, as well as the general populace, who have been desperate to bring about real change in the country. Now, as the country faces one of the deadliest floods in its recent history—which has already affected 48 lakh people in 12 districts—our students have once again shown us the way by uniting the entire nation. And it's not just the students of DU—other educational institutions and voluntary organisations across the country have also come forward to help those affected.

Over the past few decades, we have somewhat forgotten the culture of volunteerism that once existed in the country. The last times we witnessed such volunteerism were during the floods of 1988 and 1998, when people from all walks of life came forward to help. After the fall of the Awami League government, when there was virtually no government in the country and the police force was reluctant to perform their duties, we saw how our students managed traffic and safeguarded their localities and places of worship of religious minorities. We must revive this culture of volunteerism and stand by our people during any future crises—whether they be natural disasters or other emergencies.

Reportedly, by the second day of the relief campaign on August 22, around Tk 1.5 crore had been deposited into the relief fund operated by the students at the TSC, which is truly remarkable. While the biggest challenge in any such mass effort is organising the relief goods and utilising the received funds efficiently, it seems that the students are well-organised to do so. To help support the flood victims, we should all step forward to contribute whatever we can from our own positions. We must be prepared to help the them after the water recedes, as they will need more assistance with rehabilitation and livelihood opportunities. And finally, we should continue such volunteerism for the sake of improving our country and for the betterment of all its people.

Prevent a repeat of Rohingya atrocities

International community should play a more active role

We are deeply concerned that the United Nations has stated the Myanmar conflict is becoming so volatile that the atrocities of 2017 may be repeated against the Rohingyas. The UN human rights chief Volker Turk expressed concern on Friday, saying that the situation across Myanmar, particularly in Rakhine, has sharply deteriorated recently. Additionally, reports suggest that hundreds of civilians have been killed while trying to flee the fighting.

Exactly seven years ago today, the second phase of the Rohingya genocide had started. It is estimated that between August 25 and September 24, 2017, at least 6,700 Rohingya were killed. Despite the Myanmar government dismissing these findings as exaggerations, the UN found evidence of widespread human rights violations, including extrajudicial killings, summary executions, gang rapes, the arson of Rohingya villages, businesses and schools, among other horrific atrocities. Currently, a case is ongoing at the International Court of Justice (ICJ), accusing Myanmar of abetting genocide against the Rohingya ethnic group.

Following the events of 2017, an estimated 750,000 Rohingyas fled from Myanmar into Bangladesh and took shelter in various refugee camps. Despite repeated dialogues between Myanmar and Bangladesh for the safe repatriation of these Rohingyas back to their homeland, we have seen little to no progress made over the years. With clashes between the Arakan Army and Myanmar's ruling junta worsening, the possibility of further destabilisation in the region due to the ongoing situation in Myanmar seems to be rising rapidly.

Reportedly, thousands of Rohingyas have already been forced to flee again on foot, with the Arakan Army herding them repeatedly into locations that offer scant safe haven. Finding themselves trapped between the military and its allies and the Arakan Army, many of them are again looking to cross into Bangladesh. Given that Bangladesh is already overwhelmed with its own issues, as well as struggling to continue providing support to the Rohingya that had earlier sought shelter within its territories, the influx of even more Rohingya into Bangladesh could prove disastrous.

The burden of supporting the Rohingya—on humanitarian grounds, and rightly so—has been massive on Bangladesh. As such, we invite the international community to be more active in solving the Myanmar crisis so that this burden can be lifted and the region can regain some of its lost stability. We hope that every influential member of the international community, including the collective West, China and India, will urgently respond to this call.

Regain the land and regain its soul too

STRATEGICALLY SPEAKING

Brig Gen Shahedul Anam Khan, ndc, psc (retd) is a former associate editor of The Daily Star.

SHAHEDUL ANAM KHAN

We had lost both in the last decade and a half. We belonged to the land, but the land was anything but ours. Those who usurped power over time became like Doctor Faustus, and sold not only the soul for an eternal life but its body too to the devil. Otherwise, how can one be moved to tears at the destruction of a statue but remain impassive and unmoved by the deliberate killings of hundreds of young people? Ambition and greed trumped over ethics and morality, public good was sacrificed for personal aggrandisement, and the country was subordinated to the self. We were ruled, not governed.

The land was not ours because we were deprived of the right to choose our leaders to represent and govern the country. We were not only denied the right to shape our own destiny and determine the trajectory of our progress, but we were also robbed of our right to criticise the usurpers, to question them and hold them accountable.

Imagine for a moment that the people, being the employer—because it is their money that pays for the perks, privileges and all the trappings that go with the VIP tag, from the highest office of the country to the lowest paid peon—had lost their right to question whether their employees were doing their jobs properly and, if necessary, admonish them for dereliction of duty. Various anti-people and anti-democratic laws, such as the Digital Security Act, were enacted through a submissive parliament and validated by a compliant judiciary, hanging over the people like the sword of Damocles. Crossing their defined line meant incarceration, enforced disappearance and, in some cases, death.

So great was the fear infused by the coercive nature of the administration that even the media—the very few that had not surrendered to and become a part of the establishment—exercised such extreme level of self-censorship that it contradicted their primary responsibility of informing the people and holding the establishment to account (my article, "Surrender of the Fourth Estate?," The Daily Star, February 27, 2019).

We now have the opportunity to correct the wrongs that were done over the past 15 years. PHOTO: STAR

Can we rightfully claim the land to be ours when emissaries from a so-called friendly country applies "friendly" pressure on an opposition leader unwilling to participate in an election which had zero credibility, urging his participation to lend it validity so that a proxy in Bangladesh could come to power and do their bidding? The result: 15 years of politics without democracy, a parliament with a peculiar and unique arrangement where the opposition was also a part of the government and where laws were enacted by trampling on the people's interests.

Can we claim the land to be ours when the state abdicates its bounden duty to ensure safety and security of individuals and groups? Dissenting voices were silenced through enforced disappearances, extrajudicial killings and stage-managed encounters with the same narratives. Government agencies' operatives, in plain clothes, were on overdrive, picking up people without even adhering to legal norms. The agency that was supposed to provide security to the people became the cause of their insecurity (my article, "When state becomes the cause of its own insecurity," The Daily Star, July 22, 2010).

How can we claim the land to be ours when our strategic assets are frittered away to meet the so-called security concerns and geo-strategic and economic interest of a big neighbour? I don't recall any bilateral agreement or treaty in the last 15 years being ratified by Parliament. National interest was sacrificed at the altar of partisan interests. The comments and actions of some advisers to the prime minister made one wonder whether they were appointed to uphold the interests of the nation or the neighbour (my article, "What have we done with our strategic assets?," The Daily Star, August 16, 2022).

The country lost its soul too. And it began with the commercialisation of the most revered and sanctified part of our history the Liberation War, and with it the name of Sheikh Mujib—the two were commercially and politically overused. And what excesses were done in their names!

A wedge was driven that divided the people into various camps, into "we" and "they." And it was done successfully. The people were asked to think in binary terms—to choose between their faith and their ethnic identity, defying the underlying essential truth that the two were not mutually exclusive, and that one can exist with multiple identities.

We lost our soul when the constitution was ravished by the combined effort of a warped parliament and judiciary—the greatest harm done to the country's democracy by a dissolute chief justice whose fealty to the party in power borders on criminality.

The ultimate damage to the soul was inflicted by corrupting the judicial system. This is to be expected when the chief justice is forced out of office at the point of a gun for a verdict that did not sit well with the party in power, as it obstructed their efforts to exert control over the judiciary.

What kind of soul resides in a body that allows wrongful confinement for indefinite periods, or endures the complicity of the judiciary and law enforcing agencies in scuttling the investigation and trial of the gruesome murder of a journalist couple, allegedly killed for possessing information related to people close to power who would have exposed their anti-state activities (my article, "The long road since 48 hours," The Daily Star, February 14, 2023), or that of a young soul from Narayanganj killed by a member of a family belonging to the ruling party?

A raft of issues needs addressing. Admittedly, each requires separate treatment. We must start by assessing the loopholes in the system and how they have been exploited to corrupt it.

The guiding document—our constitution—should be the first focus for the current regime. We cannot have elected representatives turn into autocrats. Mere elections do not make a country democratic. We want democracy not just every five years, but every day of our lives. The past administration was essentially a one-woman show. This must be prevented by adding appropriate provisions to the constitution. Remember, Hitler was also popularly elected. Politics must be spared from becoming a family affair (my articles in The Daily Star, "Democracy means more than the ability to vote" and "Who killed democracy in Bangladesh?"). Only the people are sovereign. As a corporate entity, they are beyond question.

The judiciary should be separated from the administration, and the Election Commission delinked from the administration.

The police should be recast, more than notionally like bringing changes in the dress, but by implementing the measures recommended in the Draft Police Ordinance 2009. Their operational procedures, arms and accoutrements should be revamped. In a civilised society, we cannot afford for the police to become the armed wing of the party in power, the kind we suffered over the last 15 years (my articles in The Daily Star, "Can citizens' expectations from the police be met?" and "Who will guard the guards?").

Lastly, among internal issues, the duties and terms of reference for intelligence agencies should be revisited immediately. Over the past 15 years, it seems that these agencies, instead of ensuring state security and countering hostile intelligence, focused on securing the future of a political party. The Directorate General of Forces Intelligence, in particular, requires special attention (my article, "DGFI's Lakshman Rekha," The Daily Star, February 9, 2012).

As for our external relationships, we need to revisit all bilateral agreements and treaties to assess the benefits the country would draw from those. Otherwise, we ought to recast them in a manner and form that enhances our national interest. It was as if we were the Sindbad with the proverbial old man who would never get off our shoulders. We need to cast that old man off our shoulders.

The country can be regained by pursuing a robust and dynamic foreign policy where bilateral and multilateral relationship will be based on sovereign equality. Our foreign policy should be driven by our national security and interests, independent of another country's diktat, and should be designed to enhance our diplomatic manoeuvrability rather than be constrained by neighbouring demands. Treaties and agreements should be mutually beneficial.

Only when we are able to establish an egalitarian and pluralistic society—where the constitution will be respected by adherence to it and not by its violation, where the people will be governed by the rule of law, wherever it stems from, and not of men, when a person's qualities will be the prime consideration for his advancement and not his family connections, where the son or grandson will not have to bear his fathers or grandfather's cross, where people will be free to practice his creed without apologising for it and where people can coexist with multiple identities—will we be able to regain the nation's soul. This can be achieved by a new crop of leadership that builds bridges rather than divides the nation and is inclusive in their dealings. I believe it is time to pass on the baton.

I believe the student revolution was an outburst against the wrongs done to the people and the country. We now have the opportunity to correct those wrongs. Failure is not an option.

ROHINGYA GENOCIDE REMEMBRANCE DAY

Rohingya refugees need sustainable solutions

Dr Sk Tawfique M Haque and Dr Ishrat Zakia Sultana are professor and assistant professor, respectively, in the Department of Political Science and Sociology at North South University.
SM Mashrur Arafin Ayon is a research associate at the South Asian Institute of Policy and Governance (SIPG), North South University.

SK TAWFIQUE M HAQUE, ISHRAT ZAKIA SULTANA and SM MASHRUR ARAFIN AYON

In 2017, the genocide in Myanmar drove Rashid and many other Rohingya into Bangladesh to escape ceaseless persecution by the military. In Bangladesh, he had wanted to pursue his education but learned about government restrictions on Rohingya's access to education. Then he desperately looked for a job but failed to get one. Finally, he became a member of a criminal syndicate and got arrested.

Rashid is just one example of many such tragic stories among the Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh. Being deprived of education and employment opportunities, many youngsters from that community have adopted a dark path where they get engaged in various kinds of illegal activities, including drug trafficking, smuggling, and the likes.

Unlike Rashid, Nadia, a young Rohingya woman, had a graduate degree from her home country Myanmar, but failed to get a job or study further in Bangladesh. Passing months with no work and earning, she finally became involved in the illegal sex work in Cox's Bazar.

When Bangladesh opened its borders to the Rohingya in 2017, the world applauded its humanitarian gesture. But over time, the burden of hosting 971,904 Rohingya, according to a United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) report, has come to weigh upon the resources and patience of the host country. What started as a temporary refuge turned into a prolonged stay with no end in sight. As a result, the initial hospitality of the local people, eventually switched to hostility toward the Rohingya. According to a 2023 report by Human Rights Watch (HRW), there are emerging signs of growing anti-Rohingya sentiment. One of the key reasons is the increase in the unemployment rate and decrease in wages in the area. Manual labourers in Cox's Bazar typically earn a meagre Tk 100-150 per day (around $3), but illegal Rohingya workers, who accept wages as low as Tk 60-80, further drive down the already depressed market rates. This is a major concern and a potential marker for instability in the local labour market in Cox's Bazar.

Research shows that most Rohingya are willing to return home, but only under conditions of safety, through voluntary repatriation, and with dignity. These conditions are, however, yet to be met in their home country. The situation in Myanmar is so grim that the Arakan Army (AA) is still fighting with the beleaguered junta to ensure its own cut of the spoils in Rakhine State. Recent events, including an August 2024 attack allegedly carried out by the AA against Rohingya civilians trying to flee across the Naf River, illustrate the risks still awaiting returnees. In the recent heinous attack, over 200 Rohingya, including women, children, and the elderly, were mowed down in a single day.

Deprived of education and formal jobs, the new generation of Rohingya is at risk of becoming enmeshed in criminal activities.

Efforts to resolve the crisis through repatriation have repeatedly failed. One example is the 2017 accord between Myanmar and Bangladesh, which would have seen the repatriation of the first group of Rohingya refugees by November 2018, but never took off. Subsequent efforts met the same fate, including an attempt backed by China in 2019. The unresolved issue of citizenship—a basic right that the Rohingya have been denied for generations—was a reason. Efforts to resolve the issue took another step back when, at the beginning of 2021, the military in Myanmar carried out a coup, turning hopes of an amicable and early solution all the more distant for the Rohingya.

The political landscape in Myanmar remains volatile. The junta has already been weakened by internal dissent and the withdrawal of support by the Bamar majority. It now faces increased challenges from the Three Brotherhood Alliance, including AA, that controls much of Rakhine State, once the home of the Rohingya before their displacement. Besides, the ethnic armed organisations have also been emboldened recently through the support of the National Unity Government. The complexities of negotiating with a fragmented and conflict-ridden state raise serious doubts about the feasibility of repatriation in the near future.

While the latter fact complicates many education plans and means to sustain lives already traumatised by experiences in Myanmar, 52 percent of the Rohingya population in Bangladesh are children aged between 0 to 17 years and 44 percent are between the ages of 18 to 59 years, according to a 2024 joint report by UNHCR and Bangladesh. Deprived of education and formal jobs, this new generation is practically on the fast track to becoming enmeshed in criminal activities—therefore perpetuating a poverty and violence cycle.

Migration experts very often observe that the average length of time it takes for a refugee community to find a permanent solution is 17 years. It has already been seven long years since 2017 and another decade is in the offing for the Rohingya in Bangladesh. For the first wave of the 1978 displaced Rohingya, however, the wait has been agonisingly long. Now that there is no sign of repatriation, it is crystal clear that keeping the Rohingya idle is not sustainable and also unfair toward this unfortunate community. Many youths like Rashid and Nadia pay a huge price for this.

Given this impasse, three possible ways of proceeding emerge, each fraught with its own set of difficulties. The first is accepting the existing situation. If the present status quo is maintained, that would only mean that Bangladesh will remain dependent on the foreign aid that have already started drying up. One of the key reasons for the decrease in foreign funding is the shift of international attention to the crises in Ukraine and Israel-Palestine. Such alternation of donors' attention may lead to a worse scenario in the camp management because Bangladesh is fully dependent on the foreign aid to run the Rohingya programme. The second can be drawing support from the international community. Until now, Bangladesh has failed to demonstrate its diplomatic strength on the Rohingya issue. As a result, the permanent members of the UN Security Council and regional powers like India, and other countries have remained quiet on the issue of Rohingya repatriation. Earlier initiatives have demonstrated the inadequacies of Bangladeshi diplomatic strategies. So, it is unlikely that this option will be useful in resolving the crisis. The last option can be the economic integration of the Rohingya refugees, albeit without granting them citizenship. They should be tapped for vocational training and job prospects. BRAC has already initiated some steps in the agricultural sectors through NGOs. Institutionalisation of these efforts through special economic zones is expected to create sustainable livelihoods and also contribute toward the country's economy. In this regard, experiences from the German economy on successful inclusion of Syrian refugees are particularly recommended. Most Syrian refugees were provided with temporary protection that enabled them to access health services, education, and work permits within certain regions. Bangladesh can look at this approach and consider providing skill development training to Rohingya men and women. Kay Kraft, a Bangladeshi fashion house, has already started such an initiative at Bhasan Char. Although small in scale, such projects can be replicated in creating job opportunities in Cox's Bazar.

But the third option remains fraught with risks, too. On the one hand, economic integration might expose the Rohingya to Bangladeshi society to a great extent and may pose a serious challenge to social harmony and our national identity. In this view, strong safety measures can be applied. On the other, the world community, especially Myanmar, may get the wrong signal that, in response to genocide committed by Myanmar, Bangladesh has decided to assimilate the Rohingya with the Bangladeshi people forever.

Engaging with Rohingya researchers and the diaspora is important so that the devised strategies do not backfire. Given these complexities, there might not currently exist a solution to the crisis. Bangladesh has never agreed to grant citizenship to the Rohingya, and third-country resettlement is a very uncertain and highly limited option. Any durable solution could only result from careful planning, international collaboration, and adapting solutions according to the way circumstances keep changing.

So, let's remember—on this Rohingya Genocide Remembrance Day—Rohingya youth like Rashid and Nadia, who became victims of exploitation and despair because of the unavailability of options to study and work and make a decent living.

On this day, let us reflect on the possible ways in which we can stand by the Rohingya, demonstrate humanity again, and thus save Cox's Bazar economy too.

CREATION OF THE NEW POLITICAL ORDER

Rebuilding ship in an open and turbulent sea

Dr Mirza Hassan is based at Brac Institute of Governance and Development, Brac University. He can be reached at mirzahass@gmail.com

MIRZA HASSAN

The chatra-janata led mass insurrection has provided us with a historic opportunity to reimagine and reconstitute existing relations between the state and society. The students are now demanding state reform, which is very timely and necessary. But, I believe, we ought to demand more than that. The people, I would argue, need to demand reform of the existing state-society relations as well. The desires and dreams of the youth will never be realised unless we substantively reform existing institutions and create one to govern and mediate relations between the state and society. In place of the hollowed out and purely procedural forms of representative democracy that were practiced by past regimes, we require a more substantive, direct, and deliberative democracy.

The past Awami League regime completely undermined the forms of accountability and checks and balances that characterise a liberal and representative democracy. Since 2014, elections have totally lost effectiveness as a form of direct accountability. Further, the past 15 years of progressively quasi-totalitarian rule by the AL has completely undermined intermediary institutions through which citizens indirectly hold the state accountable—such as parliamentary accountability committees, the judiciary, and the press.

My fundamental concern is about how to make reforms irreversible. This concern stems from the bitter lesson that we learned from the experiences of reforms implemented by the 2007-8 caretaker regime. The caretaker government passed close to 100 acts, ordinances, and laws,and created new institutions which were wiped out within a few weeks by the newly-elected AL government in 2009. The ones retained were captured by party members or hollowed out from within. How do we guarantee that the future ruling party will not do the same?

To address this question, we need to reimagine and reconstitute the state-society relations in two domains: i) representative democracy; and ii) state-society accountability relations. First, we need to re-conceptualise and broaden our definition of democracy. Democracy in Bangladesh has meant representative democracy with a de facto emphasis on its procedures, known as the procedural form of democracy. This form of democracy is in danger of being reduced to pure procedure, without any substance—for example, the rigged elections held by the previous regime. Instead of a hollow procedural democracy, we require a more substantive democracy that emphasises democratic inclusivity and equality and through which we can claim real ownership over the republic, as is proclaimed in the constitution.

We need to imagine more direct forms of citizen engagement, such as periodic referendums and deliberative forums that are discussion-based and non-majoritarian. These forms of direct, deliberative, and substantive democracy will prevent the formation of monopolistic "party-archies" (whereby political parties dominate the political process and civil society), the syndrome of winner-take-all politics, and the resurgence of a dominant party-state (in which, one party calls the shot).

VISUAL: ALIZA RAHMAN

There have been discussions of reforms in the electoral system, such as bi-cameral parliament, proportional representation, and elimination of Article 70 (that deters floor crossing by the parliament members). To these proposals, I would add another more direct democratic option for citizens—the power of constituents to recall their representatives if they are not happy with their performances.

To me, the most critical concern is to guard the guardian, that is to prevent political party elites from capturing accountability institutions. As our past experience shows, the conventional checks and balances imposed by a division of the legislative, executive, and judiciary branches are prone to capture by ruling political elites. The news media, another potential check, can also be captured or subdued. To prevent capture, we need multi-level checks and balances involving multiple stakeholders.

Fundamental institutions and policies should be protected with complex checks and balances mechanisms whereby citizens can exercise veto power at multiple points. Examples of such mechanisms currently under discussion include citizens' commissions for police, banking, education etc., composed of a combination of citizens and state officials.

Beyond such commissions, we need purely societal-based regulatory mechanisms (consisting of citizen members only), for which we have no precedents in Bangladesh. But this is exactly what we need to build to safeguard the achievements of the student movement and to ensure that the reforms remain irreversible in the future.

Such mechanisms would constitute the basis for a dual power and permanent revolution, whereby citizens can maintain a continuous check on state institutions. Our dual power has to be based on a liberal constitutional framework since our context for such innovation is a liberal democratic revolution. These societal based checks and balances with multiple stakeholders and veto points must be endorsed by the constitution—whether a new or highly modified one. Constitutional experts can help with the design.

Such mechanisms, we can call these "Citizens' Committees," may be domain-specific (for example, for education and health sector and police administration) as well as on the basis of administrative tiers (district, upazila, and union parishad). We must understand that, to contain a potential counter revolution, street-based countervailing power, akin to a Maoist cultural revolution, has its limits. We observed, recently, how such power prevented the possibility of a "judicial coup." But over time, these types of pressure tactics will alienate people and there is a potential danger that the revolutionary student leadership might exhaust its current popular legitimacy. There is also a risk that multiple accountability mechanisms might contribute to institutional and policy sclerosis but, I believe, we will learn to remedy such problems with trials and errors.

Given our long history of dictatorship and illiberalism, and political elites' strong incentives to govern through a de facto structure of authoritarian dominant party-state and their loathing for uncertainty inherent in electoral democracy, the utmost necessity is to keep political elites in a narrow corridor by balancing the powers of both state and society. For all these, time is of the essence. The title of this piece—rebuilding the ship in the open and turbulent sea—alludes to a high-risk period for reforming state-society relations, whereby actors, who have lot to lose from these, will be eager to sabotage the process. The ship must not sink.

Reimagining and reconstituting electoral democracy and establishing and sustaining dual power thus keeping the political elites in a narrow corridor—deserve our greatest attention. The rare opportunity that the democratic revolution has presented to us must not be missed.

WHO invites vaccine manufacturers to apply for emergency use listing amid growing mpox outbreak

The World Health Organisation (WHO) Director-General announced on 7 August 2024 that he had triggered the process for Expression of Interest for Emergency Use Listing (EUL) of mpox vaccines given worrying trends in the disease's spread. There is a serious and growing outbreak in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) that has now expanded outside the country. A new viral strain, which first emerged in September 2023, has for the first time been detected outside DRC.

The EUL procedure is an emergency use authorisation process, specifically developed to expedite the availability of unlicensed medical products like vaccines that are needed in public health emergency situations. This is a time-limited recommendation based on a risk-benefit approach.

WHO is requesting manufacturers to submit data to ensure that the vaccines are safe, effective, of assured quality, and suitable for the target populations.

MONKEYPOX VACCINE

Granting of an EUL will accelerate vaccine access, particularly for those lower-income countries that have not yet issued their own national regulatory approval. The EUL also enables partners, including Gavi and UNICEF, to procure vaccines for distribution.

Mpox is a viral illness caused by the monkeypox virus, a species of the genus Orthopoxvirus. Mpox can be transmitted to humans through physical contact with someone who is infectious, with contaminated materials, or with infected animals.

There are currently two vaccines in use against the disease, both of which have been recommended for use by the WHO Strategic Advisory Group of Experts on Immunisation, or SAGE.

High-carb foods that are actually healthy

STAR HEALTH DESK

Carbohydrates have had a rough go of it in recent years, often being blamed for everything from weight gain to type 2 diabetes. But not all carbs are created equal. While processed foods high in sugar and refined grains can be unhealthy, many nutrient-dense, fibre-rich foods are packed with healthy carbs that are good for you.

Oats: Oats are carb-rich food that deserves a place in your diet. A cup of raw oats contains 54 grammes of carbs, but it also packs in 8 grammes of fibre, including a special type called oat beta-glucan. This fibre is known to lower cholesterol levels, reduce the risk of heart disease, and improve blood sugar levels. Oats are also surprisingly high in protein, making them a great option for breakfast or a snack that keeps you full and satisfied.

Bananas: Bananas are a staple in many diets, and for good reason. One large banana contains about 31 grammes of carbs, primarily in the form of starches and sugars. Bananas are also high in potassium, vitamins B6 and C, and beneficial plant compounds. They are particularly good for heart health, thanks to their potassium content, and less ripe bananas contain resistant starch and pectin, which support digestive health.

Sweet potatoes: Sweet potatoes are a delicious and nutritious root vegetable, rich in carbs and packed with vitamins A and C, potassium, and antioxidants. A half-cup serving of mashed sweet potatoes contains about 20.7 grammes of carbs. The antioxidants in sweet potatoes help protect your cells from damage, reducing the risk of chronic diseases. Plus, their fibre content can aid in weight management by keeping you feeling full longer.

Oranges: Oranges are not only refreshing but also nutritious. These citrus fruits contain about 15.5 grammes of carbs per 100 grammes and are a great source of r. Oranges are particularly high in vitamin C, potassium, and several B vitamins. They also contain citric acid and antioxidants, which can boost heart health, prevent kidney stones, and enhance iron absorption from other foods, helping to prevent anaemia.

Apples: Apples are a beloved fruit with a sweet-tart flavour and crisp texture. Depending on the variety, apples generally contain 14–16 grammes of carbs per 100 gms. They are a good source of vitamin C, fibre, and antioxidants. Eating apples has been linked to better blood sugar management and heart health, and early research suggests they may even reduce the risk of certain types of cancer.

Kidney beans: Kidney beans are a legume rich in protein, carbs, and fiber. A 100-gramme serving of cooked kidney beans contains about 21.5 grammes of carbs. They are also packed with vitamins, minerals, and antioxidants, including anthocyanins and isoflavones. Kidney beans have been shown to help regulate blood sugar and may reduce the risk of colon cancer.

Chickpeas: Chickpeas, also known as garbanzo beans, are another legume high in carbs and fiber. A 100-gramme serving of cooked chickpeas contains 27.4 grammes of carbs, and nearly 8 grammes of chickpeas are also a great source of plant-based protein, iron, and B vitamins. They have been linked to improved heart and digestive health, and some studies suggest they may help protect against certain types of cancer.

Not all carbs are bad. In fact, many of the healthiest foods are high in carbohydrates. While refined carbs like white bread and pasta may not be the best choice, these nutritious, high-carb foods can be part of a healthy, balanced diet.

So, the next time you are planning a meal, consider adding some of these healthy carbs to your plate. Your body will thank you!

EVERYDAY CARCINOGENS

What you need to know to stay safe

Carcinogens are substances that can cause cancer, and they are more common than you might think. They can be found in the air we breathe, the products we use, and even the foods we eat. But just because you come into contact with a carcinogen does not mean you will automatically get cancer. It depends on how much you are exposed to and your genetic makeup.

One of the most well-known carcinogens is tobacco. Whether you are smoking or inhaling secondhand smoke, tobacco contains at least 70 chemicals that can damage your DNA and lead to cancer. Even smokeless tobacco is not safe.

Radon, a naturally occurring gas, becomes dangerous when it accumulates indoors. It is the leading cause of lung cancer in non-smokers, and since you can not see or smell it, testing your home is essential.

Then there is asbestos, once commonly used in building materials. If its tiny fibres become airborne and are inhaled, they can lodge in your lungs and cause serious health problems, including cancer.

Even foods can be risky. Crispy, browned foods like roasted potatoes can release acrylamide, a chemical that has been linked to cancer in animals. Limiting these foods might help reduce your risk.

Other everyday carcinogens include formaldehyde in household products, ultraviolet rays from the sun or tanning beds, alcohol, processed meats, engine exhaust, and polluted air.

Understanding these risks and making small changes in your daily routine can help you protect your health and reduce your exposure to these common carcinogens.

Occupational therapy for bullet injury

RABEYA FERDOUS

Many students and normal people experienced gunshot injuries in recent times in Bangladesh. This injury hampered their life very significantly.

A gunshot wound is a penetrating injury caused by a projectile from a gun. Damage may include bleeding, bone fractures, organ damage, wound infection, and loss of the ability to move parts of the body. In severe cases, death may occur.

There are numerus conditions that may arise after gunshot injuries. These include soft tissue injury, muscle injury, nerve injury, vascular injury/haemorrhage, bone injury, pain, spinal cord injury, amputation.

After a gunshot, the patient faces different long-term complications. These are joint contracture, myofascial, chronic, or neuropathic pain, complex regional pain syndrome, central sensitisation, mental health issues, including post-traumatic stress disorder, anxiety, or depression, difficulty to participate in daily activities, etc.

Occupational therapy has a significant role in rehabilitating bullet-injured patients. Occupational therapists help to train up on re-performing daily activities and facilitate community reintegration. An occupational therapist uses specific activities to limit the effects of disability and promote independence in all aspects of daily life.

Mainly, occupational therapists use the following stage during therapy sessions:

1. Upon receiving a referral, the first step involves conducting a thorough assessment of the situation or condition.

2. Following the assessment, the next phase is identifying the specific problem or problems that need to be addressed.

3. With the problem identified, a detailed treatment plan is then developed to guide the approach to care.

4. The treatment plan is then implemented, with the necessary interventions and actions being carried out.

Finally, the effectiveness of the treatment is evaluated to determine whether the desired outcomes have been achieved.

According to patients' conditions, treatment may vary. Overall, the occupational therapist provides the following therapy:

- Functional Range of Motion (ROM) exercises
- Functional strengthening exercise
- Practice Activities of Daily Living (ADL) like dressing, grooming, brushing, combing hair, etc.
- Functional balance training
- Memory training
- Carer and family training
- Writting practice
- Learn energy conservation techniques.
- Fall prevention
- Ergonomically home, office, or classroom modification
- Provide an assistive device or splinting.
- Stress management
- Social skills training

A person may suffer from any type of disability after a gunshot injury. Students face different challenges to continue their study. In this situation, the occupational therapist can help to make him/her independent from their study-related or other daily task activities. Occupational therapy focusses on functional performance and occupational engagement—staying in school, keeping a job, and maintaining relationships.

A new hope for spinal cord injury patients

Predicting recovery from a cervical spine injury has always been a tough challenge, often leaving patients and their families in uncertainty. However, a recent study may have discovered a key to more accurate forecasts: preserved spinal tissue bridges, which are intact neural tissue near the injury site.

The Lancet published a groundbreaking study that spanned three countries and included 227 patients with spinal cord injuries (SCI) at the C1–C7 vertebrae, revealing these tissue bridges as a powerful predictor of sensory motor recovery. The research team conducted imaging assessments a few weeks after the injury, followed by neurological check-ups at 3 months and, for most patients, at 12 months.

The results are promising. For every millimetre of preserved tissue bridge, patients saw significant improvements in their ability to move and sense touch. A tissue bridge width of 2.0 mm or more was linked to better recovery at 3 months, while a width of 4.0 mm was particularly telling for long-term improvement.

These findings could transform the way doctors and therapists approach spinal cord injuries, offering a new tool to guide treatment and give patients a clearer picture of their recovery journey. As researchers continue to explore this exciting development, the future looks brighter for those facing the daunting road to recovery after a spinal cord injury.

Is Bangladesh ready to face the hit of Mpox?

GOURI BASAK PAROMA

The World Health Organisation (WHO) has classified the Mpox epidemic a Public Health Emergency of International Concern (PHEIC) on August 14, 2024, prompting governments throughout the world to reevaluate their readiness. Bangladesh, a highly populated South Asian country, is at a critical juncture as the new, more transmissible Clade 1b type of Mpox spreads fast throughout Africa and beyond, prompting a thorough assessment of its preparedness to face this possible calamity.

The global health community is on high alert following the discovery of the Clade 1b form, which appears to spread more easily through sexual networks, adding a new dimension to the issue. Mpox mostly infects people and animals. It is in the same viral family as smallpox, although the symptoms are milder, such as fever, chills, and body pains. However, it has the potential to cause serious disease and even death in certain circumstances.

Bangladesh's previous experience with health emergencies, particularly the COVID-19 pandemic, serves as a framework for its response to the Mpox danger. Despite being pressured, the country's public health system has demonstrated resilience and adaptation in recent years. However, the distinct properties of mpox and its novel version need a custom response plan. Early detection and surveillance are one of the most significant difficulties Bangladesh confronts.

Dhaka airport has implemented a system to handle passengers with Mpox symptoms, in response to the World Health Organisation's global public health alert. The airport is providing leaflets, and arrival health desks are staffed by doctors 24/7. Passengers' temperature is screened using thermal scanner archways, and those with symptoms will be sent to designated hospitals via ambulance if necessary. The airport's health team recommends avoiding close contact with suspected or confirmed cases, wearing medical masks, avoiding skin-to-skin contact, using disposable gloves, and regularly cleaning hands with soap or alcohol-based hand rubs.

Health authorities need to set up a strong surveillance system, evaluate its laboratory's competence, and promptly train healthcare professionals about mpox symptoms and diagnostic procedures. During the COVID-19 pandemic, Bangladesh made progress in strengthening its diagnostic capacities; nonetheless, testing for Mpox necessitates specialised knowledge and equipment. In order to upgrade facilities, the nation must evaluate its present laboratory infrastructure and look for outside assistance. Two worldwide Mpox vaccines are still not widely available in Bangladesh, and in order to obtain vaccination doses, the health ministry must work with foreign groups. It is important to have a well-defined vaccine priority plan that targets high-risk populations and healthcare workers.

Bangladesh is getting ready for a possible epidemic of Mpox by concentrating on producing necessary drugs and vaccinations locally. To investigate these options, the government should communicate with pharmaceutical corporations. In order to share resources, knowledge, and best practices for mpox preparedness and response, regional cooperation—especially within the context of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC)—may be indispensable. Bangladesh has significant expertise and assets at its disposal, such as its handling of prior medical crises. However, Mpox and its new variant's distinct qualities necessitate a customised, all-encompassing strategy. Early planning, vigilant monitoring, strong public relations, and multinational collaboration are essential for success.

By taking proactive steps now, Bangladesh can strengthen its resilience against Mpox and other potential health emergencies. As the global health landscape evolves, Bangladesh's ability to adapt and respond effectively will be crucial for protecting its population and contributing to global health security. Continuous assessment, adaptation, and collaboration will be essential in navigating this new chapter in global public health.

- Playing his first Test in Pakistan, Bangladesh's Mushfiqur Rahim fell just nine runs short of what would have been his fourth Test double hundred.
- Mushfiqur got to his 11th Test ton on way to scoring 191 off 341 deliveries. In terms of most Test centuries by any Bangladesh cricketer, Mushfiqur remains just behind Mominul Haque who has 12.
- This was also Mushfiqur's fifth Test ton away from home -- most by any Bangladesh player, surpassing Tamim Iqbal who has scored four centuries overseas.
- Mushfiqur overtook Tamim as Bangladesh's leading scorer in away Tests, taking his run tally to 2381. He overtook Tamim, who has 2329 runs in 59 innings.
- This was also the 37-year-old batter's 68th innings in away Tests, more than any other player in Bangladesh.

Decision on Shakib expected after first Test: Faruque

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) president Faruque Ahmed informed the board will make a stance regarding a murder case filed against Shakib Al Hasan following the conclusion of the ongoing first Test between Bangladesh and Pakistan.

"The good news is that we finished the fourth day well... I don't think we have considered taking any stance on this matter at the moment," Faruque told reporters yesterday in Mirpur after an unofficial meeting with a few board directors at BCB office.

On Thursday, a case was filed with Adabar Police Station accusing Shakib, along with former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, Obaidul Quader, 156 named individuals, and 400-500 unidentified people, of involvement in the killing of garment worker Mohammad Rubel.

Amid such a situation, on Saturday, a legal notice was sent to BCB by a Supreme Court lawyer, asking the BCB to bring Shakib back to the country for a proper investigation into the murder case.

However, the newly elected BCB boss denied receiving such a notice until Saturday.

"We are yet to receive the legal notice. I can't comment on that. A case has been filed, an FIR to be specific. There will be an investigation, and then it will proceed in some direction.

"We may tell you about the legal notice [after the end of first Test] as we expect to get it by this time," Faruque said, further informing that they are working on reforming the current standing committees; including cricket operations, which became vacant after the resignation of Jalal Yunus.

Meanwhile, Faruque said that they have decided to donate Tk one crore to the Chief Adviser's relief fund and send 3,000 packets of dry food and other necessary items through the Bangladesh Army to flood-affected people.

Wickets in first hour vital: Miraz

SPORTS REPORTER

All-rounder Mehedi Hasan Miraz said that a fiery first hour from the Bangladesh bowlers on Day 5 of the first Test against Pakistan in Rawalpindi can create an unlikely opening for the Tigers in a contest that seemingly is heading towards a draw.

Bangladesh pacer Shoriful Islam reaped the rewards during a sizzling spell in the last hour of play when he dismissed Pakistan opener Saim Ayub (1) and had the duo of Abdullah Shafique and Shan Masood guessing as the hosts finished the day at 27 for one, still trailing by 94 runs after bundling out the Tigers for 565 earlier.

From the other end, Hasan Mahmud provided adept support with strict line and lengths which boosted confidence in the Tigers' camp to make use of the morning session which should indicate if the Test will see a result other than a draw.

"Our bowlers will have a great chance in the first hour. If we bowl well in the first hour, we will be in a good position," Miraz told reporters after the day's play.

"We have a great chance tomorrow. If we get a few wickets in the first hour, we will get a chance to win. The bowlers need to bowl in good areas. I was fielding at slips and it felt really good to see the way they bowled in the last hour."

Throughout the four days, it has been a challenge for the bowlers to stamp their authority on a Rawalpindi wicket which has maintained the tradition of being a batters' paradise. While pacers have fared better than spinners at the venue, spinners will have a role to play, largely in providing breathers to the quicks in between spells. They can also hope to make use of the turn the Day 5 pitch may provide.

Miraz attested to the visibility of cracks on the surface and will look to do the job with the ball after an impressive 77 with the bat.

"The wicket looks good right now. There are a few cracks and there is a little bit of spin as well," Miraz said.

Earlier, Mushfiqur Rahim stood tall with the bat after the Tigers were reduced to 218 for five on Day 3. The 37-year-old starred with a 191-run knock but fell short of his fourth double century. He stitched a 114-run stand with Liton Das (56) and set a Bangladesh record with a 196-run seventh-wicket stand with Miraz to propel the Tigers to 565.

"We're really happy because we've scored 500 runs after a long time. We had a good partnership. The credit goes to him [Mushfiqur]. He kept supporting me and told me to keep going as it was an excellent wicket," Miraz said.

'Hamza will be a great addition'

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh coach Javier Cabrera is looking forward to Leicester City's Hamza Choudhury as a 'great addition for the team' after the midfielder received his Bangladesh passport and sent a letter to the Bangladesh Football Federation expressing his desire to represent the Red and Greens.

During a press briefing on Saturday, BFF general secretary Emran Hossain Tushar informed that Hamza's parents collected his passport from the Bangladesh High Commission in London on Friday and the footballer has also sent a letter to the BFF, wishing to play for Bangladesh.

Speaking on the issue, Cabrera praised the England-born midfielder for his leadership quality as well as his technical ability.

"He (Hamza) will be a great addition for the team, not only for his quality – what he can provide because of his quality as he is definitely a very top-level player – but I think he can provide a lot of things off the pitch as a leader with his experience in the Premier League at the top-flight," Cabrera said of his impression about the 26-year-old footballer.

"He has also played for all the youth teams of England. So I think he'll definitely be a very good example off the pitch and he will definitely be a great addition. Hopefully he will be with us very soon," hoped the Spaniard.

Emran, meanwhile, informed that the federation has already asked for an NOC from the English FA regarding the player's availability for Bangladesh, and once it gets the NOC, the certificate will be forwarded to FIFA's players' status committee for approval.

Meanwhile, Cabrera called up 14 players for next month's two-match FIFA friendly series away to Bhutan, with the rest to be called up later.

Cabrera informed that these 14 players will be joined by the players of the Bashundhara Kings as well as a few from the U-20 team, which is currently in Nepal for the SAFF U-20 Championship. The 14 players will undergo a training camp at the Bashundhara Kings Arena on August 26 and after the others join, the final squad of 23 will be announced on August 29, a day prior to the team's departure for Bhutan.

"The priority was to play at home, but in the end it didn't happen. Going to Bhutan is a bit more challenging, mainly because of the altitude and also it's during the Bhutan Premier League, plus the fact that we'll play on an artificial turf," Cabrera said when asked about the team's original plan of securing FIFA ranking points through these two matches, which are scheduled for September 5 and 8.

'Leverkusen have to be more aggressive'

REUTERS, Monchengladbach

Bayer Leverkusen manager Xabi Alonso asked for more character after his side beat Borussia Moenchengladbach 3-2 in the Bundesliga season opener on Friday through yet another stoppage-time winner.

Leverkusen were awarded a penalty deep into added time and Florian Wirtz scored on a rebound to earn the visitors the three points after Gladbach's Ko Itakura fouled substitute Amine Adli.

"It was an intense first Bundesliga game for us. A lot of things happened in the second half, it was full of emotion right to the end. We did well in many phases," Alonso told a press conference.

"But we weren't always so compact today, we were also a bit passive in some phases. We have to do that better. We have to be more aggressive.

"It's difficult to explain why we always score late goals. We can't train that and I can't influence it. It's the mentality of the team."

Champions Leverkusen, who set a European record of 51 consecutive games without loss across all competitions last season, kept their unbeaten streak intact with a number of late equalisers.

"We said at halftime that we must not let up and not think that the game is over," said former Gladbach player Granit Xhaka.

"At the end of the first half, we started not being consistent enough in our passing game and losing easy balls. Here at home, Gladbach never die, you could see that in the (goals for) 1-2 and 2-2."

Xhaka gave Leverkusen the lead with a screamer from outside the box in the 12th minute but did not celebrate out of respect for his former club.

"I had the feeling that we made it unnecessarily difficult for ourselves," added Wirtz, who scored two goals on the night, including the decider.

"We were asleep when it came to conceding goals. We let it slip away ourselves, even though we were actually in control, although we didn't have the ball the whole time.

"I just wanted to decide the game. I know that in the end it will be a lucky win. (But) we are happy that we won and that I was able to score the follow-up shot."

Leverkusen came into the game off a German Supercup win, where they beat VfB Stuttgart 4-3 on penalties after scoring a late equaliser to snatch a 2-2 draw over 90 minutes and lift the trophy on Saturday.

Manchester United players were left distraught after Joao Pedro's 95th-minute header handed Brighton a 2-1 win on Saturday. The win saw Brighton stay perfect in the Premier League, providing a dream home league debut to their 31-year-old boss Fabian Hurzeler. PHOTO: AFP

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

It is difficult to say whether Bangladesh stalwart Mushfiqur Rahim likes climbing mountains in real life, but when it comes to scaling the hypothetical mountains that exist in cricket, the veteran wicketkeeper-batter has conquered many.

Mushfiqur yesterday reached another such mountaintop in the first of two Tests against hosts Pakistan, becoming the first Bangladesh player to score a Test century in Bangladesh, Pakistan, India, and Sri Lanka -- hence conquering the Asian summit.

Now, there is one more Asian country that hosts Test cricket – the UAE – but it does not have Test status and serves as a neutral venue.

On the other hand, there is Afghanistan, the newest member of the Asian Test club, but due to security concerns, Test cricket is yet to be played on Afghan soil.

In his maiden Test innings in Pakistan, Mushfiqur made 191 off 341 balls in Rawalpindi, a knock that oozed class, exemplified his patience, and put his watertight defence on display.

Bangladesh's Mushfiqur Rahim let out screams of joy as he reached his 11th Test ton on Day 4 of their first Test against Pakistan in Rawalpindi yesterday. Mushfiqur, however, fell just nine runs short of what would have been his fourth Test double hundred but the batter's 341-ball 191 helped Bangladesh to a commanding position.

41,551 accused in two cases filed in Ctg

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Within a span of 24 hours, two cases have been filed accusing around 41,551 people on charges of attempting to murder, and attacking a police station and looting firearms in Chattogram.

The case with the attempted murder charge has been filed against 351 people including the former education minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhury, and 1,200 unnamed people early yesterday.

Just a day earlier, on Friday, another case was lodged, accusing 40,000 unnamed people on charges of attacking on-duty police personnel, vandalising property, looting firearms and ammunition, and setting fire to the police station.

Both cases were filed with the Kotwali Police Station in CMP, SM Obaidul Haque, Officer-in-Charge of the police station, confirmed the development to The Daily Star.

Police, however, declined to elaborate when asked why the cases were registered with so many unnamed people as accused. No one was arrested in these cases till filing Humpback whales use tools!

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Humpback whales have joined an exclusive list of animals that not only use but also manufacture their own tools, a new study conducted off the coast of Alaska has found.

Researchers have known that humpbacks create "bubble nets" to hunt. Now, they have found that the giant marine mammals don't just use these unique nets but also manipulate them in a variety of ways to maximise their food intake.

"Many animals use tools to help them find food but very few actually create or modify the tools themselves," said Lars Bejder, an author of the study, published on Tuesday in the journal Royal Society Open Science.

In the study conducted in southeast Alaska, scientists followed and observed solitary humpback whales that blow and craft complex bubbles to catch krill.

The whales have previously been documented to blow bubbles in patterns that form nets with internal rings.

Researchers have now found that mammals actively control details of the bubble nets like the number of rings, the size and depth of the net, and the spacing between bubbles.

The careful approach, "wholly unique" to humpbacks, lets the behemoths capture up to seven times more prey in a single feeding dive without using extra energy.

"This impressive behaviour places humpback whales among the rare group of animals that both make and use their own tools for hunting," Dr Bejder said.

Justice Manik undergoes surgery after attack

SEVEN YEARS OF ROHINGYA CRISIS

Worry over fresh influx grows

PORIMOL PALMA

A fresh wave of violence forcing displacement of Rohingya people in Rakhine is a cause for concern for Bangladesh as the country failed to repatriate the Rohingyas who came here in 2017 and before.

The decline in international aid and the birth of 30,000 babies a year at the Rohingya camps in Cox's Bazar is also putting to test Bangladesh's ability to manage the camps where criminal activities are common.

"The reports of fresh displacement of Rohingyas and their attempts to enter Bangladesh are worrisome. Several hundred Rohingya people entered Bangladesh over the last weeks," said a foreign ministry official.

"Our border guards are careful. They are preventing attempts by Rohingyas to enter Bangladesh," the official added, requesting anonymity.

Bangladesh maintains that sustainable repatriation of the Rohingya people is the only solution. At least 1,000 Rohingyas were set to return to Myanmar in November last year. The initiative failed as new conflicts erupted in Rakhine state, the official added.

Two earlier attempts at repatriation also failed.

After Myanmar launched a violent military crackdown in Rakhine on August 25, 2017, about 750,000 Rohingya people entered Bangladesh.

The Gambia later filed a genocide case against Myanmar with the International Court of Justice, and the International Criminal Court is investigating the human rights violation. The UN adopted several resolutions.

But the Rohingya people did not agree to return, saying the condition in Rakhine was not safe, even though the rebel group Arakan Army and Myanmar military signed a ceasefire in October last year.

After November, AA engaged in renewed clashes with the junta and took control of the vast majority of Rakhine State. Over 320,000 people were displaced in Rakhine and Chin states.

Human Rights Watch said in recent months, the Myanmar military and the ethnic Arakan Army have committed mass killings and arson attacks against Rohingya communities.

On August 5, nearly 200 people were reportedly killed by drone strikes and shelling on civilians fleeing fighting in Maungdaw town, according to Rohingya witnesses. About 630,000 Rohingya remain in Myanmar.

Metro service resumes today after over a month

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The metro rail is set to resume its service today, over a month of suspension following attacks during the recent mass student protests.

However, the Mirpur-10 and Kazipara stations will remain closed as those were badly damaged in the attacks, metro rail officials said.

The Dhaka Mass Transit Company Limited (DMTCL) announced on their verified Facebook page that, as before, the train service will not operate on Fridays.

The metro rail will follow its previous schedule.

Metro had brought much-needed relief to the city dwellers, reducing commute time by offering a convenient alternative to the congested roads.

Commuters enjoyed the ease of purchasing tickets and navigating the city without the hassle of traffic jams.

But people started to suffer on the streets again after the metro rail services were suspended on July 18 as the Mirpur-10 and Kazipara stations were vandalised during the quota protests.

The familiar struggle of catching overcrowded buses returned, with

Gaza talks set to resume in Cairo as fighting rages

AFP, Cairo

Negotiators geared up for a crucial weekend of Gaza ceasefire talks yesterday, as Hamas said it was sending delegates to Cairo but would not participate in the discussions, and fighting raged in the Palestinian territory.

The United States, Egypt and Qatar have spent months trying to broker an end to the war in Gaza between Hamas Palestinian militants and Israel.

The war, sparked by Hamas's unprecedented October 7 attack on Israel, has devastated Gaza, displaced nearly all of its population at least once and triggered a humanitarian crisis.

The White House said progress had been made at the latest round this week, although the possible permanent presence of Israeli troops along the Gaza-Egypt border has emerged as a major sticking point.

Previous bouts of optimism during months of on-off ceasefire and hostage release negotiations have always proven unfounded.

A senior Hamas official said a delegation from the Islamist group was heading to Cairo, but that they would not engage in the talks. Instead, they would meet with senior Egyptian officials for updates on the negotiations.

The delegation would "be briefed... but this does not mean it will take part in the negotiations", the official told AFP, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The official said Hamas would insist Israel withdraw all its forces from all of Gaza, including "from the border area with Egypt", known as the Philadelphi Corridor.

Timing of polls 'a political decision'

Says Yunus in address to nation, asks people to fix interim govt's mandate, tenure

- Measures to be taken so that no one can ever turn country into a police-state
- Clauses of laws which hinder freedom of expression to be amended
- Justice to be ensured for all extrajudicial killings, enforced disappearances

Urging the people to set the interim government's tenure and mandate, Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus yesterday said when the elections will be held is "completely a political decision".

"Everyone is eager to know when our government will depart. The answer lies in your hands. It is up to you to decide when to bid us farewell. We are not the people to rule the country," he said in a 26-minute televised address to the nation yesterday evening.

He went on to request the people to discuss and prescribe what is the least the interim government needs to do.

"We can get a guideline from this discussion," Yunus said, adding, "But the political decision is the ultimate decision. And political decisions will only come from political discussion."

In his first address to the nation, the chief adviser also assured that he would not seek to extend his tenure.

He said the members of the advisory council took up the responsibilities at the

50 injured as Ansars clash with students

Ansars earlier besieged Secretariat to press home their demands

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Despite the government's assurance of fulfilling their demands, ansar members continued demonstration by blocking the Secretariat gates yesterday and clashed with students and people.

At least 50 people were injured.

The clash broke out around 9:20pm as the students and the people tried to drive away the demonstrators demanding nationalisation of their jobs, said witnesses.

During the clash, the groups hurled brick chunks at each other and chased each other.

At least 40 injured took treatment at Dhaka Medical College Hospital till 11:00pm, said Bachchu Mia, inspector of DMCH police outpost.

Hasnat Abdullah, one of the conveners of Anti-discrimination Student Movement, was also injured during the clash.

FLASH FLOODS

'We had no clue what was coming'

Says victim in remote area of Noakhali; 10 lakh still marooned

MD ABBAS

When Tuhin Rana, a private company employee in Dhaka, heard last week that floodwaters were entering his remote village in Noakhali, he called his parents and wife who had just given birth and told them to stay safe.

Tuhin thought his family members, natives of the coastal region, would know how to cope with the disaster.

But on Thursday, he found their phones unreachable and read about the devastation the floods were causing.

Yesterday, Tuhin reached his home after nearly an 18-hour journey, which usual took five hours, because the roads were flooded and he had to wait for hours to find boats.

"I found my elderly parents sitting on the bed of our hut to stay dry. They had not eaten cooked food in two days. My wife and newborn were taken to a safer place by the neighbours. There is still one-feet deep water in the house," he told this correspondent.

"They are drinking unsafe water. Water in the hand pumps is not clean. I am feeling helpless. They had no idea what was coming."

Most residents of the area took shelter at Batakandi Model School and College. But they also do not have enough food, water and sanitation, locals said.

"Some people set up kitchens and provided food. But they ran out of money. Due to the lack of boats in the area, barely any relief materials reach here."

MOBILE SERVICE DURING DISASTERS

No contingency system despite available funds

Telecom ministry fails to set up system in two years

MAHMUDUL HASAN

The telecom ministry has failed to establish a National Emergency Telecommunication System (NETS) to maintain telecommunication and internet services during disasters despite starting the initiative almost two years ago.

In September 2022, following a devastating flood in Sylhet that rendered most of the mobile towers nonfunctional, the Posts and Telecommunications Ministry formed a 12-member committee to develop NETS.

The committee was tasked with formulating a specific plan for NETS, including technical aspects, management and maintenance of the system.

However, the ministry has yet to furnish any plan. Moreover, some organisations listed as committee members are unaware of the committee's existence.

"As far as we know, we haven't been invited to the committee in the last two years -- such a system is very essential to ensure smooth communication during the different types of natural disasters," said Bangladesh Red Crescent Society, which was named as a member of the committee.

Every time a cyclone, flood, or other natural disaster strikes Bangladesh, affected individuals first lose access to mobile networks when they need connectivity the most to seek help.

This disruption is primarily due to extended power outages: the standard battery backup duration for base transceiver stations ranges from four to eight hours.

Forcing people to resign may lead to collapse

Says edn adviser

Wahiduddin Mahmud

Education adviser to the interim government, Professor Wahiduddin Mahmud, said yesterday that forcing individuals in educational institutions to resign could lead to the collapse of the administrative system.

Speaking at a meeting with ministry officials, the adviser said legitimate complaints against individuals will be addressed, but forced resignations are not an option.

The adviser said that established rules and regulations govern the process of appointments and transfers in government educational institutions, and there is no room for coercion,

A statement victory for Tigers

AL-AMIN

When opener Zakir Hasan swept off-spinner Agha Salman down to the square-leg boundary for the winning runs at the Rawalpindi Stadium yesterday afternoon, it marked the end of Bangladesh's long wait for a Test win against Pakistan.

The 10-wicket triumph in the first of the Two-Test series on a dramatic fifth and final day was not just a win, but a true statement of courage, commitment, self-belief and discipline that deserved to be preserved for posterity.

There are so many heroes in Bangladesh's first-ever Test win against Pakistan after 13 unsuccessful attempts. The only occasion the Tigers came close to winning before this was in Multan in 2003 when a portly Inzamamul Haq robbed them with an unbeaten 138 in the second innings, with Pakistan winning by one wicket.

However, there was no Inzy this time around when Bangladesh, riding on an invaluable 117-run first-innings lead, went for the final push for an unlikely win on an otherwise flat track.

Resuming on 23-1 on a 'never trust a fifth day pitch', Pakistan stumbled to 105-6 by lunch with the Bangladesh spin duo of Shakib Al Hasan and Mehedi Hasan Miraz getting some purchase and eventually sharing seven wickets between them.

However, it was right-arm pacer Hasan Mahmud, bowling a probing line throughout the Test, who drew the first blood early in the morning by having Pakistan captain Shan Masood caught behind for 14.

Lanky Nahid Rana with his raw pace then had the 'big fish' Babar Azam, who chopped onto his stumps a widish delivery outside the off-stump for 22.

call of the students and have been carrying out their duties with utmost diligence as a team.

Seeking blessings from the people, he said the government does not want to lose the opportunity to build a new Bangladesh, earned through the blood of the students and the people.

"If we lose this opportunity now, we will be defeated as a nation. We want to remain committed to the martyrs, the injured, and the surviving students so that we do not lose this achievement."

He said local government institutions will be empowered, and decentralisation of power will be ensured to strengthen democracy.

Necessary reforms to the administration, judiciary, Election Commission and the electoral system, and law and order would be made to ensure free flow of information and a free, fair, and participatory election.

"The aim of these [reforms] will be the initiation of an accountable political system against corruption, looting, and genocide," Yunus said.

The chief adviser said after the fascist government leader fled the country in the face of public wrath, they want to build a country where the human rights of every citizen are completely protected.

"We have one goal -- an open, democratic, exploitation-free, and non-communal Bangladesh. We are one family. We have one goal. We are committed to ensuring that no division can disrupt our dream," said the Nobel Peace Prize winner.

He said Bangladesh was built with the supreme sacrifice of several millions, but it has been destroyed by fascism and tyranny.

The country had been changed so much that even an autocrat's peon can accumulate illegal wealth of Tk 400 crore without any obstruction.

"They have crippled the education sector; looted banks and the stock market; set world records in project expenditures; plundered resources openly; turned law enforcement agencies into puppets of their party; snatched away freedom of speech; and violated human rights. These are just the tip of the iceberg," he said.

To consolidate power, he said, "The fascist government curbed the people's constitutional power and rights. Their misrule, corruption, injustice, repression, and farce in the name of justice endangered public safety."

Millions of people were deprived of their voting rights for years and the autocrat not only took the nation's ownership, it also handed it over to its families and party people, he said.

Yunus thanked the people for their support for his government's efforts to bring reforms and said, "We realise that you have high expectations of us. We are determined to meet these expectations."

However, the long-standing absence of democracy and 15 years of fascist rule left the interim government with challenges as big as mountains.

"But we are ready to take up the challenge," he said, urging all to have patience.

He called on all not to force the immediate fulfilment of their demands, threaten individuals at work, mount pressure to lodge cases, or attack people at courts.

"These actions will tarnish the glory and potential of the revolution of student and people, and hinder the efforts to build a new Bangladesh," Yunus said.

He said the government had to begin the job of rebuilding the country on a fragile structure, which is contrary to public interest.

The government wants to build Bangladesh in such a way that the people become the source of all power in the true sense. "We must succeed in the task of reforming... There is no alternative to this."

DON'T OBSTRUCT OUR WORK

Regarding agitations and road blocks by different groups for realising their demands, Prof Yunus said rallies have been held daily at the Secretariat, around his office, and in various places in the city.

"We understand that you have suffered a lot and have grievances pent-up over the past 16 years. If you do not let us work, all paths to reducing the sufferings will remain closed. My earnest request to you that allow us to work," he said.

The chief adviser urged the agitating groups to submit their demands to them in writing and assured everyone of taking measures to solve the issues in line with the law.

- Education sector to see massive reforms
- Work to update the curriculum has started
- Urged to have patience for administrative reforms
- Measures taken to curb inflation, price hike of essentials
- Polls after necessary reforms
- All advisers will reveal their affidavits
- Ordinance to be made to appoint an ombudsman
- Remittance through official channels urged
- Groups urged to make demands in writing, not demonstrate

MEASURES FOR FLOOD VICTIMS

Prof Yunus said the government took all-out measures at government and private levels to ensure that the flood-hit people return to a normal life at the soonest.

"We have initiated discussions so that we can work together with neighbouring countries and domestic stakeholders to prevent floods in future," he said.

INSTRUCTIONS TO FORCES

Prof Yunus alleged that the army, police, BGB, and Rab have been disgraced as they were used for enforced disappearances and torture.

"They are the pride of the country. We do not want to see the image of an entire force get tarnished due to some overenthusiastic members.

"We want to identify the criminals and punish them so that no member of the patriotic forces, police, or Rab dares to engage in murder, enforced disappearances, or torture at anyone's command," he said.

Prof Yunus further said that he instructed the defence forces, police, and all other forces to identify and bring to justice those among them who were directly involved in murder, enforced disappearances, killings, or physical and mental torture.

Lists of those who have been made to disappear or were murdered are being prepared, he said.

He said the government is also at the final stages of establishing a "July Genocide Memorial Foundation", led by him, to preserve the memory of the martyrs of the mass uprising.

CORRUPTION

The chief adviser said a committee has already been formed to prepare a white paper on the corruption, money laundering, anti-public interest agreements, looting in the name of projects, and other crimes committed over the last 15 years.

"The entire country is submerged in a sea of bribery. Please advise us on how we can get out of this. If we can advance on this issue, I believe this government will have left an important contribution to the country," he said.

'WE ARE ALL EQUAL'

Putting emphasis on the need for unity, Prof Yunus said the government's responsibility is to bind all people of the country as a family.

"There will be disagreements in a family. There will be arguments. But we are brothers and sisters; we are parents. We are not enemies of each other. We will not consider anyone an enemy because of their opinions, religion, or gender.

"We all are equal. No one is above or below anyone else. We would like to establish this concept in all areas of national life," he said.

REFORMS IN SECTORS

The chief adviser talked about reform initiatives in various sectors, including banking, judiciary, police, education, health, and agriculture.

He said the government took initiatives to ensure good governance in the banking sector, which was turned into a den of "plunderers and the corrupt".

Skilled personnel are being recruited in this sector, he said, adding that a banking commission will be formed for long-term reforms in the sector.

He said a roadmap will be prepared and made public soon.

Immediate measures are being taken to address the extreme disorder in the stock market, transportation sector, and other areas. Besides, steps were taken to control the prices of essential commodities and inflation.

He said efforts were being made to free the judiciary from corruption and political influence. Measures were taken through a specific process to ensure the independence and accountability of the judiciary.

"Justice will be ensured for all extrajudicial killings, enforced disappearances, murders, abductions, and other heinous crimes committed by the fascist government. Everyone involved in these crimes will be brought to justice.

"Steps have been taken, including becoming a party to the international convention on enforced disappearances," he said.

Prof Yunus said a police commission will be formed to make the force people-centric, politically neutral, and accountable.

Necessary reforms will be made under the commission's leadership in line with the UN investigation and other agencies' reports, he said, adding, "Measures will be taken to ensure that no one can turn Bangladesh into a police state ever again."

Prof Yunus asserted that the free flow of information and freedom of the press will be ensured.

Legal and other barriers to free flow of information will be removed and repressive provisions in laws that obstruct freedom of expression will be amended, he said.

"We are committed to ensuring people's right to information."

He said the previous government unleashed anarchy in the education sector and this government's top priority will be massive reforms to the sector. The curriculum will also be updated promptly.

Yunus said, "All of our advisers will disclose their assets in the shortest possible time. This will be made regular and mandatory for all government officials gradually."

He said an ordinance will be enacted to appoint an Ombudsman in line with the constitution.

The chief adviser mentioned that necessary reforms will be brought to the health sector while farmers' interests will be protected so that they receive fair prices for their produce.

He said, "Development that destroys and pollutes rivers, canals, wetlands, hills, forests, soil, and air is not sustainable in the long term. Our government will give utmost importance to protecting the environment and climate."

Yunus said the government will maintain friendly relations with all countries and the foreign policy will be based on mutual trust, faith, and cooperation.

Through political unity, necessary reforms will ensure that women, children, people with disabilities, religious minorities, indigenous people, and all citizens of this country are entitled to equal protection under the law, he said.

A statement victory for Tigers

A vintage Shakib then struck twice in the space of six overs, leaving Pakistan tottering at 104-5. Shakib lured both first-innings centurion Saud Shakil and Abdullah Shafique to come down the wicket, with the former missing the ball completely while the latter miscuing an attempted heave at point to Shadman Islam.

Shadman then plucked a stunning low catch at slip off Mehedi to see the back of Salman for a duck, leaving Pakistan in deep trouble at lunch.

Wicketkeeper-batter Mohammad Rizwan, who hit a superb 171 not out in Pakistan's first innings total of 448-6 declared, tried to take the fight to the opposition by blending caution with aggression.

But once he was dismissed by Mehedi, Pakistan's second innings folded for 146, leaving Bangladesh with a simple task of scoring 30 runs to win with more than a session in hand.

Shadman and Zakir stroked those runs in 6.3 overs, sparking wild celebrations at the Bangladesh dressing room.

It was Bangladesh's seventh overseas Test victory and the most decorated one after the success against New Zealand in Mount Maunganui in 2022.

This was a Test where Bangladesh, for a change, demonstrated the hallmark of a quality Test side after languishing as a mediocre one for the most part of their journey since 2000.

The young pace bowling unit, spearheaded by Shoriful Islam, more than matched the Pakistan heavyweights of Shaheen Shah Afridi and Naseem Shah. Shoriful finished with three wickets in the match, however, the figure hardly reflected how well he bowled with the new ball.

Even though the Tigers have developed a tendency of buckling under pressure once their opponents put on a massive total, in Rawalpindi, they were not intimidated after Pakistan amassed 448. Rather, they grafted and then prospered with such conviction, rarely seen before.

Coming into the side after two years, opener Shadman anchored the innings with a solid 93. Mominul Haque also played his part with 50 and Liton Das provided the necessary thrust in the middle. His 56 off 78 balls was a spectators' delight, especially the three boundaries and a massive six that he smote in one over off Naseem.

Mehedi demonstrated his all-round ability with a priceless 77.

But the best came from the best batter of the country -- an ageless Mushfiqur Rahim. The little right-hander was in a league of his own with an imperious 191, laced with 22 fours and a six.

It was his masterclass knock that propelled Bangladesh to 565 in their first essay and that priceless lead. He dominated two century stands -- 114 runs for the sixth wicket with Liton and 196 for the seventh wicket with Mehedi.

The pocket-size dynamo, nicknamed Mr. Dependable in the Tigers' ranks, hardly allowed anything to get past his watertight defence and was sublime in his stroke-play during his more than three-session vigil at the wicket.

An epitome of hard work and discipline, Mushfiqur is the only wicketkeeper-batter who has three double hundreds under his belt. He might have missed a fourth, but his latest knock was a special one considering the context and could be a good manual for up-and-coming cricketers.

Champion all-rounder Shakib had to endure a lot due to some disturbing developments back home. He did not contribute with the bat, but struck with the ball when it mattered most.

As a key member of the team, Shakib would desperately need mental peace more than anything else when the second Test starts at the same venue on August 30.

50 injured as Ansars clash with students

Critically wounded Asif Hawladar, Dhaka University correspondent of Prothom Alo, was undergoing treatment at a city hospital.

The situation turned violent after over a thousand students and others, many of them equipped with sticks, went to the Secretariat, hearing that Ansar members blocked the Secretariat even after getting assurance of fulfilling their demand, said witnesses.

Several conveners of the Anti-discrimination Student Movement asked students to gather at the Raju Memorial Sculpture to march towards the Secretariat. Terming the Ansar members "agents of autocracy", the students started marching towards the Secretariat around 9:00pm.

When they reached the Secretariat, there were chases and counter-chases between ansar members and students.

At one stage, students and others were able to drive away the ansar members around 9:45pm, witnesses said.

Later, army personnel were seen at the spot. The situation started getting normal after 10:00pm, and Gate-3 of the Secretariat was opened at 10:30pm so that officials who were stuck inside could go home, said witnesses.

After the clash, a group of people were seen beating up dispersed ansar members at different places.

After the incident, Nahid Islam, information and broadcasting adviser, said the demonstration by ansar members is part of a conspiracy as they continued their programme even after getting assurance of meeting their demand.

"We will take legal action against those involved in the conspiracy," he said while talking to the media in front of the Secretariat.

Maj Gen Abdul Motaleb Sazzad Mahmud, director general of Ansar and VDP, told The Daily Star last night, "Those who continued the demonstration even after getting the assurance are not Ansar members. They are outsiders ... they came with an additional set of clothes and their intension was different."

"They did not want any solution. We will take lawful action against those people."

He said they have a separate disciplinary force called battalion ansar, who did not join the demonstration.

In the evening, Home Affairs Adviser Lt Gen (retd) Jahangir Alam Chowdhury told a press briefing at the Secretariat that they assured the demonstrating ansar members of abolishing the "mandatory leave system".

He said this after an hour-long meeting with representatives of the Ansar members.

A seven-member committee was formed with Ansar and VDP DG Maj Gen Abdul Motaleb as convener, and its Director Jahanara Akter as member secretary to find a solution to their demand.

The committee has been asked to submit a report within seven working days, according to a notification issued by the home ministry's Public Security Division.

The report then will be sent to an inter-ministerial committee that will make necessary decisions based on the recommendations, said the home adviser.

Asked about the "mandatory leave system", the Ansar DG said according to the regulations, a member is sent on a six-month mandatory leave after working for three consecutive years. During the time, they are not paid.

"An initiative has been taken to abolish the system. After this, their jobs will be considered regular."

At the briefing, Nasim Miah, a convener of the Ansar demonstration, said they were temporarily withdrawing their programme. "The Ansar members will return to work. We will look into the decision and then we will announce our next course of action, as our main demand is nationalisation of our job."

But the demonstrating ansar members did not accept the decision and vowed to continue their demonstration. They even stopped the vehicle of the home affairs adviser as it was leaving the Secretariat, a top official of the home ministry told The Daily Star.

"The adviser then called an emergency meeting to address the situation around 8:00pm. But the meeting ended without any decision as students drove away the demonstrators," the official said.

There are three branches of Ansar: General Ansar, Battalion Ansar, and Village Defence Party (VDP).

In another development, Dhaka Metropolitan Police last night banned all rallies, meetings, or demonstrations near the Secretariat and the residence of the chief adviser until further notice.

Vested quarter spreading propaganda against media

Says CA office

BSS, Dhaka

A vested quarter is spreading propaganda against media using the name of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, said Chief Adviser's office in a message yesterday.

The quarter was asking people not to collaborate with media outlets that did not support or cooperate with the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, it said.

The vested quarter also threatened that if anyone cooperates with these media outlets, he or she will be insulted, defamed and fired, it added.

The CA office said the leaders of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement have informed the office that such letters or lists of media outlets are fake.

They, as well, urged all not to be confused over such letters or lists.

China pledges to strengthen ties with Bangladesh

Ambassador meets Dr Yunus, donates $20,000 for flood victims

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

China said yesterday that the political changeover in Bangladesh is its internal affairs. The country has expressed its continued commitment to enhancing bilateral relations with Bangladesh.

Chinese Ambassador to Bangladesh Yao Wen conveyed this message during a meeting with Chief Adviser Dr Muhammad Yunus at the State Guesthouse Jamuna.

"No matter what changes have taken place in Bangladesh, China's commitment to developing China-Bangladesh relations remains unchanged," Ambassador Yao said, according to a statement from the Chinese embassy.

He congratulated Dr Yunus on his new role and reiterated China's principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries.

Yao emphasised China's support for Bangladesh's sovereignty, independence, and stability, and expressed Beijing's readiness to assist Bangladesh's interim government in its reform and development efforts.

He also highlighted the importance of pragmatic cooperation and the implementation of agreements between the two nations.

Dr Yunus urged China to relocate some of its solar panel factories to Bangladesh to aid in the country's green transition and boost exports.

He also called for increased imports of Bangladeshi goods to China and enhanced collaboration in technology, disaster management, education, and agriculture.

'The crisis has united us'

Student-led relief efforts continue for fourth day

From children donating their savings from tiffin money to women offering their jewellery, from street beggars donating a part of the alms received in a day to corporate entities donating a day's salaries of their staff -- the people of Bangladesh have joined in a united effort to support those devastated by the recent flash floods, contributing in every way possible.

Truckloads of clothing, dates, flattened rice, puffed rice, salt, sugar, water, candles, rice, oil, lentils, saline, lighters, water purifying tablets, soap, and sanitary napkins are being transported to the flood-affected areas, while the cash received are being used to buy more relief materials.

Till 4:00pm yesterday, more than Tk 4.39 crore have been collected at TSC of Dhaka University.

Under the leadership of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, general students of DU and seven affiliated colleges, as well as volunteers from other educational institutions, have joined in to collect, sort, package, and load relief items to the trucks.

Hasnat Abdullah, a coordinator of the platform, wrote on his Facebook page, "Fascism had divided us, but the crisis united us again. The relief you provided is a testament of peoples' trust on us, and we are giving a detailed account of it."

First cyclone Remal, now floods: Khulna villages submerged again

15,000 stranded, locals join hands to fix breached embankment

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

Thousands of villagers, including around a thousand women, work tirelessly to repair a breached embankment near Kalinagar village. The dyke was breached four days ago, completely submerging thirteen villages. The locals have blamed the BWDB for using substandard materials during repair works.

Cyclones, river erosions, and floods -- people in coastal Bangladesh have been fighting natural disasters on a regular basis, and each year is turning out to be increasingly more challenging than the previous one due to climate change.

Just this year, thousands in Khulna lost their livelihoods as a tidal surge triggered by cyclone Remal swept through their homes and villages.

Just when things turn normal, another disaster strikes.

Take the case of 13 villages in Deluti union under Khulna's Paikgachha upazila for example.

Just when the people there were healing from the aftermath of cyclone Remal, the recent floods have left their areas submerged for the last four days.

Embankments getting breached too easily despite repeated repair work also adds to their misery.

The locals have blamed the Bangladesh Water Development Board for using substandard materials during repair works.

At least 15,000 residents of the aforementioned villages have been stranded.

Hundreds of villagers have left their homes behind to take shelter on nearby higher grounds.

Earlier on Thursday afternoon, the embankment near Kalinagar village in the union was breached, which led to the inundation of Kalinagar, Darun Mallik, Gopi Pagla, Telikhali, Syedkhali, Khejurtala, Sener Ber, Hatbari, Phulbari, Bagirdana, Durgapur, Harinkhola, and Noai villages.

These villages previously suffered a similar plight after the embankment was earlier breached during Cyclone Remal on May 27.

The affected villagers alleged that officials of Bangladesh Water Development Board have not been sincere in handling the issue.

MURDER CASE

Palak, Tuku placed on 7-day remand

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday placed six people, including ex-state minister for ICT Zunaid Ahmed Palak and former deputy speaker Shamsul Haque Tuku, on a seven-day remand.

They were remanded in a case filed over the death of Khalid Hasan Saifullah, a 11th grader, in the capital's Lalbagh area during the quota reform protests on July 18.

The other accused are Arif Khan Joy, former deputy sports minister; Tanbir Hasan Shaikat, general secretary of DU Chhatra League; Ahmad Hossain, Awami League organising secretary; and Rear Admiral Mohammad Sohail, former chairman of Chattogram Port Authority.

Legal notice seeks list of presidential pardons of 33yrs

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Supreme Court lawyer yesterday served a legal notice seeking a list of convicted persons whose sentences have been waived, commuted and suspended by presidents between January 1991 and July 2024 under Article 49 of the constitution.

The article says, "The President shall have power to grant pardons, reprieves and respites and to remit, suspend or commute any sentence passed by any court, tribunal or other authority."

Barrister Md Omar Farooq sent the legal notice to the secretaries at the ministries of home, law, cabinet division and the president's office, asking them to provide him with the list in 15 days.

The lawyer requested the notice recipients to explain under which process those convicted persons' sentences have been commuted or suspended.

"The incubator was damaged by floodwater and more than 30 ducks floated away. Almost everything in the house was destroyed. The flood left me destitute overnight," she said.

Many other villagers shared similar plights.

RESIDENTS REPAIRING EMBANKMENTS

Meanwhile, several thousand villagers, including around a thousand women, were seen yesterday noon working voluntarily to repair the breached portion of the embankment.

Different organisations from Khulna and other districts have also lent a helping hand to the villagers by providing relief materials.

Students were seen distributing food items to those who sought shelter on other parts of the embankment.

Ripon Kumar Mandal, chairman of Deluti Union Parishad, said the flood damaged numerous homesteads and washed away shrimp enclosures and crop fields.

"There is no other way to save the people of this union without sustainable embankment," he added.

Contacted, Ashraful Alam, executive engineer of BWDB-2 in Khulna, said the river's water level rose by 3–4 feet higher compared to normal tide, which led to the embankment getting breached.

"Locals have been working to repair it while we are providing technical support. The repair work will be completed within tomorrow [today]," he added.

The platform has announced to move the mass relief collection to DU's Central Field, as TSC has no space left to keep more relief materials. The TSC booth will now accept only cash and emergency medicine, said Lutfar Rahman, a coordinator.

Similarly, students of Jahangirnagar University launched a campaign titled 'Jahangirnagar Stands with Flood Victims' on August 22.

Fundraising and donations have been taking place at the new Arts Building, university gates, nearby areas, and along the Dhaka-Aricha highway.

People from all walks of life have contributed to raise Tk 33 lakh and other relief items till yesterday. The funds and materials are being gathered at the new Arts Building, while two trucks with 1,957 relief packets and a van with baby food left for flood-affected areas yesterday morning.

The students of private universities are not sitting idle either.

AIUB's social welfare club 'Shomoy' raised over Tk 5 lakh and distributed it to flood victims in Feni on Saturday.

Students of Fareast International University collected and packed relief items and 20 volunteers will be heading with those for Feni today, said Amina Akter, a student.

Many individuals are personally collecting funds and sending relief items to flood-hit people.

"I have already sent five lots of clothes, each with 120 sacks. Each sack has 200 pieces of clothing. My domestic help and others are washing the clothes and packing those to be sent to flood victims," said Farhana.

Advocate Noorjahan Kabir from Uttara collected Tk 4 lakh and two truckloads of clothes from her neighborhood and hopes to send those soon.

He added that reform initiatives would eventually extend to other forces under the ministry, including Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB), Department of Narcotics Control (DNC), Bangladesh Coast Guard, Ansar and VDP, Fire Service and Civil Defence, Bangladesh Jail, and the Department of Immigration and Passports. Deputy Head of Mission of the French Embassy in Dhaka, Guillaume AUDREN de KERDREL, and senior officials of the Ministry of Home Affairs were also present at the meeting.

In another meeting with senior police officials at Police Headquarters, the home adviser said any breach of discipline by Bangladesh Police would not be tolerated.

"Corruption must be stopped at all costs. There will be no concessions in case of breaching discipline," he said.

Meanwhile, Dhaka Metropolitan Police has appointed new officers-in-charge at 25 police stations, DMP Commissioner Mainul Hasan issued an order in this regard yesterday.

investigation officer of the case, produced them with a 10-day remand petition for each of them.

In the petition, the IO said involvement of the accused with the incident was primarily found true.

On August 19, the victim's father, filed the case against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, Anisul Huq, Salman F Rahman, and 49 others with Lalbagh Police Station.

The case document mentioned that Khalid participated in the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

On July 18, law enforcers indiscriminately fired at the students with direct support from the accused, resulting in Khalid being fatally shot, it added.

Earlier in the day, Tuku, Palak, and Shaikat were produced before another court on completion of their 10-day remand in a case filed with Paltan Police Station over the death of rickshaw-puller Kamal Mia in the city's Paltan area on July 19.

Meanwhile, Arif Khan Joy was produced before another Dhaka court on completion of a five-day remand in a case filed over the death of grocery shop owner Abu Saeed in Dhaka's Mohammadpur on July 19.

Ahmad Hossain and Sohail were produced before another Dhaka court on completion of their four-day remand in a case filed over the killing of a shop owner, Nabin Talukder, in Dhaka's Paltan on July 19.

Chanchal, 38, of Madhyapara area of Brahmanbaria town; and Shaheen Chowdhury, 48, of Nayanpur village of Sadar upazila.

Confirming the matter, Mohammad Mozaffar Hossain, OC of Brahmanbaria Sadar Model Police Station, said police recovered the bodies and kept those in Brahmanbaria General Hospital morgue for autopsy.

The injured are being treated in Akhaura Upazila Health Complex, he added.

In Munshiganj, a motorcyclist died as he lost control over steering and hit the railing of Basiya Bari bridge in Dhipur union of Tongibari upazila yesterday.

The deceased, Sohan Sheikh, 17, was a resident of Jashlong village in the upazila.

The accident took place at around 12:30pm. Sohan died on the spot. His body has been handed over to family without autopsy, said Ansar-uz-Zaman, in-charge of Dighirpar Police Outpost.

Vegetable prices in Chattogram markets have surged due to floods and transportation disruptions.

Vegetable prices soar in Ctg

Green chilli now Tk 550-700 per kg

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Prices of vegetables in Chattogram city's kitchen markets have surged in the last few days, driven by the flooding on highways and the suspension of transport services.

Green chilli is currently being sold at Tk 550 to Tk 700 per kg, tomatoes at Tk 590 per kg, and other vegetables ranging from Tk 90 to Tk 520 per kg at the retail level in Chattogram.

This correspondent visited several kitchen markets, including those in the 2 No Gate, Kazir Dewri, and Karnaphuli Complex areas, and observed similar pricing trends across all locations.

At the city's prime wholesale market in Riazuddin Bazar, most stalls were found empty. Several vegetable vendors attributed the price hikes to the floods and the resulting transportation crisis, which have significantly reduced supply.

The ongoing flood situation and subsequent supply shortages have severely impacted retail kitchen markets in the city. Retail traders said vegetable prices have increased by at least 70 to 100 percent in the last three days.

In retail markets, bottle gourd, pumpkin, and sweet gourd are being sold at Tk 90 per kg, brinjal at Tk 140, beans at Tk 250, cauliflower at Tk 580, pointed gourd at Tk 140, snake gourd at Tk 120, bitter gourd at Tk 150, ladyfingers at Tk 100, and cucumbers at Tk 110 per kg.

> Last Friday, I sold gourd at Tk 50 per kg, whereas the current price ranges from Tk 90 to Tk 100. Additionally, the price of green chilli, which was Tk 250 per kg on Friday, has surged to Tk 590.

> Vegetable trader

Abul Hashem, a vegetable trader at Kazir Dewri retail market, said, "Last Friday, I sold gourd at Tk 50 per kg, whereas the current price ranges from Tk 90 to Tk 100. Additionally, the price of green chilli, which was Tk 250 per kg on Friday, has surged to Tk 590.

"Prices of all types of vegetables have increased due to low supply in the market," he added.

Nurul Alam, a wholesale trader and owner of Shah Amanat Trading at Riazuddin Bazar, explained that a significant portion of the vegetables supplied to Chattogram city originates from markets in Sitakunda, Mirsarai, Feni, Noakhali, and Cumilla regions.

Recent flooding has severely impacted crop yields in these areas, leading to a reduction in vegetable supply by approximately 60-70 percent.

Written exams of 46th BCS suspended

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The written tests of the 46th BCS examination, scheduled to be held between August 28 and September 9, were suspended yesterday due to unavoidable circumstances.

The Bangladesh Public Service Commission issued a press release in this regard.

The date and time of the tests (compulsory and post-related subjects) will be notified through a press release at an appropriate time, said the press release signed by Ananda Kumar Biswas, exam controller (cadre) of BPSC.

NSU faculty condemn violence on campus

STAR REPORT

Faculty members of North South University yesterday condemned the incidents of violence and intimidation that occurred on the university campus on August 21.

In a press statement, they said a group of individuals entered the NSU campus armed with firearms and verbally assaulted several faculty members present on the premises.

The statement claimed that during a gathering

Firearms licences issued over last 15yrs suspended

Home adviser discusses issues of law and order, police reform with French ambassador

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Ministry of Home Affairs has suspended all firearms licences issued to civilians over the past 15 years during the tenure of the Awami League government.

Licensed arms holders have been instructed to deposit their firearms and ammunition at the nearest police station by September 3, according to a circular issued by the Public Security Division of the ministry.

The circular, signed by Md Johirul Haque, senior assistant secretary of the ministry, states that licences granted between January 6, 2009, and August 5, 2024, are suspended.

The suspension came hours after Home Affairs Adviser Lt Gen (retd) Jahangir Alam Chowdhury met French Ambassador to Bangladesh Marie Masdupuy at the Secretariat yesterday.

During the meeting, various issues such as law and order, police reform, and the recovery of illegal arms were discussed.

The ambassador expressed concern over arms looted from different police stations, to which the home adviser responded that a crackdown would be launched soon to recover these weapons.

Jahangir also noted that while the law and order situation in Bangladesh is gradually improving, certain challenges remain due to various public demands and protests.

However, he expressed optimism that the situation would improve in the near future.

The ambassador also inquired about government efforts to reform the police force.

Jahangir explained that the police

Six killed in road crashes

STAR REPORT

At least six people were killed and nine others injured in separate road accidents in Mymensingh, Barishal, Brahmanbaria and Munshiganj districts.

In Mymensingh, a freedom fighter was killed in a road accident on Dhaka-Mymensingh highway in Boilor area of Trishal upazila yesterday morning.

The victim, Md Shafiqul Islam, 75, was a resident of Boilor Boro Pukurpar area in the upazila and was a retired manager of Krishi Bank, police said.

Shafiqul was crossing the highway around 11:00am when speeding motorcycle hit him, leaving him critically injured, said Md Kamal Hossain, officer-in-charge of Trishal Police Station.

He was taken to Mymensingh Medical College hospital where doctors declared him dead. A case was later lodged with the police station in this connection, the OC added.

In Barishal, a woman and her son were killed and four others were injured as their three-wheeler was hit by a Dhaka-bound passenger bus of Jamuna Line Paribahan from opposite direction on Dhaka-Barishal Highway in Gournadi upazila yesterday.

The deceased were identified as Soma Begum, 30, and her son Azmain, 3, of Islampur village under Babuganj upazila of the district.

The incident took place at around 1:30pm in Bezhar area.

All six passengers of the three-wheeler were injured in the accident and were taken to Barishal Sher-e-Bangla Medical College Hospital, where Soma and her son were declared dead, said Golam Rasul, OC of Gournadi Highway Police Station.

In Brahmanbaria, a CNG-run auto-rickshaw hit a motorcycle, leaving its rider and pillion dead, while five passengers of the auto-rickshaw including its driver sustained injuries.

The incident took place in Kodda area of Brahmanbaria Sadar upazila yesterday noon.

The deceased are: Mahibul Islam

Censor board shouldn't exist
TANZIKA AMIN

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Following a hiatus of nearly six weeks, Tanzika Amin is back on set, shooting for a new series on Maasranga Television. Directed by Nazrul Islam Raju, this drama highlights the complexities of city life.

Tanzika revealed that her role has an interesting angle—the character is a girl who's eager to leave the country, introducing a subtle yet distinct variation to the storyline.

Regarding her return to filming, the actress shared, "I spent some time abroad in London. Upon coming back, I noticed significant changes in the country. After settling in, I resumed shooting. It feels great to be back on set."

The Bakul Fuler Mala actress has also begun working on a new web-series. She mentioned that all the details have been finalised, but she remained tight-lipped about the director and the title of the story.

In the meantime, the former Lux star is eagerly anticipating the release of her film, Omimangshito, directed by Raihan Rafi. She shared, "I completed the movie last year, and it was submitted for censorship, but it has been held up."

Tanzika Amin, visibly frustrated, expressed, "After submitting the film to the censor board, it was shuffled from one desk to another, causing significant delays. We put in a tremendous amount of effort to complete the project, only for it to get stalled at the censor board in the end."

She added that with the changes happening in the country, everything seems to be starting afresh. When asked if Omimangshito would now finally go through the censorship process, she confidently responded, "It will definitely go to the censor board and be released. I firmly believe that."

The actress shared that the film's narrative centres around a couple who are both journalists. She takes on the role of the female lead, a character named Neeru.

Reflecting on her experience portraying a journalist, Tanzika mentioned, "I had played a journalist in a drama many years ago, but stepping into the shoes of a female journalist in a film after so long was a refreshing experience. The role brought its own set of challenges, which made it all the more rewarding."

When asked about her experience working on Omimangshito, the actress shared that the film was a challenging journey. She recounted various intense moments during the shoot that left her with physical scars. "I poured my heart and soul into this project. Even after cameras stop rolling, I found it difficult to shake off the story and character—I was completely absorbed," Tanzika explained.

With growing curiosity surrounding the film, some have speculated that it mirrors the tragic story of Sagar-Runi. Addressing this, Tanzika clarified, "The film portrays a story of barbarism, reflecting the many brutal realities in our society. It's the story of a journalist couple, and it's undeniably a heart-wrenching story. However, it isn't based on any specific individual's life."

When asked about the debate surrounding the need for a censor board, the actress expressed a strong opinion, stating, "I believe the censor board shouldn't exist. Filmmakers should have the freedom to tell their stories as they envision them, without interference. A director's role is to bring a wide range of narratives to the screen, and they shouldn't be hindered by censorship. Films that were previously blocked, such as Saturday Afternoon, should now see the light of day."

The artiste further emphasised the importance of books and films as educational tools, saying, "People gain knowledge and insights by engaging with literature and cinema. Just as there are stories of brutality, there are also stories filled with positivity. If directors are constrained, we won't see the productions of quality work."

Reflecting on the present situation, she added, "I'm optimistic that something remarkable is on the horizon. So far, 99 percent of developments have been positive. Let's see how things unfold."

Dhaka's theatre troupes unite to support flood victims with charity shows

The capital's theatre community has come together to support flood victims, with troupes such as Ethic, BotTola, and Anuswar, deciding to donate the proceeds from their performances to aid those affected by the disaster.

Ethic returned to the Dhaka stage on Saturday (August 24) with the play Haari Phatibe at the Nilima Ibrahim Auditorium of the Bangladesh Mahila Samity at 7 pm.

Meanwhile, BotTola will revive their popular play Bannyatherium on August 30 at 6pm at the Mahila Samity in celebration of their anniversary. The troupe has pledged to donate all proceeds from this performance to aid children in flood-affected areas.

Putul finally finds flood-hit family

Renowned singer Sajia Sultana Putul has finally located her sister, Sanjida Akhter Kona, and the rest of her family members after days of searching amid the devastating floods in the country, with the help of the community.

Though facing a shortage of drinking water, they are safe, the singer informed yesterday. Putul expressed deep gratitude on social media, particularly to Lops Sharkar, who located them.

The ongoing floods have impacted 5.1 million people across 12 districts. Communication blackouts, especially in Feni, left many families, including Putul's, unable to reach loved ones. As the waters begin to recede, Putul hopes for her family's safe return and urges compassion for flood victims during this crisis.

Hasina made accused in 12 more cases

director of BDR in 2010.

Rahim, an accused in the BDR carnage case, died in jail on July 29 of that year.

Advocate Abdul Aziz, son of deceased Abdur Rahim, filed the case with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Akhtaruzzaman.

Mosharraf Hossain Kajol, the then public prosecutor of the BDR mutiny case, and former lawmakers Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh, Sheikh Fazlul Karim Selim, Sheikh Helal, and Mirza Azam are among the accused in the case.

Hasina and 48 others were sued in a case filed over the death of university student Sheikh Ashabul Yamin at the Savar Bazar bus stand during the quota reform movement on July 18.

The victim's uncle, Abdullah Al Kabir, filed the case with a Dhaka court. In a viral video, Yamin, a student of the Military Institute of Science and Technology (MIST), was seen being dropped on the road by the law enforcers from their armoured van. He was still alive at the time.

One Masud Rana filed a case with another Dhaka court against Hasina and 24 others over the death of his brother-in-law, Babu Mollah, in the Hatirjheel area on July 19.

Hasina and 21 others were sued over the death of Golam Nafiz, 17, at the Farmgate area of Tejgaon on August 1. Rafiqul Islam filed a case with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Mohammad Nurul Huda Chowdhury.

Nasir Uddin filed a case with a Dhaka court against Hasina and 18 others over the death of shop employee Jasim Uddin, 35, in the Uttara Paschim area on July 18.

Upon separate hearings, the four magistrates recorded the statements of the complainants and asked the officer-in-charges (OC) of the police stations concerned to register the complaints as the First Information Report (FIR).

Yesterday, Rizia Begum, 36, filed a case with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Saddam Hossain against Hasina and 33 others over the death of his nephew journalist Mehedi Hasan near the Kazla Toll Plaza over Hanif Flyover in Jatrabari during quota protests on July 18.

Babul Mia, 42, also filed a case with the court of the same magistrate over the death of one Jisan against Hasina and 26 in Matuail on July 20, while Mamunur Rashid, 34, filed a case against Hasina and 27 others over the death of his brother-in-law Yusuf Mia Sanoar in Shani Akhra area on July 20.

Another case was filed against Hasina and 13 others over the death of Mahamudur Rahman Soikot, 19, in Mohammadpur on July 19.

Besides, 30-40 unnamed police officers and members were also accused.

In Narsingdi, Angur Mia, the brother-in-law of the slain Jaman Mia, filed a murder case against Hasina and two others with a local court.

The court directed the Madhabdi Police Station officer-in-charge to record it as an FIR.

Local Awami League leaders and activists, at the behest of the named accused, opened fire on a peaceful student protest on July 21. Jaman was shot while overseeing the protest and later succumbed to his injuries on July 25 at Dhaka Medical College Hospital.

In Rangpur, a murder case has been filed against 150 individuals, including Hasina and her sister, Sheikh Rehana, with a local court over a clash between student protesters and law enforcement agencies during a student movement in Rangpur on July 19.

A shop worker, Momdel Hossain, who was forced to amputate his left leg from the knee, filed the case. The court asked Kotwali Police Station to record it as an FIR.

In Pirojpur court, Hasina and 13 others, including five Rab members, were sued in an abduction case filed by Babul Hawlader, father of Sunny Hawlader, who was a victim of enforced disappearance in 2013.

The then Rab director general Mokhlesur Rahman was among the accused.

Interim govt to be given

According to him, Bangladesh has to clean up all the rubbish of the past and build a truly democratic country – a task completed by the former caretaker government led by Justice Latifur Rahman in just three months before it organised a fair election.

"We want to allow the interim government a reasonable time to reform all the institutions of the state to hold an acceptable election. But the time will not be indefinite," he said.

The BNP secretary general blamed India for the ongoing floods and criticised the neighbouring country for its position on sharing water from the common rivers with Bangladesh.

"Parts of the country have been affected by severe floods that were not witnessed in the last 15 years. This terrible flood happened because India opened their dams without any prior alert," he said.

Fakhrul also alleged BNP leader M Ilias Ali became a victim of enforced disappearance because he stood up to India's water-sharing policy.

"The bilateral contract of sharing transboundary river water has not been established yet. They (India) are using water aggression as a weapon. Protests against this water aggression started from Sylhet which was led by M Ilias Ali. As a result, he was forcefully disappeared," he said.

Asked about the whereabouts of Ilias, he said, "We are not sure whether he is alive or not. We are not given any specific answer from the organisations involved but we are keeping out pressure to know what happened to all the people who faced enforced disappearance. We have earlier submitted all details to the UN. A UN investigation team arrived in Bangladesh to investigate the matter. We are hopeful."

Fakhrul claimed around 700 BNP leaders and activists were subjected to enforced disappearance while more than 1.45 lakh cases were filed against over 6 million BNP activists in its struggle for democracy since 2012 – which he said was "unbelievable".

BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia was freed through the mass movement but she never bowed to the power, Fakhrul said and added now the party is battling legally several cases against its acting chairman Tarique Rahman.

Fakhrul accused Hasina of attempting to establish a one-party rule. "Sheikh Mujib was a leading figure in the liberation movement of the country and was in the government from 1972 to 1975 with people's support. But he decided to initiate a one-party rule, formed BKSAL and dissolved all other political parties. Sheikh Hasina followed in his footsteps and finalised the preparation for a one-party system, but failed in the face of the resistance of the general students."

The BNP secretary general promised to repeal the Digital Security Act, which is now the Cyber Security Act, if the party forms the government after the election.

"In the previous regime, people could not speak out for fear of the Digital Security Act. Journalists were suppressed by this law. Now people have regained freedom of speech," he said.

Now Social Islami Bank freed

The new board was constituted as per section 45 of the Bank Companies Act, 1991 to protect the interests of depositors and ensure good governance, said the BB letter to the SIBL managing director.

The move to dissolve the board comes after a group of SIBL officials requested the BB governor to do so following the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government on August 5.

Alam is said to be a close associate of Hasina.

The group and its associates took out Tk 4,200 crore from the bank, which came under S Alam's control in 2017, according to central bank documents.

However, the actual amount taken is in the neighbourhood of Tk 15,000 crore, which would be about 41 percent of the bank's total outstanding loans at the end of last year, according to the bank's officials who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

The amount given to S Alam and its associate companies has left the bank with a deficit in its current account balance with the central bank for more than a year.

To plug the deficit, the central bank provided special liquidity support to the lender without any collateral on the orders of former BB governor Abdur Rouf Talukder.

As of August 7, the bank faced a current account deficit of Tk 2,877 crore with the central bank.

The liquidity support was stopped after Ahsan H Mansur took charge in the middle of August.

At the end of 2023, SIBL had Tk 9,568 crore in default loans but it showed only Tk 1,644 crore, according to a recent BB investigation.

UN calls for stepping up

The UNHCR welcomed Bangladesh's renewed commitment to the refugees, set forth by the interim government's Chief Adviser Professor Muhammad Yunus. "We echo Dr Yunus's call for continued solidarity from the international community through consistent financial support and helping to ensure their 'eventual repatriation to Myanmar, with safety, dignity and full rights'."

"Bangladesh's humanitarian spirit, at a time of transition for the Bangladeshi people, deserves global appreciation," the statement said.

A dignified and sustainable return to Myanmar remains the primary solution to this crisis, the UN agency said, calling on the international community to demonstrate the political will to make this possible.

Highlighting the ongoing conflict between Myanmar forces and rebels in Rakhine, the UNHCR also called on the Bangladesh authorities to ensure that civilians fleeing the violence in Myanmar are allowed access to protection in Bangladesh.

UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres also called on all parties to the conflict in Myanmar to end the violence and ensure the protection of civilians, said his spokesperson Stephane Dujarric in a briefing.

Guterres also appealed to strengthen regional protection efforts, provide access to conflict-affected communities and further support host countries.

Julie Bishop, the UN secretary-general's special envoy on Myanmar, is engaging all stakeholders, including regional actors, to move towards an inclusive Myanmar-led process for sustainable peace and national reconciliation, Dujarric said.

These are important steps to create conditions conducive to the voluntary, safe, dignified, and sustainable return of the Rohingya people to Myanmar, he said.

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken has said that the ongoing humanitarian crisis and human rights violations in Myanmar are making life even harder for many of the country's ethnic and religious minority groups, especially the Rohingya people.

In a statement yesterday, he said the US stands with the survivors of the Rohingya genocide and is committed to providing life-saving assistance to affected members of Rohingya communities and those affected by the crisis.

Over the past seven years, he said, the US has contributed nearly $2.4 billion and is also conducting extensive documentation of the atrocities and abuses committed against Rohingya and all civilians.

"Our support for the people of Burma in their aspirations for a democratic, inclusive, and peaceful future is unwavering, as are our calls on all parties to protect civilians from harm."

The Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade said the country continues to support international accountability for human rights violations and other abuses.

In a statement, it called on the Myanmar regime to take a different path -- cease violence, engage in dialogue and grant safe and unimpeded humanitarian access.

"We support ASEAN's efforts to resolve the crisis through the work of the ASEAN Chair and Special Envoy and consistent with the Five Point Consensus. We continue to support the people of Myanmar and their aspirations for a return to the path of democracy."

Janmashtami

The day of Janmashtami is a public holiday in Bangladesh.

Temples and religious organisations and institutions have also chalked out programmes to celebrate Janmashtami festival.

National dailies will publish special articles while Bangladesh Betar, Bangladesh Television, other private TV channels, and radio stations will air special programmes highlighting various aspects of the life and philosophy of Lord Sri Krishna.

Bangladesh Puja Udjapan Parishad and Mahanagar Sarbajanin Puja Committee have programmes to be observed centrally at Dhakeshwari National Temple here.

The programmes include Geeta Joggo at 8:00am at Dhakeshwari National Temple to seek blessings for the country and the nation.

War, he was honoured with the heroic title 'Bir Protik', the fourth-highest gallantry award in Bangladesh.

Meanwhile, police detained Abdus Sobhan Golap in the capital's Nakhalpara area in the afternoon.

He was picked for interrogation around 2:45pm, said Mobarak Hossain, officer-in-charge of Tejgaon Police Station.

Golap is a former lawmaker from Madaripur-3 constituency.

He lost his seat to independent candidate Tahmina Begum in the last general election.

In February last year, a writ was filed at the High Court seeking direction to investigate the allegation that Golap purchased nine houses in New York for $4 million.

Telegram CEO arrested in France

REUTERS, Paris

Pavel Durov, the Russian-born billionaire founder and owner of the Telegram messaging app, was arrested at Le Bourget airport outside Paris shortly after landing on a private jet late on Saturday and placed in custody, a police source said.

There was no official confirmation from France of the arrest, which French and Russian media have also reported, saying that Durov, 39, was arrested shortly after arriving at Le Bourget airport on a private jet from Azerbaijan.

France's BFM and TF1 said that Durov, who has dual French and United Arab Emirates citizenship, was arrested as part of a preliminary police investigation into allowing possible criminality due to a lack of moderators on Telegram and a lack of cooperation with police.

Durov faces possible indictment, according to French media yesterday.

Yemen Houthis hail Hezbollah strikes

Renew threats to launch their own assault on Israel

AGENCIES

Yemen's Iran-backed Houthi rebels praised attacks by Lebanon's Hezbollah on Israel yesterday and renewed threats to launch their own assault in response to Israeli strikes on a port in Yemen.

"We congratulate Hezbollah and its Secretary-General on the great and courageous attack carried out by the resistance this morning against the Israeli enemy," the Houthis said in a statement after Hezbollah said it had launched a large-scale attack with rockets and drones.

The Yemeni rebels said the "strong and effective response ... confirms that the resistance is capable, strong and honest in its promise and threats."

The Houthis pledged to launch their own attacks against Israel in response to July 20 strikes that targeted a rebel-run port in the coastal city of Hodeida. "We reaffirm once again that the Yemeni response is definitely coming," the statement said.

The strike on Hodeida came a day after the Houthis launched their first deadly strike on Israel -- a drone attack in Tel Aviv that killed an Israeli civilian, reports AFP.

Israel's response destroyed much of the port's fuel storage capacity and killed at least nine people, according to the rebels.

The Houthis are fighting Israel as part of Iran's so-called "axis of resistance", which includes militant groups in Iraq, Syria and Lebanon.

Since November, the Yemeni rebels have launched a flurry of missile and drone strikes on Israel-linked shipping in the Gulf of Aden and the Red Sea.

Meanwhile, Egyptian President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi yesterday warned America's top general during a meeting of the dangers of a major conflict in Lebanon.

US Air Force General C Q Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, arrived in Egypt hours after a significant missile exchange between Israel and Lebanese Hezbollah, reports Reuters.

In a statement, Sisi's office said the Egyptian leader told Brown that the international community needed to "exert all efforts and intensify pressures to defuse tension and stop the state of escalation that threatens the security and stability of the entire region."

"(Sisi warned) in this regard of the dangers of opening a new front in Lebanon, and stressing the need to preserve Lebanon's stability and sovereignty," the statement read.

Sisi yesterday called for a "decisive stance from the international community" and a stronger response "to joint Egyptian-American-Qatari efforts" for a ceasefire and hostage-prisoner exchange, which would enable a "path to calm and stability in the region," his office said.

EAST UKRAINE

Reuters staff missing in Russian strike on hotel

A member of the Reuters team covering the war in Ukraine was missing and two others were hospitalised after a Russian strike on a hotel in the eastern Ukrainian city of Kramatorsk.

In a statement, the news agency said that the Hotel Sapphire, where a six-person Reuters crew was staying, was hit by a strike on Saturday.

"One of our colleagues is unaccounted for, while another two have been taken to hospital for treatment," the agency said.

"Three other colleagues have been accounted for. We are urgently seeking more information, working with the authorities in Kramatorsk, and supporting our colleagues and their families. We will give an update when we have more information," it added.

US PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Harris raises $540m since launching her campaign

REUTERS, Washington

Democrat Kamala Harris has raised $540 million in little more than a month since she began her race for US president, with a surge of donations flowing in during the Democratic National Convention last week, her campaign said yesterday.

A memo released by Harris' campaign manager, Jen O'Malley Dillon, said the $540 million raised included $82 million that came in during convention week and is a sign of Democratic enthusiasm for her candidacy.

"This is the most ever for any presidential campaign in this time span," she said.

SOUTH CHINA SEA ROW

China, Philippines clash in disputed waters

REUTERS, Manila

The Philippines and China clashed in disputed waters of the South China Sea yesterday over what Manila said was a resupply mission for fishermen, the latest in a series of sea and air confrontations in the strategic waterway.

The incident overshadows efforts by both nations to rebuild trust and better manage disputes after months of confrontations, including a violent clash in June, in which a Filipino sailor lost a finger.

The Philippines yesterday accused China of "aggressive and dangerous manoeuvres" to block the resupply mission. China's coast guard, meanwhile, said it had taken "control measures" against a vessel that had "illegally" entered the waters and repeatedly approached Chinese ships in a dangerous manner.

In the incident near the Sabina Shoal, the Philippine South China Sea task force said Chinese vessels rammed and used water cannons against a Philippine Bureau of Fisheries ship transporting food, fuel and medical supplies for Filipino fishermen.

For its part, the Chinese coast guard said the Philippine ship "ignored repeated serious warnings and deliberately approached and rammed" China's law enforcement boat, resulting in a collision. It added that responsibility for the collision lies entirely on the Philippine side.

No contingency system despite available funds

After September 2022, when the initiative was taken, Bangladesh faced a number of cyclones and floods that severely disrupted telecommunication. If an emergency system had been in place, people's suffering from lack of communication would have been much less.

For instance, Cyclone Mocha in May 2023 knocked down most of the towers in Cox's Bazar, while Cyclone Remal in May left more than 55 percent of the mobile towers dysfunctional.

Were the NETS in place, the government would not have needed to spend about Tk 50 lakh to provide diesel to keep network towers operational in flood-affected areas in Feni at present.

The posts and telecommunication secretary was the convener of the committee and the director general of the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission's systems and services division was assigned as the member secretary.

The Director General of the Department of Disaster Management (DDM) was also made a member of the committee.

Razwanur Rahman, the DDM DG, told The Daily Star he has not been made aware of such an initiative.

Md Mushfiqur Rahman, secretary for Posts and Telecommunications, could not be reached for comment. However, a senior official in the ministry said the initiative hasn't progressed much.

The committee was also supposed to present a budget proposal for the NETS in the social obligation fund (SoF) council meeting.

SoF of the BTRC is a fund designed to support the expansion of telecommunication services in underserved areas. And the major contributors to the SoF are telecom operators.

But no such proposal has been placed at the meeting of the SOF council in the last two years, according to the meeting minutes.

At the meeting of the SoF council in April this year, which took place after one and half years of the formation of the committee, a project for NETS was proposed.

But in the next meeting, in late July, there was no mention of the project.

The meeting discussed the projected cost of Tk 835 crore for different projects in fiscal 2024-25. However, the NETS was not included in the list of projects, according to the document.

"The prolonged delay in implementing the NETS is a critical oversight, especially when the SoF is readily available," said Abu Nazam M Tanveer Hossain, a telecom policy expert.

Given Bangladesh's vulnerability to natural calamities, a national telecommunications emergency plan (NETP) and system are essential for coordinating relief efforts and saving lives, he said.

Immediate action is needed prioritising high-risk areas, network neutrality and tailored contingency plans for different emergencies.

"This will enhance our disaster response and safeguard our citizens effectively," he said, adding that the International Telecommunication Union's Strategic Target 3.5 mandates that all countries have a National Emergency Telecommunication Plan by 2023.

The International Telecommunication Union (ITU) is a specialised agency of the UN responsible for many matters related to information and communication technologies.

The ITU provided a deadline to the respective national telecommunication operators to come up with a detailed NETP by 2023, said Shahed Alam, chief corporate and regulatory officer at Robi.

The NETP is an overall document that includes not only the regulatory framework for disaster risk management but also all activities and actions that need to be developed and implemented in each of the phases of the disaster management cycle beyond the ICT sector.

In the case of any global pandemic or any other natural calamities, NETP plays a pivotal role in dealing with specific crises for a country.

Against this backdrop, the BTRC arranged a workshop with relevant stakeholders for developing a NETP for Bangladesh, according to Alam.

"Unfortunately, no effective measures have been implemented yet based on the recommendations that came up from the workshop. We believe that immediate implementation of NETP will pave the way for smoothly implementing the NETS."

according to a press release from the ministry.

He also highlighted the potential consequences of administrative disruptions, noting that teachers and staffers could face delays in receiving their salaries and allowances if the system falters.

Wahiduddin reiterated the need to maintain stability in the education sector with the goal of restoring discipline in educational institutions amid the ongoing transition.

He further emphasised the importance of maintaining proper relationships between teachers and students, saying that no one should be personally humiliated.

Mazumder, Sarafat's bank accounts to be frozen are the owners of the Bangla daily Dainik Bangla.

Both men are big beneficiaries of the Awami League government of the past 15 years.

Mazumder leveraged his position as the BAB chairman to change critical policies for the banking sector such that it favoured his businesses as well as take loans bypassing rules and regulations, according to people with knowledge of the matter.

For instance, at the 654th board meeting of Janata Bank in 2021, a Tk 261 crore interest waiver facility was approved for two concerns of Mazumder's Nassa Group: Nassa Taipei Spinners and Nassa Spinners.

The central bank initially rejected the facility as Janata approved the waiver violating banking norms but later walked back on the decision.

To ensure his access to the power centre, he would collect funds from banks and personally hand the cheque over to the former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, he said.

Sarafat, who hails from Gopalganj like Hasina, exerted his influence to get a host of facilities for the cash-strapped Padma Bank and get a licence for a non-bank financial institution in a crowded sector.

The Anti-Corruption Commission recently started investigating Sarafat over allegations of seizing the Padma bank and embezzling Tk 800 crore from the stock market.

In Feni, several remote upazilas remained inaccessible by road, even as waters were receding. Mobile networks have not yet been fully restored, and many areas are still without electricity.

Locals said there is now a severe shortage of drinking water and food.

Meanwhile, three new deaths -- one each in Noakhali, Cumilla, and Rangamati -- were reported yesterday, taking the toll from the floods to 21. Two people were reported missing in Moulvibazar.

People started returning to their villages in Brahmanbaria, Lakshmipur, Sylhet, Moulvibazar, Habiganj, Khagrachhari, Chattogram, and Cox's Bazar as the flood situation was improving there.

Many huts have collapsed and thousands have lost almost all their belongings, including farm animals and stored crops.

According to the disaster management ministry, the floods marooned over 10 lakh people in 11 districts and the total number of those directly affected was over 52 lakh.

At least 73 upazilas have been severely impacted. The authorities opened 3,654 shelters, providing refuge to over 4 lakh people.

MISERABLE CONDITION

Yunus Sikder, a resident of the Bangla Bazar area in Begumganj, Noakhali, said thousands were suffering from a shortage of food.

"I spent all my savings on food and water. Now we are forced to drink dirty water," he said.

Although the water has been receding, the situation remains particularly dire in Feni and Cumilla, where relief materials have not reached many remote areas because trucks broke down on flooded roads, and there is no boat to carry them.

People stranded in Cumilla were also suffering from shortage of food and drinking water.

In some places of Feni, helicopters of the army, navy, air force, RAB, and BGB are delivering relief goods to remote areas.

The floods have caused extensive damage to fish farms and livestock, with losses estimated at Tk 411 crore, according to the government.

BJMC is still incurring losses!

Govt must overhaul the jute sector, revive its past glory

It is surprising that more than four years after the Awami League government closed the 25 state-run jute mills, the Bangladesh Jute Mills Corporation (BJMC) is still counting losses for them. According to a report by Prothom Alo, in FY 2023-24, the corporation incurred a loss of over Tk 180 crore, while over Tk 137 crore was spent on salaries and allowances for employees who are sitting idle. For instance, the Demra-based Latif Bawani Jute Mills Limited, which was shut down in July 2020, is still having to pay its 184 staff members. A similar situation prevails in other closed jute mills. The question is, why has the BJMC failed to take a decision about its idle workforce in all these years?

Back in 2020, the government had promised that all the mills would be reopened after equipping them with modern technologies under different types of ventures such as public-private partnership, etc. It also promised to give jobs to the laid-off workers once the mills reopened. However, we have not seen any such initiatives since. What BJMC did instead was that it leased out 14 of the 25 mills to different private organisations. Unfortunately, half of them reportedly do not even have the expertise to run such facilities, and therefore couldn't start their production. On what basis were those mills leased out then? Also, isn't leasing them out to private entities without modernising them a clear breach of the government promise?

Given the worldwide demand for jute-based products and the potential of this sector within the country, we think the interim government should take urgent initiatives to revive this sector. Of course, if needed, the government can work together with private institutions but there is no alternative to revamping the BJMC so that it can take the lead in this regard. This would also create job opportunities for thousands of workers including those who used to work in the sector and are now living in dire conditions.

Reviving the sector is all the more important because of the global campaign to reduce the use of plastic products. Bangladesh can be a part of this drive by rejuvenating the sector since jute-based products can actually be a great alternative to plastic goods and bags. Our scientists have invented some jute-based products, such as the biodegradable Sonali Bag, which has a great potential. However, we have not succeeded in popularising them due to the reluctance of the relevant authorities. Such attitudes must change.

About the idle BJMC workforce, we think the government should take a quick decision about transferring them to other government factories or institutions. Another option is to let go of these officials by paying them their dues since the BJMC should not be incurring such huge losses year after year. However, the government's long-term goal should be to completely overhaul the BJMC and the jute sector so that the latter can make profits again.

We must undo legacy of data distortion

BBS must be able to provide accurate data

Bangladesh has long suffered from a lack of reliable official data thanks to the Awami League regime that often fabricated data to align with its political narratives and cover up unflattering truths. From economy to public health to education to energy, this trend was allegedly prevalent across key policy areas. While we are yet to learn of the full extent of data manipulation or the damage caused by it, a report by Bonik Barta digs deep into the economic sector, highlighting how top officials were involved in such practices.

Reportedly, former finance minister AHM Mustafa Kamal, particularly during his tenure as planning minister in 2014-2019, played an active role in this regard. Under his leadership, an influential syndicate within the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS) controlled data processing to manipulate key economic indicators such as inflation and growth, leading to misguided policies that failed to address the real economic conditions and ultimately hurt the country. For example, from 2015 to 2019, Bangladesh's growth was overstated by 3.5 percent, according to World Bank. Such manipulations allowed the government to show continuous growth in line with its Five-Year Plans. The BBS also manipulated the Consumer Price Index (CPI) by increasing the number of items in the inflation basket from 420 to 749, thus diluting the impact of rising prices for essential goods and keeping inflation figures artificially low.

The trend of data distortion was not limited to Kamal's period at the planning ministry, nor was BBS the only party complicit in it. In fact, many key state institutions were also similarly compromised, which shows how centrally planned this whole data propaganda campaign was. It was only in July that we got to learn of a shocking discrepancy of $14 billion in our export data, which was apparently orchestrated by officials at the National Board of Revenue (NBR) and Export Promotion Bureau (EPB). Instances like this likely abound, even if those were not always reported. It is because of such statistical manipulations that the World Bank's Statistical Capacity Indicator showed a fall in Bangladesh's methodology score from 70 in 2014 to 30 in 2020.

Against this backdrop, the importance of overhauling our entire data regime cannot be overstated. Accurate data are the backbone of effective policy-making, whereas manipulated data can lead to disastrous consequences, as it has in our case. To address this problem, experts have made various recommendations including establishing an independent data commission to oversee the data evaluation processes; appointing seasoned statisticians to key positions in BBS instead of admin cadre officers; conducting regular external audits of official data to detect discrepancies; and implementing legal reforms to criminalise data manipulation. These steps have become essential to undo the damage done by the previous regime and put Bangladesh back on a path of progress.

Charting a new course

Political settlement and constitutional reform in post-autocratic Bangladesh

Faiz Ahmad Taiyeb
writes on sustainable development and is a public policy critic. He has several books to his credit, including 'Fourth Industrial Revolution and Bangladesh,' 'Bangladesh: Development Trajectory And Democracy Deficit,' and '50 Years of Bangladesh Economy.'

FAIZ AHMAD TAIYEB

Bangladesh stands at a critical juncture following the fall of Sheikh Hasina's regime, with renewed discussions on state reform and political settlement. The process of constitutional reform is crucial to re-establish democratic governance and stability. Currently, three schools of thought dominate the discourse: revolutionary constitution-building, standard constitutional reform coupled with a referendum, and reform based on Professor Mushtaq Khan's political settlement theory. Here, I would like to explore each approach in detail, highlighting their implications for Bangladesh's future.

Revolutionary constitution building

Revolutionary constitution building involves drafting a new constitution by the parties that led the revolutionary movement. This approach allows the architects of the revolution to embed fundamental changes that address systemic issues and rectify power imbalances. Advocates of this method argue that it can create a constitution that is truly reflective of the revolutionary ethos and aspirations of the populace.

Nevertheless, this approach is fraught with challenges. The exclusion of other political forces in the drafting process can lead to a lack of consensus and national unity. Moreover, the revolutionaries may lack experience in statecraft, leading to practical difficulties in governance. There is also the risk of replacing one form of autocracy with another, as the new constitution could entrench the power of the revolutionaries without adequate checks and balances.

Proponents argue that while constitutional change was not the initial target of the movement, the dire need for reform has emerged following mass killings and severe human rights abuses under the previous regime. These actions transformed the state into a one-party system, undermining democratic rights and stifling opposition through extra-judicial killings and enforced disappearances.

Given these circumstances, scholars supporting this school of thought contend that a revolutionary constitution is necessary to eradicate the old power structures and prevent a recurrence of such autocratic practices. This approach aims to embed new democratic values and frameworks reflective of the people's aspirations for a just and equitable society.

Standard constitutional reform with referendum

Standard constitutional reform involves amending the existing constitution through legal procedures and ratifying these changes through a public referendum. This process ensures that the populace has a direct say in the governance structures that affect their lives. Proponents argue that this method enhances the legitimacy of the government and ensures that reforms reflect the will of the people. Moreover, it allows for gradual change, which can maintain stability during the transition period.

However, this approach faces significant challenges. There is a risk that entrenched political interests may influence the reform process, potentially undermining the democratic aspirations of the population. Additionally, public opinion can be swayed by populist rhetoric, which may lead to decisions that do not necessarily reflect long-term national interests.

After the mass upheaval and the interim government's rise to power, the urgency for constitutional reform has intensified. Advocates argue that reforms validated through a referendum will have legitimacy and sustainability. This method emphasises the political process, highlighting the importance of political parties and the elite power nexus in adhering to new legal frameworks.

This school of thought stresses the necessity of integrating reforms across society and politics, ensuring that changes are not only top-down but also enjoy grassroots support. Political parties must pledge to implement these reforms as part of a broader political settlement, involving businessmen, bureaucrats, agencies, and civil society. This comprehensive approach aims to foster a participatory democratic process where students and labour groups can protest against misdeeds, keeping the political settlement open and accountable.

Reform based on the political settlement theory

Professor Mushtaq Khan's political settlement theory offers a different lens for constitutional reform. This theory emphasises the importance of acknowledging the distribution of power and interests among various groups in society. By considering the existing power dynamics, reforms can be more inclusive and pragmatic, potentially leading to greater political and economic stability.

Implementing this theory involves complex negotiations among different power holders, ensuring that reforms are inclusive and pragmatic. However, this approach faces resistance from dominant groups reluctant to cede power. Despite these challenges, Khan's theory provides a pathway to achieving a balanced and stable political settlement.

However, in the process of implementation, there are several questions to be raised and points to be considered.

When it comes to state reform versus political settlement through exercise of power, how can a well-crafted constitution mitigate the tendency of the current power structure in Bangladesh to foster dictatorial governance? Additionally, can a near-perfect constitution eliminate authoritarian rule, financial exploitation, and discrimination?

The power players in Bangladesh—politicians, businessmen, bureaucrats, and other influential power elites (partners in crime)—often operate beyond the bounds of existing laws and institutions. How can this concentration of power be disrupted, and what mechanisms can achieve a more equitable shift in power dynamics?

For organisational and institutional reform, firstly, the questions of what exactly constitutes an institution, according to theoretical frameworks, and how are institutions currently organised in Bangladesh must be addressed. Is there any institution at all, are not they mere organisations? What are the strengths and weaknesses of formal and informal institutions in Bangladesh, and how do they function within the broader institutional framework?

Given the monopolisation and inefficiency in various institutions such as the judiciary, public administration, and the Bangladesh Bank, how can a political settlement positively influence these institutions to enhance their effectiveness and reduce corruption?

Unlike a constitution, a political settlement is not a formal document. What practical foundations construct a political settlement? How does a political settlement impact policy design? What types of institutions are necessary to create effective policies that are free from the influence of powerful groups?

Lastly, political settlement should be linked with development. How can a political settlement contribute to political stability and economic development? What measures can be taken to accelerate development in Bangladesh? With Bangladesh experiencing jobless growth and a Gini coefficient of about 0.5, how can economic growth be balanced with efforts to reduce inequality? What strategies can be recommended to resolve the current economic crisis and restore both political and macroeconomic stability in Bangladesh?

I am inviting Bangladeshi intellectuals to navigate constitutional reforms, power balances, and inclusive development pathways through such questions.

A comparative analysis of these approaches reveals their respective strengths and weaknesses. Revolutionary constitution-building offers comprehensive change but risks exclusion and potential autocracy. Standard reform with a referendum provides legitimacy but may be susceptible to manipulation by entrenched interests. Khan's political settlement theory seeks a nuanced balance of power but is challenging to implement. A hybrid model that incorporates elements of each, engaging public participation, revolutionary ideals, and pragmatic power-sharing, could pave the way for a more inclusive, stable, and democratic Bangladesh.

What made the flood so severe

M Inamul Haque
is the former director general of River Research Institute.

M INAMUL HAQUE

In the case of the recent flooding, the precipitation centre that caused it is in Tripura. As a result, the areas surrounding Tripura are experiencing severe floods. Brahmanbaria is situated to the south of Tripura, while Moulvibazar and Habiganj are located to the east.

This situation has led to widespread flooding across these regions. The intense precipitation in Tripura has caused several rivers to overflow. Some rivers have flowed towards the south, some to the north, and others to the southeast, creating an unusual situation.

Rivers in Bangladesh typically flow from the north to the south towards the Bay of Bengal, but that is not always the case. For example, the Gomati River flows from the eastern side of Tripura, through the Dhalai district, passing between two mountain ranges. There is a dam on the first mountain range, where water is collected to produce electricity. Such reservoirs are also used as flood control mechanisms. In the event of heavy precipitation, the dam gates can be opened slowly to release some water, but this has a limit. When the water exceeds this limit, the dam overflows, leading to flooding.

However, the flooding is not solely due to the dam overflow. For instance, the Khowai River originates in Tripura, and there is a barrage at its mouth. There is also a barrage at the origin of the Gomti River. These barrages don't hold much water, so opening or closing them does not directly cause flooding. The flooding is more connected to the opening of gates at the Teesta River, which is connected to the Ganges and the Farakka Barrage. These barrages can hold a significant amount of water, and when they are opened, the heavy flow contributes to flooding downstream.

This time, the flooding was primarily caused by excess rainfall. The army, when mobilised with proper resources and coordination from the state, can play a crucial role in managing such disasters by providing logistical support, such as speed boats and other necessary equipment. However, the current government, being newly in power, may not be fully prepared to take immediate and decisive action. Instead, it is engaging in heavy rhetoric, often adopting an aggressive stance toward India, which is not the right approach.

The situation should be handled diplomatically, with a proper understanding of the hydrological dynamics of the Ganges, Teesta, and other rivers. A well-informed strategy is essential. The government should consider ratifying the United Nations Watercourses Convention of 1997, which has been pending in Bangladesh for a long time. This could be a significant step forward. The interim government's adviser on environment and water resources, Syeda Rizwana Hasan, has suggested taking the river sharing issue onto international platforms, but to do that, Bangladesh first needs to ratify the convention, as going to the UN without accepting the convention will not be effective. Some have alleged that the previous government did not accept the convention due to India's influence, but this government should not adopt the same stance.

> The situation should be handled diplomatically, with a proper understanding of the hydrological dynamics of the Ganges, Teesta, and other rivers. A well-informed strategy is essential. The government should consider ratifying the United Nations Watercourses Convention of 1997, which has been pending in Bangladesh for a long time.

As for our roles as ordinary citizens, first, we must refrain from panicking, as difficult as it may be. In situations like this, panicking can often cause further trouble. People who have their own families to look after should treat them as a first priority. Apart from that, individuals whose families are not dependent on them may engage in volunteering in the flood-affected areas, if they have a financial surplus or can collect funds for flood relief.

As for precautionary measures for future disasters, there isn't a lot to be done on an individual level. As flooding is a recurring natural event in Bangladesh, it is often difficult to avoid it completely.

In recent years, the number of young children who cannot swim has gone down significantly compared to the number from a few decades ago. Therefore, parents should take the initiative to teach their children how to swim, which is an essential life skill even without considering the floods. Being more proactive in learning how to swim, as well as teaching others, is something all of us can focus on.

On an institutional level, the Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief, as well as the Ministry of Youth and Sports, should utilise their resources to provide relief and support. The army has already assisted in rescue operations, which should inspire the relevant ministries to use their resources and use self-motivation to help in any way possible.

Even though the interim government is still in its early stages, they should guide the individual efforts by different groups of volunteers in conjecture with utilising the state apparatus. This can ensure that the flood-affected victims are getting the help that they need.

Bangladesh's path to principled governance is director of Water Diplomacy, professor of civil and environmental engineering and professor of Water Diplomacy at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University in the US.

Shafiqul Islam

SHAFIQUL ISLAM

The 2024 uprising and the regime's exit were dramatic. While the country has seen other uprisings in 1952, 1969, and 1990, each unique in its own way, the current situation is still evolving. It is too early to determine what lessons can or can't be learned from similar uprisings in Tunisia, Egypt, and Sudan. The question isn't just about drawing inspiration from these examples but understanding what will work in Bangladesh and why. Many ideas abound, but which ones will work in Bangladesh?

Diagnosing the problem

There is a deep and growing disconnect between the elites and the vast majority of Bangladeshis—a gap that has widened over the decades. But this divide isn't just economic or cultural; it's moral. The moral fabric of the nation has been ruptured, with integrity taking a backseat to self-interest and corruption.

This disconnect is perhaps best captured by the metaphor of the "sheeter pakhee"—a term often used to describe expatriates, who return to Bangladesh when it's convenient, much like snowbirds who migrate to warmer climates during winter. To those who live through the harsh realities year-round, western expatriates are seen as outsiders who swoop in and out, offering opinions and solutions without truly understanding the day-to-day struggles of the common people.

The "sheeter pakhee" metaphor also reflects the behaviour of many elites within Bangladesh who, much like the rich family in the film Parasite, have detached themselves from the realities of the common people, living in a bubble of privilege. These elites have often acted as parasites, thriving off the resources and labour of the masses while contributing little to the well-being of the broader society.

Many Bangladeshi elites have funnelled billions of hard-earned foreign currencies—earned primarily from the remittance of expatriate labourers and the sweat of ready-made garment workers—into securing their "second home" in a foreign land, whether it be in Dubai, the United States, Canada, or elsewhere. This parasitic relationship has only exacerbated the divide, creating a system where the few prosper at the expense of the many.

Ahmed Sofa, a revered Bangladeshi writer, highlighted this disconnect years ago, noting how the urban elites, who wield significant power, have become increasingly detached from the realities of the common people. These elites are more foreign in Bangladesh than foreigners or expats. This detachment has only grown as technology and social media have made the lifestyles of the elite more visible, amplifying the sense of injustice and inequality.

Over the years, this divide has become more pronounced. The elites have funnelled their looted wealth into securing foreign havens, while the common people have struggled to survive on meagre incomes. This isn't just about money; it's about the erosion of a shared national morality. As my late father often remarked, "The question isn't which elite can be bought, but at what price." This sentiment reflects a broader decline in values where almost anything—and anyone—can be bought.

Reflecting on this decline, it's important to remember where Bangladesh started. In 1976, a book titled Bangladesh: The Test Case of Development captured global attention. At that time, many feared Bangladesh wouldn't survive as an independent nation. Yet, after a famine, several military coups, catastrophic floods, and disastrous cyclones, Bangladesh not only survived but has prospered, defying the dire predictions of the 1970s.

So, how did Bangladesh transition from a "test case" to a model of development, ingenuity, and resilience? The answer lies in the collective spirit, adaptability, and resilience of its people—qualities that must now be harnessed to address the moral and institutional crises that threaten to undermine these hard-won gains. This moral decline has seeped into the very core of Bangladesh's institutions, leading to widespread cynicism and a loss of trust in those who are supposed to lead. The disconnect between the elite decision-makers and the common people is not just a symptom; it's a crisis.

Thesis-antithesis-synthesis

Imagine a new Bangladesh by first acknowledging the extent and impact of this disconnect. The prevailing thesis is that the problems stem from autocratic governance, while the emerging antithesis suggests that democracy will solve all issues. However, democracy isn't a cure-all. Aristotle recognised this dilemma thousands of years ago—democracies can become tools for the elites, oppressive to the common people.

There are broadly two types of democracies: 1) where foundational principles like the rule of law, popular sovereignty, and the separation of powers are upheld; and 2) where these ideals are abused. Bangladesh, despite 12 national elections, falls into the latter category. The 2024 uprising was a manifestation of the people's frustration with a system that served the elites.

Even the first type of democracy is not without its flaws. Take the United States, for example, where basic rights are more or less secured, but the democratic process is heavily influenced by elite interests. Lobbyists wield significant power, and incumbents enjoy an overwhelming advantage, with re-election rates often exceeding 90 percent. This raises questions about how much power truly resides with the people.

What can Bangladesh learn from other recent uprisings? For example, what happened in Tunisia between 2011 and 2024, why the Islamic Brotherhood in Egypt only stayed in power for 300 days after overwhelmingly winning a fair election, and why a massive popular uprising in 2018 in Sudan led to a brutal civil war?

By carefully examining examples of the two types of democracies in other countries and focusing on actionable, context-specific strategies, Bangladesh can synthesise a governance model that works for its people—Boishamma Birodhee Jonogan (BBJ)—a regime that upholds equity, inclusion, and justice while remaining pragmatic in its implementation. This is where the idea of principled pragmatism comes into play. The BBJ model must be rooted in core principles like fairness and justice, but it should also be adaptable. This approach requires flexibility in applying principles to real-world situations, ensuring that interventions are not only ideal in theory but also viable in practice.

Two actionable ideas

With BBJ, it is crucial to question both the thesis of autocracy and the antithesis of democracy, and instead, imagine a synthesis that mirrors President Lincoln's ideal of a government "of the people, by the people, for the people."

Assuming unbridled corruption and a compromised judiciary as two of the most pressing issues, two actionable ideas can be suggested. First, a community protection platform could incorporate the principles of an ombudsman. An independent and empowered Office of Ombudsman can play a pivotal role in curbing corruption. For instance, in Tanzania, the Prevention and Combating of Corruption Bureau has made significant strides in reducing corruption. Similarly, the Philippines' ombudsman has been instrumental in holding public officials accountable, with the office being responsible for the prosecution of several high-profile corruption cases. In Bangladesh, such a platform could not only serve as a watchdog but also actively engage citizens in reporting corrupt practices.

Second, the judiciary in Bangladesh must be strengthened to ensure its independence, transparency, and accountability. The judiciary needs to be independent from and accountable to the other branches of government. For example, in South Africa, the Constitutional Court has played a crucial role in safeguarding democracy by making landmark decisions that uphold the constitution, even against the wishes of powerful political figures. In Bangladesh, judicial reforms may focus on: a) introducing a more transparent and merit-based judicial appointment process, similar to the Senate confirmation process in the US; b) developing mechanisms for greater transparency in judicial proceedings, such as publishing court decisions, detailed opinions including majority, and dissenting opinions; and c) providing a clear mandate to the judiciary to prevent it from being co-opted by political parties.

In designing and implementing these reforms, the BBJ needs to recognise that any reform will require creative thinking and the fallibility to admit that many initial interventions may not work as anticipated. This means being flexible to adapt to changing circumstances and learning by doing to continuously improve processes and mechanism that serve the interests of all citizens. I invite all to suggest actionable ideas, using real-world examples, on how best to initiate a systemic reform in Bangladesh with trackable and measurable impacts. With collective input and wisdom, at this opportune time, it is possible to create a BBJ Manifesto of governance that is neither autocratic nor democratic but a synthesis of both. Such a synthesis must focus on crafting and safeguarding institutions that are independent, principled, and pragmatic.

Banking sector issues that the new governor should address is professor, Department of Banking and Insurance, University of Dhaka. He can be reached at mainuddin@du.ac.bd

Md Main Uddin, PhD

MD MAIN UDDIN

The economy of Bangladesh is heavily dependent on the banking sector as 86 percent of financial intermediation is conducted through banks. But this reliance has led to many problems for the economy in general and the banking sector in particular. Commercial banks typically provide small and short-term loans to a wide range of borrowers. By offering small loans to many borrowers, banks can build a well-diversified portfolio, which is crucial for minimising risk. A short-term loan with high turnover rate can be issued multiple times a year, increasing profit. However, instead of granting small loans, our banks tend to prioritise large loans, which they are able to do within the legal framework.

A large loan is defined as one that constitutes at least 10 percent of a bank's capital. A bank can sanction a loan of up to 25 percent of its capital to finance power sector projects. Within this framework, just four such borrowers could take up all of the bank's capital. If these borrowers default, the bank would become insolvent.

A bank can grant a borrower 15 percent of its capital as funded loans, which require immediate disbursement, and 20 percent as non-funded loans, which require delayed disbursement. As such, a borrower can get a loan of up to 35 percent of the bank's capital. In such a scenario, only three borrowers can deplete the bank's entire capital. In case of export financing, a borrower can receive a loan of up to 50 percent of the bank's capital, with the funded exposure not exceeding 15 percent of the bank's capital. In this case, only two borrowers could consume the bank's capital. When banks issue large loans, they fail to build a diversified investment portfolio, leading to an imbalance between risk and return.

The availability of large loans hinders the growth of our stock market. Banks are involved in indirect finance, where they collect funds from depositors and lend them to borrowers. Borrowing from banks is easier because borrowers are accountable to banks, not to the depositors. In contrast, stock markets are involved in direct finance where borrowers have to obtain funds directly from the suppliers of capital. Here, borrowing firms have to win over suppliers of funds through their performance, ultimately reflected in their share prices. In an efficient market, it is very difficult for less creditworthy borrowers to raise funds. However, due to our banking sector being plagued by ill-governance, less creditworthy borrowers—with political connections—can easily convince banks to grant loans.

When banks provide long-term loans from their short-term deposits, it imposes major risks on their depositors. Granting large loans goes against the basic principle of bank lending, as it creates maturity mismatch wherein depositors' claims to the bank mature earlier than banks' claims to borrowers. This can lead to liquidity problems, making it difficult for banks to honour customers' cheques. Large loans are also more likely to default. In contrast, small loans contribute significantly to the economy by reducing income inequality between the rich and the poor, and the default rate for small loans is low. Therefore, every bank should allocate a certain percentage of its funds for small loans.

Restrictions should be placed on single-borrower exposure and large loans from banks. As a result, large borrowers will turn to the stock market—and policymakers will be more diligent in developing this market from its precarious condition.

Bangladesh Bank (BB) regularly discloses non-performing loans (NPLs)—the latest reported amount is Tk 1,82,295 crore, compared to just Tk 22,481 crore in 2009. However, there is always doubt about the accuracy of its reported NPL figures. A true picture of distressed assets should include not only NPLs but also write-off loans, rescheduled loans, and loans stuck in courts. This would provide a more accurate assessment of the banking sector's asset quality. The NPL rate of 10.11 percent in 2023, as reported by BB, would increase to roughly 30 percent if all distressed assets were considered. In an attempt to reduce the ever-growing NPLs, the central bank has frequently changed loan classification rules, deviating from international standards. Despite these efforts, the usual growth of NPLs has not been curbed.

When a loan becomes non-performing, BB permits loan rescheduling where a loan is renewed or extended under circumstances that are beyond the control of the borrower. The rescheduling is allowed a maximum of three times, examining the causes for the loan's non-performance. The down payment for rescheduling ranges between 10 and 30 percent of the outstanding loan and the time limit never exceeds three years.

For the past decade, loan rescheduling has been permitted by breaking existing rules. Moreover, in 2015, a loan restructuring facility was provided to 15 large borrowers with loans of Tk 500 crore and above, upon receiving a down payment of only 2 percent of the outstanding loan amount. The loan terms were extended to 10 years.

There are huge political repercussions when NPLs rise. While there is less fuss about write-off loans, a write-off loan represents the worst state of NPLs. The amount of write-off loans stood at Tk 51,560 crore in 2023, up from Tk 15,300 crore in 2009. BB also relaxed the rules for loan write-off. Earlier, to write a loan off, it needed to remain unpaid for five years, a 100-percent provision needed to be maintained, and a case was required to be filed against the borrower. Later, the unpaid period of an NPL was reduced from five to three years, allowing banks to quickly remove their worst loans from the balance sheet.

If BB wants to reduce NPLs, the nexus between business and politics must be broken so that politically connected individuals cannot intentionally default on loans. Good governance and adequate legal infrastructure—relevant laws, courts and impartial judges—need to be established. Borrowers have to be evaluated properly before loan sanctioning. Rules for loan rescheduling, restructuring and write-off must be strictly enforced.

According to the Basel Accords, banks in Bangladesh need to maintain a minimum capital of 12.5 percent of risk-weighted assets. Some banks consistently face capital deficit. Data shows that the capital shortfall of 10 private and public banks in the country reached Tk 39,655 crore in 2023.The capital base of our banks is also relatively low because of high NPLs and low reinvestment of profits. Bank owners are more interested in taking profits as dividends rather than reinvesting them as retained earnings.

There is also continuous capital flight from rural to urban areas. Data shows that even though rural areas supplied nearly 13 percent of deposits in 2010, they obtained only 8 percent of advances. The supply of deposits by rural people increased to 21 percent in 2023, but they received only 12 percent of advances—a capital flight of 9 percentage points to urban areas. The misuse of loans by wilful defaulters in urban areas poses a threat to rural depositors. To address this, more opportunities for using loans in rural areas should be created.

The overall expenditure management of banks is still not efficient. Data indicates that the expenditure-income ratio was around 99 percent on average between 1991 and 2000. It declined considerably to 73 percent in 2010 before increasing to 81 percent in 2023. These high ratios may be attributed to high staff salaries, provision for default loans, and high corporate tax rates. The elevated expenditure should be controlled as it is offset mainly against low pay to depositors.

Despite the large number of banks in our country, many people are still outside the banking network. This is a contradiction. The rural poor are less interested in maintaining bank accounts, while the urban poor keep their money in semi-formal and informal repositories. So, should we reduce the number of banks through merger and acquisition? Once the number of banks is reduced, it might be beneficial to increase their branches to spread services to remote areas and take advantage of economies of scale. These decisions should be made prudently.

NAYAKRAJ RAZZAK

A new man in the 1960s

MOHAMMAD AFZALUR RAHMAN

> While the elite group relished the cosmopolitanism of the Ayub regime, on the other end were the grim and emaciated masses—workers, porters, peasants, and rickshaw pullers with bidis tucked behind their ears, street urchins staring into the glass windows of toy stores, and angry, impoverished students with little hope for jobs and a better future. In this situation, seeing a young man in his early twenties like Razzak—jolly, full of life, and pleasant—was definitely refreshing.

In the often-treacherous world of showbiz, there is always "something else" beyond mere skill, charisma, and looks that contributes to stardom. A hero is unique, irreplaceable, and reigns until the time of another hero arrives. A hero representing a specific era in film often signals something new, marking the arrival of his time and distinguishing him from the hero of the previous generation. The identifiable traits in a star usually cannot be replaced by those of another, as in a Fordist-Taylorist model of enforced standardized methods. Therefore, there is an element of irreplaceability in a star.

Irving A. Thalberg, Hollywood's "boy wonder" producer, saw this in stars. He famously said that in movies, more than anything else, the actor is "the thing." If Thalberg is one of the founders of what André Bazin called the "genius of the system," there is another strand of filmmaking. François Truffaut learned from Jean Renoir that the actor portraying a character is more important than the character itself.

Representative film stars, particularly those who play leading roles, frequently embody larger-than-life or deeply relatable characters on screen, so these portrayals and the presence of the stars allow us to explore the historical contexts in which such heroes became possible.

Nayakraj Razzak (January 23, 1942 - August 21, 2017)

Razzak, who earned the honorific title of Nayakraj, meaning "the king of heroes," is widely recognized as the most famous and successful movie star in the Bangladeshi film industry. By the mid-1960s, his presence loomed large on the silver screen of Bengali cinema in East Pakistan, and it never "got small." Over a career spanning more than half a century, in addition to immense cinematic success, Razzak achieved the status of a cultural icon. What kind of hero was Razzak, considering his arrival, rise, and elevation to prominence coincided with a time when the political and cultural life of Pakistan's eastern province was undergoing unprecedented changes? Razzak's significance is related to and needs to be understood in the context of the time when the political and cultural realities of East Pakistan were presenting new possibilities.

A scene from Behula

> Razzak's life itself tells the story of a tumultuous and fascinating time when national identity, belonging, and prospects were in flux.

After a period of struggle and uncertainty upon arriving in East Pakistan as a refugee from West Bengal, Razzak's first major cinematic break came with Behula. Based on the Mangal-Kavya and directed by Zaheer Raihan, this movie is one of the most significant cinematic creations in East Bengal. Razzak's entry in the film was not marked by the typical dazzling, low-angle shot often reserved for heroes. His entrance was rather natural and spontaneous. As Lakhindor, the beloved youngest and only surviving son of the wealthy merchant Chand Saudagar, Razzak walks into the frame unwittingly and, without much care, enters the realm ruled by the snake-goddess Manasa Devi, carrying a peacock—an animal that the deity views as an arch-enemy.

Behula was an instant blockbuster. In this movie, Razzak as Lakhindor is cursed by the snake goddess Manasa due to her wrath against his father. From halfway through the film, Razzak had to portray a dead character whose body is taken to heaven by his wife, Behula. Yet the audience felt deep sympathy for this character and discovered the star they had longed for. Rafiuddin Babu, the writer of the only biography available on Razzak, has rightly said, "From the cursed Lakhindor, there occurred his radiant rise." It was a significant film not only for Razzak's career but also for revitalising Bengali cinema. The success of Behula, much like Rupban, released a year earlier, helped sustain Bengali cinema and played a crucial role in rekindling Bengali cultural nationalism. Coincidentally, both the famous Six-Point Demands and Behula appeared in the same year—1966.

Bengali film enthusiasts had been trying to establish a film industry in East Bengal since the early 1950s. From the mid-1950s to 1962, most of the films produced in East Bengal were Bengali. However, during the heyday of Ayub Khan's rule, many Bengali film producers turned to making Urdu films, as Bengali cinema faced hostility from the government, both in terms of opportunities and censorship. For instance, in 1963, there were sixteen films under production in East Pakistan, but only three were in Bengali.

At this juncture, Zaheer Raihan and Salahuddin turned the tide for Bengali cinema by deciding to make folk-fantasy genre films. It seems that while Bengali filmmakers were struggling, they figured out that films based on folklore and legends lent an element of originality and authenticity, making them distinct from others' stories. Hegel identified legends, ballads, and traditions as fugitive, shadowy elements, and poetic expressions belonging to a nation's half-awakened state. Perhaps these "dim and hazy forms" have a profound connection to the people's psyche, which explains Behula's success. Equally significant was the role played by Razzak. Filmmakers and movie lovers discovered in Razzak a hero they could capitalise on and relate to. Zaheer Raihan understood this, which is why he was adamant about casting Razzak, despite reservations from many.

Razzak may not have been the most manly actor in the traditional sense, nor even the best in terms of acting skill. When he arrived in Dhaka, the film scene was not empty—there were already good actors who had a certain degree of acceptance in romantic, tragic, or social hero roles. Yet, at a time when Bengali cinema was struggling to carve out a niche in East Pakistan, Razzak brought a unique affective quality to the screen that resonated with the masses. All the established stars before him were involved in both Bengali and Urdu films. Razzak was the first star who concentrated solely on Bengali films.

Razzak's immense popularity among the masses and the high demand from filmmakers can be gauged by the fact that between Behula in 1966 and 1970, he was cast in nearly 45 leading roles, with almost all of them being commercially successful. By 1972, he had completed his 100th film—a testament to his popularity and inevitability in the industry.

It is true that Razzak was, on the surface, modelled after other heroes of the subcontinent, most notably Uttam Kumar. Directors likely cast him with the image of those heroes in mind, seeing a resemblance or shadow of them in Razzak. Even his fans and cinema-goers noticed similarities between Razzak and these established movie stars. However, despite the outer resemblance to other stars, the characters he portrayed—righteous youngest sons, unemployed youths, writers, and protesting students—brought originality and authenticity to his roles, shaped by the specific historical and sociological context of the time.

To understand what Razzak brought to the screen, we need to look at 1960s East Pakistan. The 1960s in East Pakistan were marked by stark contrasts, despite Ayub Khan's well-publicised narrative of development and progress. Signs of modernisation and the availability of modern amenities were evident. However, only a select few could bask in the affluence generated by the military-bureaucratic dictatorship—primarily upper-echelon government employees, a few businessmen, and successful professionals like doctors and university professors.

While the elite group relished the cosmopolitanism of the Ayub regime, on the other end were the grim and emaciated masses—workers, porters, peasants, and rickshaw pullers with bidis tucked behind their ears, street urchins staring into the glass windows of toy stores, and angry, impoverished students with little hope for jobs and a better future. In this situation, seeing a young man in his early twenties like Razzak—jolly, full of life, and pleasant—was definitely refreshing.

A star represents social reality and thus reflects the desires of the people. When we see Razzak in the films of the 1960s, it's impossible not to notice his fresh and jovial presence. We see him coming back from university, dancing and singing to "Neel Aakasher Niche Ami Rasta Cholechi Eka." He is going out with Kabori, Sujata, or Shabnam on romantic and amatory adventures in the Garden of Ramna, on a boat on the river, or in a popular couple's spot on the outskirts of Dhaka. Razzak exudes a sense of newness. He often arrives late to a rendezvous, playfully coaxing and cajoling his sweetheart for making her wait. The song of persuasion and flattery by a prospective lover, "Aynate Oi Mukh Dekhbe Jakhon," or the beautifully poetic and romantic song of courtship, "Tumi Je Amar Kobita," embody something new for the audience. These culturally and aesthetically significant songs encapsulate this new spirit and possibility.

Poster of Jiban Theke Neya

Poster of Behula

What I want to convey about Razzak's acceptance becomes more tangible in Jibon Theke Newa, another Zaheer Raihan film that stands as the most significant cinematic creation in the history of Bangladeshi cinema. This powerful political film was set against the backdrop of the mass movements of 1969 and was released in 1971. Razzak, as part of an ensemble cast, plays one of the main characters—a student leader living under the oppressive rule of his autocratic sister, who governs the household with an iron fist, much like Ayub Khan ruled the country. The film was an allegory for the military dictatorship of Ayub.

Although Razzak's character is crucial to the movie, he has less screen time than some of the other key characters. Yet, the way his character is portrayed is both distinctive and indicative of something new. He first appears during the Prabhat Pherry on February 21st, singing the anthem of the language movement. Throughout the film, he is rarely seen inside the house. Instead, he is always outside—at the Shaheed Minar, at Curzon Hall, or leading protests with fellow students, workers, and peasants. When he returns home from the Prabhat Pherry, barefoot, he enters without tiptoeing. When his domineering sister scolds him for being out and threatens to end his education, he barely pays attention. Unlike others in the family, Razzak's character is distinctively defiant, shrugging off the house's prescribed strict rules and norms.

His character in Jibon Theke Newa embodies the spirit that poet Shamsur Rahman eloquently wrote about in his poem, where the grandfather, astonished, wonders, "Who is it that frequents this old house?" He is like the character Rahman cast from the resounding streets of 1969—the teenagers, full of life, who ignored the cautionary tales of their elders, rolled up their shirt sleeves, and swiftly joined the unadulterated exultation of the endless processions. It is worth noting that in 1971, much like his movie character, Razzak took to the streets to protest against the military dictators of Pakistan.

If we are to use the hackneyed but relevant phrase that social change is first reflected in the arts, then it can be said that Razzak, as a star, was contemporaneous with—or even a progenitor of—the youths who would soon participate in mass movements and the liberation war. If workers, students, writers, and intellectuals were agents of the changing sixties, so too was Razzak through the more popular medium of cinema. We cannot downplay the political and cultural significance of the popular cultural expressions embodied in the characters Razzak portrayed in his movies during the sixties.

Razzak's life itself tells the story of a tumultuous and fascinating time when national identity, belonging, and prospects were in flux. Born in 1942 into a well-to-do Muslim family in the predominantly Hindu neighbourhood of Naktala in Kolkata, he lost both parents at a young age. This void was filled by the care of his elder siblings and the avuncular love of his neighbours, both Hindu and Muslim. As a lively and energetic adolescent, Razzak was a natural choice for school sports, recitations, and annual plays.

Before long, it was acting that captivated him the most, fuelled by the vibrant theatre and cultural activities in his neighbourhood. Razzak often recalled with pride that cultural luminaries like Chhabi Biswas, Sabitri Chatterjee, Manju Dey, and Ravi Bhattacharya lived in his para. He reminisced that the theatre and cultural milieu of his locality ignited his passion for acting. Not only did he observe these figures, but he also had the opportunity to learn from them. He fondly remembered that after his first school theatre performance, where Chhabi Biswas was the guest of honour, Biswas gently admonished him for turning his back on the audience while on stage. For some time thereafter, Razzak learned recitation and acting techniques from Chhabi Biswas.

Although it was his school teacher who introduced him to the world of theatre and acting, it was Piyush Bose, the founder and director of Rangasabha, who became his true mentor in the art of acting. Once Razzak became involved in theatre activities, it wasn't long before he fell in love with the craft, making acting his passion. The enchanting world of performance, which would later bring him fame, may have also provided refuge for the orphaned Razzak. In a television interview, he shared that during his adolescent and early adult years, acting was all he could think about. He spent countless days and nights rehearsing, honing his craft with unwavering dedication.

It was with Piyush Bose that Razzak first visited the film studios in Kolkata's Tollygunge, where he met his screen idol and the iconic star of the time, Uttam Kumar. These visits sparked in Razzak the dream of becoming a movie star. In the meantime, he once fled to Mumbai, where he completed a nine-month course to hone his acting skills.

In Satyajit Ray's Nayak, the protagonist Arindam Mukherjee's theatre guru, Shankar Da, warns his talented disciple about the lures and traps of the dazzling but hollow life of the film industry. "You will become a puppet in the hands of the director," he cautions. Shankar Da, a stern moralist, is convinced of the pure and high art of the theatre world, contrasting it with the money, corruption, and treachery of the film industry. Unlike the Shankar Da of real life, Razzak's real-life Shankar Da, Piyush Bose, took the middle path. While deeply invested in theatre, Piyush Bose was also involved in filmmaking. He cast Razzak in a few minor and uncredited film roles. He wanted his disciple to be successful, but at the same time, he seemed acutely aware of the challenges a Bengali Muslim youth would face in the Kolkata film industry, which was already saturated with established and talented actors.

As Razzak struggled to find opportunities in Tollygunge, Piyush Bose suggested that he try his luck in East Pakistan, a burgeoning film industry. Bose introduced him to several members of the East Pakistani film fraternity who frequented Kolkata for film-related work. Anyone familiar with the post-partition social and cultural realities of East and West Bengal would understand the implications of Bose's advice. In a Muslim-majority country, it would likely be easier for a Muslim youth like Razzak to succeed as an actor. Given the political and cultural milieu of the time, such advice from experienced individuals to the younger generation was common, considered pragmatic, and offered in good faith.

However, to Razzak, despite East Pakistan being just across the border, it seemed like a far and wild country. Naturally, the glittering film studios of Kolkata or Mumbai were far more enchanting to him than the unknown prospects in East Pakistan.

In interviews and autobiographical essays, Razzak often reflected on his upbringing in a predominantly Hindu neighborhood, emphasising that he never experienced any discrimination nor harboured ill feelings towards Hindus. He was everyone's favourite "Raja." However, in an autobiographical essay published in Bichitra in 1992, he did hint at noticing a Hindu-Muslim divide within the film industry.

Razzak's decision to migrate to East Pakistan after the riots of 1964 mirrors the experiences of many others who were heartbroken, saddened, and deeply affected by witnessing how long-familiar communities could turn hostile during communal riots. Initially, Razzak planned to move to Mumbai, the heart of India's film industry. However, Piyush Bose convinced him otherwise, noting that Mumbai was already overcrowded and that Bengalis were not faring particularly well there. Consequently, Razzak arrived in East Pakistan as a refugee at a time when many were moving in the opposite direction—from East Pakistan to West Bengal.

As a young boy, Razzak regularly acted in Salil Sen's immensely popular partition-based play Notun Ihudi, which was staged in major theatres across Kolkata as well as in various neighbourhoods. Razzak gained popularity and praise for his portrayal of Mohan, the youngest child of an East Bengali Hindu refugee family in Kolkata, who struggles to help his family survive in the cruel post-1947 days. It is both interesting and ironic that, to some extent, Razzak played the role of Mohan in real life as well.

In the aftermath of Partition, many artists migrated from one country to another. While they left behind their birthplace and familiar surroundings, they also played a pivotal role in rebuilding the new societies they arrived in, which were often scarred by division and bitterness. Against this backdrop of loss, these artists made immense contributions to the process of recovery by creating beauty through their art. We often overlook this aspect of the subcontinent's history. Even as these artists enriched their adopted countries, their personal views of leaving behind home remained untainted. Over time, they became loved and accepted by all, transcending borders and divisions. Razzak is a shining example of this group of artists.

TIGERS ROAR

- Bangladesh's 10-wicket in Rawalpindi yesterday is the Tigers' first Test win in 14 overall meetings against Pakistan. The Tigers drew one in 13 before this contest.
- This is the first time that Bangladesh won a game against Pakistan in Pakistan in 21 matches across formats.
- The win also saw Bangladesh jump from eighth to sixth position in the World Test Championship points table.
- Bangladesh have now won against nine Test-playing nations. Only India and South Africa remain unbeaten against the Tigers.
- Pakistan have suffered a 10-wicket loss at home for the very first time in Tests.
- Pakistan were bundled out for 146 in the third innings -- their lowest team total against Bangladesh in Tests.
- Bangladesh's first innings total of 565 is now the highest for the Tigers in a winning cause.
- Shakib Al Hasan is now the most successful left-arm spinner in cricket's hostory with 707 wickets, surpassing New Zealand's Daniel Vettori who has 705.
- Mushfiqur Rahim, who was adjudged player of the match for his 191-run knock, has now won seven POTMs -- most by a Bangladeshi player.

Bangladesh players, all 16 in the two-match Test series against Pakistan, were in a jubilant mood at the dressing room following their historic 10-wicket victory against Pakistan on the fifth day of the first Test at the Rawalpindi Cricket Stadium yesterday.

Bangladesh's Tiger-like HUNT IN PINDI

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

For years, the moniker of 'The Tigers' has been a point of derision for the Bangladesh cricket team.

Online trolls have pounced on every opportunity to mock the Bangladesh team by using this nickname, scoffing at the players by calling them plastic Tigers and in some cases 'Toygers'.

The underlying theme of all of these mockeries is the same – the trolls draw attention to the irony of calling Bangladesh, a team that often falls short against top opponents, 'The Tigers', one of the deadliest predators on planet earth.

However, the presumed deadliness of tigers is often exaggerated. In reality, tigers are far from the most efficient predators in the wild. The success rate of Bengal Tigers is estimated to be around 10-20 percent, making them in a sense an apt symbol for the Bangladesh cricket team, especially in Tests.

Across three formats, Bangladesh's average win percentage is 32.67 percent, but in Tests, the percentage comes down to 13.98 percent, inside the success range of the Bengal Tigers.

And much like how a successful hunt of a tiger is no less than a spectacle, when Bangladesh finally manage to win a Test match after many unsuccessful attempts, it becomes a sight for sore eyes.

On Sunday at the Rawalpindi Cricket Stadium, the Najmul Hossain Shanto-led Bangladesh side presented one such spectacle when they defeated Pakistan in a Test match for the very first time.

And, in a sense, the 10-wicket win in Rawalpindi was not too different from how tigers hunt in the wild.

A tiger stealthily closes in before cinching its incisors on the neck of its prey, and Bangladesh did something similar, making slow progress for four days before going for the kill on Day 5.

After winning the toss, the pacers did their job on the rain-hit opening day, reducing Pakistan to 21-3 at one point.

The Pakistan batters fought back on Day two on the placid surface but Bangladesh ended the day with the satisfaction of foiling Pakistan's plan of taking wickets late in the day.

The third and fourth day saw Mushfiqur Rahim script his epic 191, and four other batters stepping up with half-centuries to power Bangladesh to a first innings lead of 117.

Heading into the final day, Bangladesh had their noses slightly ahead in the contest, however, the likeliest conclusion was still a draw.

But the match suddenly sprung into life in the morning of Day five when, like hungry predators, the Bangladesh bowlers pounced on the Pakistan batters.

Aided by the fifth day wicket and by some careless shot-making from the Pakistanis, the Bangladesh attack, led by spinners Mehedi Hasan Miraz and Shakib Al Hasan, bundled out Pakistan for 146, setting up a 30-run target which the batters chased without breaking a sweat. After 13 unsuccessful attempts, Bangladesh finally managed to triumph over Pakistan in Tests. However, if Bangladesh want to at least match a tigers' hunting success rate in Tests against Pakistan, they will have to win the next match and sweep the series 2-0.

> Inzamam [Ul Haq] was extraordinary and a few umpiring decisions did not go our way. It was bad luck overall. It bothered us for quite a while. Everything could've been different if we won. I think this win could be the start of a new dawn for Bangladesh in Tests because winning away from home, especially against Pakistan in Pakistan is a big thing. We don't play well consistently in Tests; it can be a start.
> Alok Kapali

> I've been asked a lot whether I've been able to forget the sorrow of the Multan Test. To that, I say no. That was a special Test. We were in the first three years of our Test status. But I am proud of this victory. Our team beat Pakistan by dominating them. We've won a thrilling Test. Nothing drastic happened with the pitch, apart from the Shaheen [Shah Afridi] dismissal. We must be proud of the bowling on the fifth day.

Shanto lauds Shakib's 'unique' way of turning things around

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto lauded the team effort in Rawalpindi following a 10-wicket win -- the very first Test win in Pakistan – and signified the effort the players put during preparations.

The birthday boy lauded special performances such as Mushfiqur Rahim's 191, Mehedi Hasan Miraz's four-wicket haul and a three-for from Shakib Al Hasan.

"Really special moment for us and we are really happy because of the way everyone showed their character in these hot conditions. The way we practised over the last 15 days, did all the right things off the field are why we got the results.

"Obviously it was a team effort. Mushfiq bhai's innings was outstanding and it helped our team go forward but overall if you see the match and our batting and bowling and fielding, it was a team effort," Shanto said when focus was drawn to Mushfiqur's knock, Mehedi Hasan Miraz's spells and the pacers' grit.

What Shakib attained, though, was true to his cricketing spirits, fit for a legend. Accused in a murder case back home, criticisms of his performances getting more vocal, Shakib overcame his personal situation and pulled out a special performance.

Bangladesh's team selection had put faith on their spinners and the spinners finally came into play on Day 5. Shakib bowled 16 overs on the trot between morning and tea sessions: his variations, mind games all being employed to pacify Pakistan's resistance. He brought his flight and trajectory into play to bag both Saud Shakeel and Abdullah Shafique, arguably the backbone of the Pakistan batting.

A spin web in conjunction with Miraz saw the duo pick up seven wickets together, with Miraz bagging four for 21 and Shakib getting three for 44.

Shanto was asked about Shakib's mentality, which helps him turn things around. Shanto said it was what the team expected.

"When he [Shakib] takes the field to represent the country, from what I understand, he is very dedicated as a person. He does everything that's required to win. He pushes aside everything in his personal life to one side to think and focus on what he can do for the team, what he can do to help a junior cricketer and things like that," Shanto said.

"Doing these sorts of things in a unique way to be in a situation like that and still being able to bring out a performance like that and to give his inputs, especially in bowling, is outstanding. This is what we expect from him and hopefully in the next game we are expecting something even better," he added on Shakib.

SAFF U-20 CHAMPIONSHIP

Bangladesh face strong India in semis

SPORTS REPORTER

Hoping to bounce back from their defeat against Nepal in their final group match a couple of days ago, Bangladesh will be taking on tournament favourites India in the second semifinal of the SAFF U-20 Championship at the ANFA Complex in Lalitpur, Nepal today.

The match will kick off at 3:15 pm (Bangladesh Time), with the winners playing hosts Nepal, who yesterday beat Bhutan 4-1 in a shootout following a 1-1 draw in regulation time, in the final on August 28.

Before leaving for Nepal, Bangladesh coach and players vowed to play the final and win the regional youth championship in which they finished runners-up three times out of five editions.

However, getting to the final now seems to be an uphill task, especially since the way Bangladesh played in their 2-1 defeat against Nepal. In that game, a fumble from captain and goalkeeper Mehedi Hasan Srabon saw Nepal score the opener and then extend the lead just minutes later. Bangladesh did manage to pull a goal back that was not enough.

Since that defeat, Bangladesh coach Maruful Haque held a few mental-recovery and tactical sessions to boost the players.

According to Maruful, Bangladesh can make it into the final if they go into the match hungry for a positive outcome.

"The players showed their dedication, hard work, and effort in the last two days and they have really been hungry for victory," said Maruful.

"If they can take this hunger into the match against India, I believe we can move into the final If the boys can start the match with the mentality of bouncing back, then we hope we can advance to the final," Maruful added.

Captain Srabon also sounded optimistic.

"If we can play in line with the tactic of the coach, we can hope to leave the ground with a positive result," said Srabon, adding that the players must stick to the plan and not get driven by their emotion.

Bangladesh have won only twice against India, losing thrice and drawing twice in the eight matches they played in the previous five editions.

Djokovic eyes Slam record

AFP, New York

Novak Djokovic, fueled by an emotional Olympic triumph, has new Grand Slam records in his sights at the US Open, where title rival Jannik Sinner hopes to shake off a doping controversy.

Defending champion Djokovic can become the oldest Open era champion at the tournament if he secures a fifth title, a record he would share with Jimmy Connors, Pete Sampras and Roger Federer.

The 37-year-old would also move to 25 Grand Slam triumphs, taking him clear of the 24 he currently shares with Margaret Court.

The final Grand Slam of the year comes at a critical time for Djokovic. This year he was succeeded as Australian Open champion by Sinner who also relieved him of his world number one ranking.

Carlos Alcaraz took his French Open title with the Spanish crowd-pleaser then sweeping Djokovic off court in a one-sided Wimbledon final.

However, Djokovic, returned to the clay courts of Roland Garros to stun Alcaraz in the Olympic final.

Sinner, meanwhile, arrives after an emotionally draining doping investigation, in which he escaped a lengthy ban after officials accepted his explanation that the banned substance entered his system as a result of contamination from a support team member.

The 23-year-old Italian had twice tested positive for clostebol, a banned anabolic agent, back in March. The International Tennis Integrity Agency announced this week he had been cleared of wrongdoing -- a day after he won the Cincinnati Masters.

"I'm just happy that it's finally out," said Sinner, who fired his physiotherapist and trainer in the wake of the affair.

Alcaraz, who won his first major at the US Open in 2022, was badly bruised by his defeat to Djokovic in the Olympic final.

He lost his cool in a second-round exit at Cincinnati and tweaked an ankle in practice at Flushing Meadows, but insisted he'd be "100 percent" for his first-round match on Tuesday.

Defending women's champion Coco Gauff has endured a worrying dip in form in recent weeks, raising doubts over whether she could become the first woman since Serena Williams in 2014 to successfully defend her US Open crown.

A stormy third-round exit from the Olympics was followed by early defeats in Toronto and Cincinnati.

Five-time major winner and world number one Iga Swiatek, the 2022 champion, made the Cincinnati semi-finals where she was defeated by Aryna Sabalenka.

Sabalenka, the Australian Open champion and runner-up to Gauff in New York last year, is another contender in a wide-open field that also features Wimbledon winner Barbora Krejcikova and Olympic gold medallist Zheng Qinwen.

Now Social Islami Bank freed from S Alam Group

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

After Islami Bank, S Alam Group's control over Social Islami Bank ended yesterday after the Bangladesh Bank decided to dissolve the board of the Shariah-based bank that was heavily dominated by individuals linked to the conglomerate.

The central bank dissolved the previous 11-member board, whose chairman Belal Ahmed is the son-in-law of S Alam Group chairman Mohammad Saiful Alam. Five more relatives of Alam including his sister Badrun Nessa Alam and nephew Mahmudul Alam were on the board of SIBL.

The Bangladesh Bank also constituted a five-member board including Rezaul Haque, a sponsor-director of the bank.

The other directors are Maqsuda Begum, former BB executive director; M Sadiqul Islam, professor at the department of finance at the University of Dhaka; Md Morshed Alam Khandakar, former deputy managing director of Rupali Bank; and Md Anwar Hossain, a chartered accountant.

Hasina made accused in 12 more cases

10 filed over killings during protests, 1 over ex-BDR official's death

STAR REPORT

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina was accused in 12 more cases filed in Dhaka and elsewhere yesterday.

Ten of these cases were filed over killings that took place during the recent student protest.

Besides, a case was filed over the death of a former official of the then Bangladesh Rifles (BDR) in 2010 while the father of a victim of enforced disappearance filed an abduction case.

Hasina is now facing 61 cases, including 51 for murder, seven for crimes against humanity and genocide, and two for abduction.

Former Awami League ministers Obaidul Quader, Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, Anisul Huq, and Jahangir Kabir Nanak, and former inspector general of police Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun are among the accused in the cases.

Hasina, former army chief Aziz Ahmed, and 11 others were sued yesterday over the death of Abdur Rahim, the former deputy

Janmashtami today

BSS, Dhaka

Janmashtami, one of the major festivals of the Hindu community commemorating the birth of Lord Sri Krishna, will be celebrated countrywide today with due religious fervour and gaiety.

According to Hindu mythology, Lord Vishnu incarnated in this world as Sri Krishna in the prison of Raja Kangsa on this day -- the eighth day of the dark fortnight in the Bangla month of Bhadra. Lord Vishnu has taken on mortal form through the ages to protect the good and pious from malevolent forces by establishing truth, justice, and beauty in society.

Sri Krishna's birth is usually observed on the eighth day (ashtami) of the Krishna Paksha (dark fortnight) in the month of Shraban or Bhadra.

UN calls for stepping up funding

Urges donors to do more, says Bangladeshis can't be left to shoulder the crisis alone

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The United Nations has called for sustained commitment from international partners to support the protection of nearly one million Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh and to help secure solutions for a lasting end to their plight.

The call came as the world observed Rohingya Genocide Remembrance Day yesterday, seven years after about 750,000 members of Rohingya ethic minority group fled a brutal military crackdown in Myanmar's Rakhine State and took shelter in Bangladesh.

The UN Refugee Agency UNHCR in a statement yesterday said the international community supported Bangladesh in ensuring protection and basic needs, but in recent months security issues and funding uncertainties undermined all but the most critical and life-saving assistance.

It urged donors and private actors to step up their funding to the Rohingya response, mentioning that humanitarian agencies have appealed for $852 million to assist 1.35 million people, including Rohingya refugees and hosting Bangladeshi communities, in 2024.

"The Rohingya people deserve our best, as do the generous people of Bangladesh who cannot be left to shoulder this crisis alone."

131 officials promoted to addl secys

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The public administration ministry has promoted 131 joint secretaries to additional secretaries.

The ministry issued a gazette yesterday saying that the officers promoted to the post of additional secretary can directly join at the ministry or send their joining letter by e-mail (sa1@mopa.gov.bd). The gazette was signed by Deputy Secretary Alamgir Kabir.

The notification stated that if any allegation is raised against any of the promoted additional secretaries in future, the government reserved the right to amend or cancel this order.

The interim government has so far promoted 223 officers from deputy secretary to joint secretary in two phases as the promoted officials claimed that most of them were deprived of promotions during the rule of Awami League.

On August 5, Sheikh Hasina resigned from the post of prime minister and fled to India following a massive uprising.

Fears of all-out ME war grow

Israel, Hezbollah in Lebanon trade missiles across border

AGENCIES

Hezbollah launched hundreds of rockets and drones at Israel early yesterday, as Israel's military said it struck Lebanon with around 100 jets to thwart a bigger attack, in one of the biggest clashes in more than 10 months of border warfare.

Missiles were visible curling up through the dawn sky, dark vapour trails behind them, as an air raid siren sounded in Israel and a distant blast lit the horizon, while smoke rose over houses in Khiam in southern Lebanon.

The extent of damage was not immediately clear and Hezbollah indicated it was not planning further strikes yet, while Israel's foreign minister said the country did not seek a full-scale war.

Lebanon's health ministry said three people were killed in the Israeli raids in the country's south. One Israel navy soldier was killed and two wounded during combat in northern Israel, the Israeli military said.

Any major escalation in the fighting, which began in parallel with the offensive in Gaza, risks morphing into a regional conflagration drawing in Hezbollah's backer Iran and Israel's main ally the United States.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu warned that the strikes in Lebanon were "not the final word" in his country's military campaign against Hezbollah.

Yesterday's strikes came as negotiators were meeting in Cairo in a last-ditch effort to conclude a halt to the fighting in Gaza.

- » Hezbollah attacks follow murder of its commander
- » Netanyahu warns strikes in Lebanon 'not the final word'
- » Egypt hosting talks aimed at brokering Gaza truce

The Iran-backed Lebanese group said it had fired 320 Katyusha rockets towards Israel and hit 11 military targets in what it called the first phase of its retaliation for Israel's assassination of Fuad Shukr, a senior commander, last month.

Israel's military said it had foiled a much larger attack with pre-emptive airstrikes after assessing that Hezbollah was preparing to launch the barrage, using 100 jets to strike more than 40 Hezbollah launch sites in southern Lebanon, reports Reuters.

Hasina urges all to stand by flood victims

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League president Sheikh Hasina yesterday urged countrymen to stand by the flood-affected people.

She also called upon leaders, activists, supporters of her party and its front and associate organisations, and people of all sociocultural backgrounds and professions to unite and support the flood victims.

Expressing concerns over the recent floods, Hasina said that the flood has suddenly taken a serious turn in some south-eastern districts of the country.

Hasina, the immediate-past prime minister of the country who resigned and fled to India in the face of a student-led mass uprising, said she had directed all to prepare in early July to tackle a severe flood.

"Earlier, we successfully helped the flood victims and handled the post-flood situation as leaders and activists of the Awami League and its associate bodies came forward."

Ex-minister Dastagir Gazi, Golap arrested

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Former Textile and Jute Minister Golam Dastagir Gazi and Awami League Central Publicity and Publications Secretary Abdus Sobhan Golap were arrested in Dhaka yesterday.

Police arrested Golam Dastagir from a house in Pirergoli area of Shantinagar in the capital around 3:00am, said Mollah Mohammad Khalid Hussain, officer-in-charge of Paltan Police Station.

Golam Dastagir was kept at the DB office as the Paltan Police Station remains badly damaged after it was vandalised during the recent violence, the OC said. "A group of people besieged the house after knowing his location there. On information, police rushed there and arrested him," he added.

He is accused in a case filed in Narayanganj, the OC added.

Gazi Group Chairman, Golam Dastagir Gazi, an industrialist turned politician, was elected from Narayanganj-1 for four consecutive terms.

Interim govt to be given reasonable, not unlimited time

Fakhrul says about holding election

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Sylhet

The BNP wants to give the interim government reasonable but specific time to hold an acceptable election by reforming all the institutions, the party's Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir said yesterday.

He made the remarks at a discussion with journalists organised by district and city units of BNP at a conference hall in Sylhet.

"The interim government headed by Prof Dr Muhammad Yunus is leading the country towards stability. While the country is turning around, Sheikh Hasina, residing in India, is plotting a deep conspiracy. But the conspiracy will not succeed," Fakhrul said.

Relief delivery is now the challenge

4 more die; new areas flooded in Noakhali, Cumilla

MD ABBAS, ANWARUL HAIDER and KHALID BIN NAZRUL

- 5.71 million people affected
- Some got relief materials multiple times
- Many didn't get any over the last six days

People wishing to distribute relief materials among the flood victims are finding it very difficult to reach remote areas due to a lack of boats.

All major roads in the 12 flood-affected districts have been flooded at places.

People in the hardest-hit districts -- Noakhali, Feni, Cumilla, and Laxmipur -- blamed a lack of coordination between government agencies for their plight.

Many in the four districts said relief was being distributed among those living close to the main roads and some people received relief materials multiple times. They called for a more equitable distribution of relief.

The water levels of all major rivers in the 10 districts dropped yesterday. However, some new areas went under water in Cumilla, and Noakhali.

Four more flood-related deaths were reported yesterday, including two minors in Cumilla's Burichang upazila, raising the death toll to 23.

Two people were reported missing in Moulvibazar.

Israt Jahan, of Feni's Parshuram upazila, said despite being hit by floods six days ago, no relief materials reached them.

"We badly need food and drinking water as our stock has run out. No one in my neighbourhood has received aid," she said yesterday.

Volunteers said they could not access remote areas due to a shortage of boats.

"We wanted to distribute relief in Bhaluka and Ghopal areas, but we could not go past Shuvapur because of a scarcity of boats," said Shihab Jisan Anik, a

S Alam barred from fund transfer, cashout, LC opening

MD MEHEDI HASAN

The Bangladesh Bank yesterday instructed six S Alam-owned banks to stop any money going out of the accounts in the name of the Chattogram-based business giant, its associates' companies and related persons.

However, all types of deposits can be accepted in their accounts, according to the letter from BB's banking inspection department-7.

Islami Bank, First Security Islami Bank (FSIBL), Social Islami Bank (SIBL), Union Bank, Global Islami Bank (GIB) and Bangladesh Commerce Bank (BCB) have already passed on the BB instruction to their branches and sub-branches.

The instruction was given as the central bank has started to reconstruct the board of directors of the banks linked to the business group, said BB spokesman Md Mezbaul Haque,

Once the banks' boards are reconstituted, the instruction to bar any withdrawals from the accounts would be relaxed, he added.

The BB has verbally instructed the other banks to suspend fund transfer and withdrawal requests of S Alam Group, its associates' companies and related persons, The Daily Star has learnt from the managing directors of three leading banks.

Banks have been asked to not renew any investment facilities or stop any new investment. They have been instructed to suspend any new disbursement or withdrawal.

The lenders will not be able to disburse and withdraw any new investment from the investment accounts that are previously approved in their name, the BB letter said.

The banks have also been asked not to open letters of credit (LC) in favour of the companies of the business group and its associates' companies.

However, banks can open LC in favour of the companies at a 100 percent margin.

Banks have also been asked to disallow bill discounts or purchases in their name; not to make any application to the central bank for any refinance scheme; ban credit card transactions; and decline requests for fund transfers outside of Bangladesh in

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday expressed frustration that Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus' address to the nation lacked a roadmap for transition to democracy.

Speaking at a discussion, the BNP leader hoped the interim government will soon engage in talks with political parties to make a decision on the next national election and state reforms.

"We are still confused as things remain unclear. We had anticipated that the chief adviser would present a roadmap. But we didn't find that roadmap for moving to democracy in his speech," Fakhrul said.

Blaze under control after 22 hours

Factory looted; locals claim many who went there are missing

OUR CORRESPONDENT, N'ganj

Firefighters after 22 hours of frantic efforts brought the blaze at Gazi Tyres factory in Rupganj of Narayanganj under control at 7:05pm yesterday.

The fire was yet to be doused at 12:30am today, when this report was filed. There have been no reports of casualties.

Criminals set fire to the factory, owned by former Awami League minister Golam Dastagir Gazi, around 9:00pm Sunday, hours after the arrest of Gazi.

Factory officials claimed that hundreds of people in two groups stormed the six-storey building in the Rupshi area beside Dhaka-Sylhet highway and resorted to vandalism and looting Sunday afternoon.

Saiful Islam, assistant general manager at Gazi Tyres, said the criminals set fire to the ground floor around 9:00pm. Fire service reached the scene around 11:40pm.

Locals and family members of factory workers started gathering in front of the building yesterday morning and reported to the fire service about their loved ones being missing.

They claimed that those missing were at the factory during the mob attack.

Locals also claimed that they reported to the fire service about missing individuals who had gone into the building "to see what was going on" during the melee on Sunday.

Saiful said none of the factory employees were missing. "Some looters were still inside the building when it was set on fire. Some are claiming that their relatives are trapped in the building," he said.

437 Ansars sued over clashes near Secretariat

11,100 unnamed people made accused in 4 cases filed by cops; 377 Ansars sent to jail

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and EMRUL HASAN BAPPI

A total of 437 Ansar personnel have been named as suspects in four cases that also accuse 11,100 unidentified people over clashes between the members of the force and students outside the Secretariat in Dhaka on Sunday night.

The cases were filed at Shahbagh, Ramna, Airport, and Paltan police stations on charges related to attempted murder, grievous injury, illegal gathering, rioting, and assaulting law enforcers.

As many as 377 Ansar members, including two women, were produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court of Dhaka in these cases yesterday. The court sent all of them to jail after hearing the police forwarding reports submitted by the investigators.

A total of 191 Ansar members were arrested in the case filed at Shahbagh Police Station, 85 at Ramna, 95 at Paltan and six were arrested in the case filed at Airport Police Station.

According to the case statements, the Ansar personnel carrying sticks and brick chunks were instigated by some unidentified people in a planned attack on police and students with the intent to kill.

The suspects are also accused of obstructing police

UNITED IN CRISIS

People's resilient response to devastating floods

STAR DIGITAL REPORT

The ongoing floods in Bangladesh have left many rural communities devastated. Children and women are among the most vulnerable in this crisis. Every time a natural calamity strikes, we triumph through our resilient life forces. People from all walks of life rise to the occasion and stand beside our fellow people who are in distress. All our small efforts from general individuals and charity organisations add up to building a substantial relief operation that complements efforts by the government.

Faiza Ahmed, Creative head of Manas and Shanchayita, is raising funds to provide essential items like food, powdered milk, vitamin C, supplements, clothing, mosquito nets, bedsheets, toys, and blankets for young victims. There are many such general people like her, who are trying to collect contributions, no matter how small, to make a significant difference in a child's life during this difficult time.

The Rizq Project, is another such effort, helping people in the worst-affected areas in Parshuram, Feni Sadar, Sonagazi, and Chagalnaiya, by working with local volunteers involved in rescue and food relief operations. Also, in Mirsharai, where volunteers from neighbouring Sitakunda are helping out. Soup kitchens, catering to people who have sought shelter on higher grounds, are a very important part of the relief programme and The Rizq Project has mobilised funds to support ongoing relief efforts by the SAJIDA Foundation in Dhaka and Ghashful bd in Chattogram.

"Geology and earth sciences are my passions, so, naturally, I'm very inclined towards worldwide weather-related phenomena. The night before the waters from upstream started descending and engulfing the flat lands of Bangladesh, I was monitoring the rain using Bing Maps, a free app that anyone can install. So, my question is, if a novice can forecast, where were our concerned personnel in charge of this?" says Shafin Ahmed of The Rizq Project, adding that using social media platforms was most effective in quickly organising funds.

SAJIDA Foundation is providing emergency relief to thousands of families affected, prioritising the safety of the elderly, pregnant women, and children, and transporting them to safe, dry locations.

The Azimur Rokia Rahman Trust and Community Resource Development Centre (CRDC), in collaboration with multiple volunteering teams and individuals who have generously contributed to the relief efforts, have been able to support the 5,000 families in remote areas of Baghaichari Upazilla in Rangamati district. The Bangladesh Marma Students Council-BMSC, Rangamati branch is volunteering to deliver essential supplies like food, clothes, and sanitary napkins to this severely flood-affected area. However, it takes around four to five hours to reach the destination by boat.

There are many livestock animals stranded in the flood waters. The Animal Welfare Team of Dhaka University is requesting the rescue operation team to look out for these unfortunate domestic animals. Their request on their official Facebook page to collect donations for animals, generated around Tk 78,304 and counting to buy fodder for cows, goats, poultry feed, as well as cat and dog food.

In a rare gesture, The Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) has been instructed to supply free diesel to keep network towers operational in flood-affected areas in Feni, according to a press release, reported in The Daily Star.

Biden, Modi discuss situation in Bangladesh

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi yesterday spoke to US President Joe Biden over the phone to discuss the situation in Bangladesh.

During the phone call initiated by Biden, "The two leaders expressed their shared concern over the situation in Bangladesh and emphasised the restoration of law and order and ensuring the safety of minorities, particularly Hindus, in Bangladesh," said a readout issued by the Indian Prime Minister's Office.

India has expressed repeated concerns over a series of attacks on minority establishments in the days following the fall of the Sheikh Hasina-led government on August 5.

This was the first time Modi and Biden spoke to each other on the issue of Bangladesh since the ouster of Hasina as prime minister.

China ready to work with interim govt

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

China wishes Bangladesh political stability and economic development and is ready to work with the interim government to strengthen exchanges and cooperation in various fields, said Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Sun Weidong.

Welcoming the interim government, Weidong said China wants to pursue high-quality Belt and Road cooperation and greater development of China-Bangladesh relations.

The minister made the comment when he met the outgoing Bangladeshi Ambassador to China Md Jashim Uddin in Beijing on Sunday, according to a statement by the Chinese Foreign Ministry.

Stating that China and Bangladesh have been traditionally friendly neighbours and comprehensive strategic partners, Weidong said China remains committed to developing relations with Bangladesh based on the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence, respecting Bangladesh's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, and the development path independently chosen by the Bangladeshi people.

Jashim Uddin said Bangladesh will adhere to independence, actively explore a development path that suits its national conditions, and is ready to deepen friendly exchanges and mutually beneficial cooperation with China in various fields.

Bangladesh will also take the 50th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries next year as an opportunity to push bilateral relations forward continuously, he added.

their name.

Founded in 1985 by Mohammad Saiful Alam, a relative of former Awami League politician Akhtaruzzanan Chowdhury Babu and former Land Minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury, S Alam Group has grown into one of the largest conglomerates in Bangladesh.

For instance, S Alam is one of the four edible oil importers and processors along with TK Group, City Group and Meghna Group. Together, they control 80 percent of the total edible oil market in Bangladesh, according to import data from the National Bureau of Revenue.

Its subsidiary S Alam Refined Sugar Industries was the third-largest importer of sugar in 2023, accounting for a fifth of the country's demand.

S Alam Group and its associate companies took out Tk 95,331 crore between 2017 and June this year from six banks, with 79 percent of the sum coming from Islami Bank, data showed.

Documents pieced together by The Daily Star show that most of the loans were taken by bypassing banking rules and regulations, in a testament to how the Chattogram-based conglomerate exerted its influence on the country's banking sector.

In a separate letter, the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) on Sunday sought detailed information on the overall banking activities of Alam, his 12 family members and their companies.

The 12 family members include his wife Farzana Parveen, his two older sons Ahsanul Alam and Ashraful Alam, and his brothers Osman Ghani, Abdus Samad, Rashedul Alam, Shahidul Alam, Mohammed Abdullah Hasan and Morshedul Alam, who passed away in May 2020 from Covid-19.

Besides this case, Inu has been accused in several other cases after Hasina resigned and fled on August 5 in the face of a mass uprising.

He is also facing charges of crimes against humanity along with Hasina at the International Crimes Tribunal.

Inu was a key partner of the Awami League-led 14-party coalition that was in power from January 6, 2009, to August 5, 2024.

He was information minister from September 2012 till the first week of January 2019. Before he was appointed the information minister, he served as the chairman of the Parliamentary Standing Committee for the Ministry of Post and Telecommunications from 2008 to September 2012.

He also served on the parliamentary standing committee for the information ministry from February 2019 to January 2024.

Inu is a three-time MP from the Kushtia-2 constituency. However, he lost in the last parliamentary election to an independent candidate.

Inu was vocal about announcing a nationwide curfew when the leaders of the 14-party alliance met with Hasina on July 19, amid the student protest. The meeting eventually agreed on imposing a curfew the next day.

Blaze under control after 22 hours

Lt Col Rezaul Karim, director of Fire Service and Civil Defence (Dhaka), told The Daily Star in the afternoon that relatives were claiming that their family members, who were in the factory during the fire, were missing.

"We are noting down the names and addresses provided by the relatives. So far, we have 174 names."

However, the fire service in a text message sent to the media around 5:50pm said they were not officially maintaining any list of the missing. Some locals gave their phone numbers and requested them to inform them if any victim was found.

While briefing reporters in the evening, Rezaul said the responsibility of preparing a list of victims lies with the local administration and the police.

The fire spread quickly as flammable materials like tyres, rubber, and plastic were inside the factory, he said, adding that they rescued 14 people trapped inside.

He said the rescued were not factory workers.

Rezaul said when the fire is fully out, they will conduct a search.

THE LOOTING

As the six-story building continued to burn yesterday, looting was going on at other parts of the factory.

This is the second attack on the factory since Sheikh Hasina resigned and fled to India on August 5. The factory had then suspended operations and only some security personnel were present, according to factory officials.

Md Asaduzzaman, additional DIG of Industrial Police, said the factory lacked proper security, including guards and boundary walls, making it vulnerable.

"A significant number of people looted goods and machines. They even took the commodes from toilets," he said.

Locals told this newspaper that the factory was on disputed land and after the news of Gazi's arrest spread, locals formed a human chain demanding the land be given back to them.

Gazi's arrest was announced over a mosque's horn speaker around 11:30am on Sunday.

Lutfar Rahman, the imam of the mosque, told The Daily Star, "A few individuals came before Zuhr prayers and announced over the mosque's horn speaker about Gazi's arrest. They urged landowners to gather at Rupshi. Although they requested not to resort to looting, pillaging began immediately after the announcement."

Locals claimed that an armed group arrived at the scene around 4:00pm and clashed with the locals, but the armed group eventually retreated.

They said by 9:00pm on Sunday, hundreds of people were looting the factory.

The situation at the scene was chaotic throughout yesterday despite the presence of many law enforcement personnel inside and outside the factory.

Locals said that they saw looting in the unguarded areas of the factory compound.

This correspondent also saw people removing machine parts, steel, plastic, and copper. A few were breaking windows to steal from the outside.

When confronted, many refused to speak and some became aggressive.

One unidentified youth said, "Gazi took a lot from us. This is ours now."

Senior Assistant Superintendent of Police Habibur Rahman assured that the police were making every effort to secure the factory.

Rupganj Upazila Nirbahi Officer Ahsan Mahmud Russell urged people to have a stronger stance against looting.

THE 'MISSING'

This correspondent spoke to the families of 14 "missing" individuals. They said their loved ones were not factory workers and that they had gone to the factory during the vandalism and looting on Sunday.

They said they could not contact them over phone since then.

Moni Akter, a resident of Kalabagan, said her husband, Md Rashed, a mason, had gone to the factory around 8:30pm on Sunday. When he did not return, she tried calling him, but his phone was off.

"I've been searching for my husband all night, but I can't find him."

Md Mizan said his brother, Bellal Hossain, 36, also went to the factory on Sunday night and has been missing since.

volunteer from Prothom Alo Bandhushava and Prothom Alo Trust working in Feni.

He said people in those remote areas have yet to receive any assistance.

Admitting the problem, Feni Deputy Commissioner Shahina Akhter said they will coordinate with the UNOs from today to ensure all flood victims receive the necessary aid.

In Noakhali, people in remote areas are also suffering due to poor supply of relief materials.

Nurnabi Bachchu, of Senbagh, said their area has been waterlogged for several days.

"People living close to the roads have received relief multiple times, but those in remote areas have got nothing," he said.

Md Shahid Ullah, a resident of Arjuntala village in Senbagh upazila, said vehicles supplied relief materials in the upazila town and the municipality area.

"Some people had 8-10 packs, but those who could not reach those areas are struggling to survive with their families," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

In Cumilla, volunteers could not distribute relief in most of the areas of Chauddagram, Nangalkot and Burichang upazilas yesterday due to a lack of boats.

Salauddin Khandaker, a volunteer, said they somehow managed a boat, but most volunteers could not access remote areas.

Denying any lack of coordination among the government agencies, Pangkaj Barua, additional deputy commissioner of Cumilla, said they were working together to supply relief.

He urged the volunteers to contact the district administration for any assistance in relief distribution.

NEW AREAS FLOODED

New areas in Noakhali were flooded yesterday as 23 gates of Musapur regulator in Companiganj upazila collapsed due to the pressure of water, said Munshi Amir Faisal, executive engineer at Water Development Board.

This is likely to aggravate the flooding in Companiganj and Kabirhat upazilas, he said.

The flood situation in 82 unions across seven municipalities and eight upazilas of Noakhali worsened yesterday due to incessant rains since Saturday.

Noakhali Additional Deputy Commissioner Sharmin Ara said about two million people have been marooned in the district. Of them, 182,000 have taken shelter in 1,098 centres.

Fatehpur, Subil, and Boroshalghal unions in Debidwer upazila of Cumilla were inundated in 24 hours.

The overall flood situation in the 10 other districts improved significantly yesterday as the floodwaters started receding.

The Disaster Management Ministry in a release yesterday said floods have directly affected over 5.71 million people in 11 districts

At least 74 upazilas have been severely impacted. The authorities have opened 3,834 shelters, providing refuge to over 4.69 lakh people.

The Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre (FFWC) yesterday said the water levels of the rivers in the flood-hit districts were falling.

"Rivers were previously flowing above the danger levels in at least 13 points. But only the Gumti river is now flowing above the danger level at one point. I think the situation will improve further tomorrow [today]," said Sarder Udoy Raihan, executive engineer of FFWC.

Asked about the situation in the Ganges basin, he said there is no chance of flooding in the Ganges basin over the next one week as the water level there was still below the danger level.

HOME ADVISER DISTRIBUTES RELIEF

Home Adviser Lt Gen (retd) Md Jahangir Alam Chowdhury yesterday said the country is facing severe floods. But if the people remain united, all problems can be resolved.

He was speaking to journalists after distributing relief and medical supplies among the flood victims at the Noakhali Police Training Centre.

The adviser said there would be no shortage of relief materials and medicines. He said the authorities were facing difficulties in accessing some areas, but those problems would be over soon.

He urged all to cooperate with the authorities to ensure that relief reaches all flood-hit areas.

In a press statement, the Inter Services Public Relation Directorate (ISPR) yesterday detailed the Bangladesh Army's rescue operations and relief distribution.

The Army Aviation Group conducted rescue and relief missions using 15 helicopter. Eleven critically ill patients were rescued and transferred to hospitals, while 24 individuals were relocated to safety.

Despite adverse weather conditions, the Army distributed 4,839 relief packages, 50,400 liters of fresh water, 500 mobile phones, and one lakh water purification tablets via helicopters in Sylhet, Chattogram, and Feni, said the ISPR statement.

duty, vandalising vehicles, and throwing brick chunks at the Secretariat. The law enforcers requested the court to keep the arrestees in jail until the end of the investigation so that the actual reasons behind continuing the protests could be unearthed.

Despite the assurance of fulfilling their demands, Ansar members continued to block the Secretariat gates before the clashes that left at least 50 people injured.

Maj Gen Abdul Motaleb Sazzad Mahmud, director general of the Ansar and Village Defence Party, told The Daily Star, "We were trying to find a possible solution, and a committee was formed for this, but those people [protesters] were not interested in it."

They did not even know what "nationalisation" meant, according to him. "They were just protesting for what they were taught. Their target was to destabilise the nation."

He said the authorities had information that those from outside Dhaka were instructed to bring extra uniforms for those without these dresses. "I know my force members, but those faces were unknown," said the Ansar DG.

He alleged irrational recruitment over the last 10 years allowed Ansar to swell to a 90,000-strong force despite having around 50,000 posts. "This was done in a very organised manner," he said.

Law Adviser Prof Asif Nazrul also said those who came "in the guise of Ansar members had a different agenda behind their demands and a plan to create a terrible situation".

"Creating chaos was their main objective. They had a stock of sticks, and we saw how they attacked the students," he told reporters while visiting the injured at Dhaka Medical College Hospital. "They besieged the Secretariat to cause disruption for an unrealistic and impossible demand."

Asif Nazrul further mentioned that the students are vigilant, and the government will take legal action against anyone attempting to sabotage the interim government's work in the name of protests.

Power, Energy, and Mineral Resources Adviser Muhammad Fouzul Kabir Khan and Education and Planning Adviser Wahiduddin Mahmud also visited the injured students.

DMCH Director Maj Gen Asaduzzaman said the condition of Hasnat Abdullah, a coordinator of the student movement who was injured in the clashes, was now stable and under 48-hour observation for head injuries, he said.

The clashes also left six army officials injured, one of them critically, the Inter-Services Public Relation Directorate (ISPR) said in a press release yesterday. It said the demonstrators refused to leave the area and confined seven advisers of the interim government, the Ansar DG, and other senior officials to the Secretariat even after the authorities accepted their demands.

The army soldiers fired 27 rounds of warning shots after their bid to make the protesters desist failed. Later, additional troops were deployed in the area and they brought the situation under control, the release added.

DHAKA-CTG HIGHWAY

Flood water recedes, traffic resumes

FM MIZANUR RAHAMAN

Vehicular movement on the Dhaka-Chattogram highway, often referred to as the lifeline of the country, fully resumed on Sunday night after floodwaters receded from various sections in Feni and Mirsarai upazila of Chattogram.

However, traffic remains slow due to numerous potholes and large ditches that have formed after the highway was submerged for an extended period.

The Dhaka-Chattogram highway is crucial for the nation, facilitating the movement of goods and passengers between the capital and the country's largest port.

The recent floods had brought this key artery to a standstill, with trucks, buses, and other vehicles stranded on the Feni portion of the highway for three days, creating a dire humanitarian situation.

Drivers and passengers endured significant hardships during the standstill, with limited access to food, water, and basic amenities. "It was a nightmare," said one truck driver who had been stranded for 72 hours.

"We ran out of food, and the heat was unbearable. Many of us had no choice but to sleep in our vehicles."

The floodwaters receded enough by Sunday night to allow the resumption of traffic, but the road remains in poor condition.

Numerous potholes and large ditches have formed, particularly in Feni, making travel slow and hazardous.

More than just NUMBERS

A 24-year-old was fatally shot in Dhaka's Laxmibazar. A 10th-grader was gunned down in a similar manner in Savar. A 20-year-old was shot in the chest in Narayanganj. At least 400 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, parents, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

24-year-old Omar was shot by law enforcers in Dhaka

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Omar Faruq, 24, a third-year honours student of the Bengali Department at Kabi Nazrul Government College, was fatally shot when law enforcers opened fire on protesters in Dhaka's Laxmibazar area on the afternoon of July 19.

Omar sustained multiple bullet wounds and was immediately rushed to Dhaka Medical College Hospital, where doctors declared him dead upon arrival.

His body was taken to his home village, Singha, in Netrakona's Durgapur upazila and was buried in the family graveyard on July 22.

Siam, who lived with his parents and younger sister in a rented house in Savar's Islamnagar area, left home that morning with three friends to join the Long March to Dhaka organised by the Anti-discriminatory Students' Movement.

Despite his mother's hesitation, Siam was determined to join the protest.

Ban on Jamaat and Shibir may be lifted today

Says party's lawyer

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The interim government may issue a circular today revoking the former Awami League government's decree to ban Jamaat-e-Islami and Islami Chhatra Shibir, said lawyers of Jamaat yesterday.

"As this is a legal issue, Jamaat-appointed lawyers held a series of discussions with the high-ups of the government department and advisers concerned. At one stage, we requested the home ministry and talked about the legal steps that can be taken to solve the issue," said Shishir Manir, a lawyer for Jamaat-e-Islami, while talking to reporters on Supreme Court premises.

"Following the request, they told us all the administrative work is complete... The order to ban Jamaat-Shibir will be withdrawn within the quickest possible time, or

NEWS IN BRIEF

Farakka water release poses no threat to Bangladesh: India

STAR REPORT

India yesterday said the release of water from the Ganges/Padma through the Farakka barrage occurs every season and the opening of the gates of the barrage poses no immediate worries of flooding in Bangladesh.

"We have seen media reports on the opening of Farraka barrage gates that will allow the flow of over 11 lakh cusecs of water downstream of the river in its natural course into the Ganga/Padma river," official spokesperson at the Indian Ministry of External Affairs Randhir Jaiswal said yesterday in response to reporters' queries.

His comment came after media in Bangladesh widely published

Hajj registration to begin Sept 1

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The primary registration for the 2025 hajj will begin on September 1 and continue till November 30 through both public and private channels, the religious affairs ministry said yesterday.

The deadline for the registration will not be extended, said a ministry press release.

Any previous or new pre-registered person can do primary registration by depositing Tk 3 lakh. The remaining amount of the hajj package price must be paid within the time specified in the package.

The pre-registration fee for both public and private channels is Tk 30,000.

The quota for pilgrims from Bangladesh is 1.27 lakh.

Pedal rickshaw pullers block Shahbagh

Demand a ban on battery-operated rickshaws

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Pedal rickshaw pullers blocked the Shahbagh intersection yesterday morning, demanding a ban on battery-operated rickshaws on main roads.

They said battery-operated rickshaws should be restricted to feeder roads, as was the practice in the past.

Witnesses reported that several hundred rickshaw pullers began arriving in Shahbagh around 8:00am and blocked the road with their rickshaws around 9:00am.

The intersection was completely even by tomorrow (today)," he added.

Asked on which ground they demanded the withdrawal of the ban, Shishir Manir said the AL government banned Jamaat-Shibir, saying the parties are involved in terrorist activities.

But it did not specify or give any explanation about the criminal activities, he added.

Contacted, a top home ministry official told The Daily Star that a process is underway to withdraw the order, which need some time.

"We will send a proposal to the law ministry and later the final decision will come from there," he said.

On August 1, the then government banned Jamaat-e-Islami, its student wing Islami Chhatra Shibir, and all of its associated organisations as political entities under the Anti-Terrorism Act-2009.

According to the gazette notification, the decision was taken as per Section 18 (1) of the act, and enlisted Jamaat and associates as banned entities in the second schedule of the act.

The Election Commission on October 29, 2018 scrapped the registration of Jamaat following a High Court verdict that declared its registration illegal.

On August 1, 2013, the HC declared Jamaat's registration with the EC illegal.

The EC had suspended Jamaat's registration the same year.

Although Jamaat later filed an appeal with the apex court challenging the HC verdict, the SC upheld it.

He sought cooperation from the public, which he continues to receive from people and political parties. The Workers Party also demanded the immediate release of their president, Rashed Khan Menon, urging the withdrawal of all charges against him.

FLOOD RELIEF CAMPAIGN AT DU

25,000 packs of relief items dispatched in a day

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The relief campaign, set up by students at Dhaka University's TSC, sent 25,000 packets of relief to flood-affected people across the country yesterday.

The packages include dry foods, baby food, sanitary napkins, first aid supplies, and medicine.

Besides, the campaign booths collected Tk 85.68 lakh yesterday, and with that, the total amount of money collected stood at Tk 5.23 crore.

The total amount of funds that they received via online and banking channels yesterday could not be known, said Lutfor Rahman, one of the coordinators of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

The TSC cafeteria and games room have been filled with relief items, and hundreds of students were seen packing items while sitting on the floor.

A human chain was formed from the TSC gate to the cafeteria, with volunteers passing items hand-to-hand, packing them, and loading trucks from the backyard area.

Mahbubur Rahman, a former student at Dhaka University, was seen volunteering in the TSC area yesterday.

Mahbubur said they have been working with district administrators in the flooded areas, along with the Bangladesh Army, Navy, and Coast Guard.

"We can pack relief for 25,000 families a day here [TSC and Central Field]. We are ensuring that each package contains sufficient relief items to meet a family's needs for 3-4 days," he said.

They are prioritising the most affected areas and have formed separate groups in those areas, incorporating local students and organisers of the mass uprising, he added.

"It has become impossible to reach some remote areas as well. We are taking help from the local administrations there. Some of our assistance has been sent to the air base camp in Dhaka's Kurmitola, from where the Air Force is transporting them by helicopter," he said.

to let him rest and recuperate, I went out and found out that Sheikh Hasina had resigned and fled."

"Half-an-hour later, I went back to Sajan and told him that Shaikh Hasina had resigned. My brother smiled as I told him this, and he closed his eyes. I thought he went back to sleep, but after some time, the on-duty doctor checked on him and said he was gone..." Anik also said.

"My brother died in peace knowing that the dictator was gone," he added.

Abul Hossain Sajan, a 20-year-old from Kushiara village in Narayanganj, had been a committed participant in the ongoing student protests against the government.

Despite the risks, he joined the movement alongside his elder brother, Md Anik, on August 5.

Their destination was Chashara Intersection, where they planned to join others in the "March to Dhaka" event, organised by the Anti-discriminatory Students' Movement.

As they approached the intersection, the group of 11 protestors was ambushed by a mob of 50-60 men, believed to be Awami League supporters.

Armed with firearms and sharp weapons, the attackers chased and fired at the protesters.

In the chaos, Sajan became separated from his brother and was struck by a bullet in his chest.

Sajan was initially rushed to Narayanganj General Hospital before being transferred to Dhaka Medical College Hospital.

Sajan completed his HSC in 2022 but could not continue studying as his father Jakir Hossain passed away.

He went on to join a soft drink manufacturing company as a sales representative, and eventually took the entire responsibility of the family after his elder brother became unemployed six months back.

Meanwhile, Anik has filed a case accusing former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, along with former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan and 46 others over his brother's death.

Former MP AKM Shamim Osman, his brother former MP AKM Selim Osman, son Imtinan Osman Ayon, nephew Azmery Osman were also among the accused.

blocked, and around 11:30am vehicles going to the southern parts of the city could be seen diverting through Hare Road.

Abdur Rashid, a rickshaw puller from Uttara, said they took to the streets because law enforcement authorities have not taken action against battery-operated rickshaws plying major roads.

"Our income has drastically reduced. Battery-operated rickshaws should only be allowed on feeder roads and lanes," he told The Daily Star.

Md Uzzal, another rickshaw puller, said they cannot compete with battery-operated rickshaws due to their speed.

The excessive speed of these three-wheelers is also causing accidents, he said, adding, "We will continue to protest until battery-operated rickshaws are banned from the main roads."

Although battery-operated rickshaws typically operate on lanes and feeder roads, they have lately started using main thoroughfares, including important routes like Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue, due to the inaction of traffic police.

Highway Police, Cumilla Region, confirmed that all types of vehicles are now moving on the highway. "Traffic jams are still occurring due to slow driving over potholes and ditches," he explained. "The slow movement and damaged roads have created congestion, but otherwise, things are improving."

Md Ataur Rahman, Additional Chief Engineer of the Roads and Highway Department (RHD) in Chattogram, said while the road in his zone is in relatively good condition, the situation in Feni is more problematic. "We've repaired some potholes, but the floodwater has significantly damaged the highway in Feni," he said.

Earlier concerns about the Lemua Bridge in Feni, which was reported to be damaged by floodwaters, were alleviated after RHD officials inspected the structure and declared it safe. However, Sub-Assistant Engineer Muhaiminul Sohag of RHD Feni acknowledged that the full extent of the highway's damage is still under assessment.

"Our immediate focus has been on repairs, but a comprehensive evaluation is yet to be done," he noted.

The procession, which started from Dairy Gate at Jahangirnagar University, was first stopped by police and Awami League activists at Savar Bazar bus stand.

As the crowd continued to march after hearing of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's resignation, they were fired upon again near Savar Police Station around 2:30 pm.

Siam was shot in the head.

He was initially taken to Labzone Hospital in an unconscious state and later shifted to Enam Medical College Hospital.

After battling for his life for two days, Siam passed away on August 7.

Siam's father, Bulbul Kabir, who runs a clothing store near Jahangirnagar University, said, "Siam was a brilliant student and a sports champion at his school. He chose the science group with the dream of becoming a pilot. He worked hard, won numerous awards, and did not deserve this end."

Bulbul also mentioned that Supreme Court lawyer Gazi MH Tamim has filed a case on his behalf with the International Crimes Tribunal, accusing former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and eight others of genocide and crimes against humanity committed between July 15 and August 5.

"I want all those involved in the killing of my son to be brought to justice," Siam's mother, Tanya Akhter, said through tears.

"My son had so many dreams, and they were taken away in an instant. I demand justice for his killing."

reports on the opening of all 109 gates of the barrage without providing enough details.

According to media reports, the barrage's gates were opened on August 24 to release water when the water level crossed the danger level.

"The release of water is a routine seasonal development due to increased inflow from heavy rainfall in the Ganga river basin catchment areas upstream," Jaiswal explained.

He said the Farakka structure is a barrage, not a dam, and its primary function is to divert 40,000 cusecs of water into the Farakka canal, while the remaining water flows naturally downstream into the Padma river.

Jaiswal also assured that water flow data is regularly shared with Joint Rivers Commission officials in Bangladesh as per bilateral protocol.

"We have seen fake videos and rumours being spread to create misunderstandings. These should be firmly countered with facts," Jaiswal added.

Experts in Bangladesh yesterday also said the opening of the gates of Farakka is a regular annual event.

Mohammed Abul Hossen, a member of Bangladesh's Joint Rivers Commission, explained that the water-sharing treaty between Bangladesh and India remains effective from January to May.

"During that period, India provides water to Bangladesh as per the treaty," he said.

The rest of the time, India diverts 40,000 cusecs of water through a bypass feeder canal to the Hooghly river, while the remaining water flows into the Padma.

All the gates of the Farakka barrage usually remain open during the monsoon, he added.

When asked about the situation, Sarder Udoy Raihan, executive engineer of the Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre, said the water level of the Ganges had crossed the danger level in India last week but is currently flowing below the danger level.

"So, we are not expecting any floods in the Ganges basin within the next week or so," he said.

They also emphasised the need to monitor human rights violations, including potential sexual harassment during the disaster, and recommended collaboration with law enforcement and human rights organisations to address these issues.

Additionally, the statement called for a thorough assessment and planning for medium- and long-term needs, including education, shelter, and healthcare for flood victims.

The signatories to the statement include rights activist Sultana Kamal, Coordinator of Nijera Kori Khushi Kabir, Supreme Court lawyer ZI Khan Panna, Dhaka University Professor of Mass Communication and Journalism Robaet Ferdous, and Executive Director of the Association for Land Reform and Development (ALRD) Shamsul Huda, among others.

philanthropist, was well-known in his community for his selfless dedication.

In 2018, he founded the Durgapur Blood Donors' Society, a platform that now includes around 2,000 blood donors. The society, which Omar led from the front, also distributed relief during natural disasters and provided essentials to the underprivileged during Eids and Puja festivals.

"Omar's untimely demise is a shock to us all," said Al Sajid Rocky, a close friend.

"He was always at the forefront, helping those in need. Just before the clash, he had told me over the phone about the escalating situation in Dhaka. Half an hour later, I received a call saying he had been shot."

Omar's father, Abdul Khaleque, an expatriate in Dubai, returned home on July 20 after receiving the devastating news.

"Omar was the guide for our family in my absence," Khaleque said.

"With his death, I am at a loss. Who will take care of the family now?"

Omar's younger brother, Abdullah Anik, recalled their last conversation.

"Bhaia told me he would offer Juma prayers at Baitul Mokarram Mosque before joining the protests. I never imagined it would be our final conversation."

Tariqul Islam Rana, a member of the blood donors' society, expressed the collective grief of Omar's community.

"He always wanted to help the marginalised people of Durgapur upazila, where most live below the poverty line," he said.

"His death is an irreparable loss to both his family and society."

Omar's friends and family are demanding justice and a thorough investigation into his killing.

"We have lost a bright light," said Raju Ahmed, another society member. "Omar's dreams of uplifting his community must not die with him."

Hajj registration

When this quota is filled, the primary registration process will automatically close.

This year's hajj package price will be subject to the costs at the Saudi end and airfare. However, efforts will be made to reduce the price of general hajj packages compared to last year.

In the normal hajj package, a maximum of six seats will be in a room at a home or hotel. However, a package upgradation facility will be available.

Hajj agencies can send pilgrims with special package facilities. The list of agencies initially qualified to conduct hajj activities is available at www.hajj.gov.bd. Moreover, any hajj-related information can be known by calling 16136.

To perform hajj under the government hajj management, one can complete pre hajj registration through e-hajj system (www.hajj.gov.bd), e-hajj BD mobile app, all union digital centre, divisional and district offices of Islamic foundation, Baitul Mokarrom Mosque, or the hajj office at city's Ashkona hajj camp.

To do so under private management, one will have to complete registration through government approved private hajj agencies.

The religious ministry has called upon pregnant women and people suffering from chronic diseases like cancer, advanced cardiac, liver cirrhosis, kidney disease, infectious tuberculosis, and dementia not to register for hajj.

KHULNA'S BASTUHARA COLONY

No permanent allotment for residents in 52yrs

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

In 1972, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman allotted 33 acres of land for squatters and displaced people in Mujgunni area of Khulna city to reside there.

Back then, the land was largely an abandoned wetland on the outskirts of the city, where the people gradually built settlements over the years. Eventually the area came to be known as Bastuhara Colony.

At present, around 15,000 people from at least three generations are living in the colony. However, they have no permanent land document for their allotments of 450 square feet space for each family.

Apart from the residential establishments, there is a government primary school, an MPO-affiliated secondary school, four mosques, a madrasa and an orphanage in the colony.

Most residents of the colony are low-income people who live hand-to-mouth, working in informal professions such as hawkers, small traders, and day labourers, among others.

Even after more than 50 years, the land has yet to be permanently allotted to the settlers, despite their repeated plea for permanent registration of their plots at nominal value or symbolic value.

Abdur Razzak, a resident of the colony, said without permanent allotment of land, they are being unable to build the structures as per requirement.

"My seven-member family lives in a shabby tin-shed house. In monsoon, almost all belongings get drenched in rain as I could not build any concrete structure while the family continues to grow. If I go to bank for home loan, they want permanent land document, which I cannot produce," he added.

Sabur Mollah, 76, who came from Bakerganj of Barishal with five family members, have been living in the colony since 1972. The extended family members have grown in number to 23 and are now living in two plots.

"How many people can live in a 10-12 feet room? This is the reality of almost families who live here, with their allotted lands yet to be registered to their names," he said.

"If we could afford, we would have purchased land or settle anywhere else in the city. Unfortunately, we do not have the ability to buy land elsewhere as it is too expensive," he expressed frustration.

On September 12, 1998, the then prime minister Sheikh Hasina announced to initiate the registration of plots to the residents of Bastuhara Colony at a public meeting there. Although the registration process was started, it stopped after the government changed in 2001.

Later, in 2013, former state minister for labour and employment Begum Mannujan Sufian, Khulna City Corporation mayor Talukder Abdul Khaleque, and then chairman of the Housing Authority pledged to resume the registration process for the colony and rename it as "Bangabandhu Nagar".

Accordingly, an 8-member survey committee consisting of the representatives of the state minister, KCC, deputy commissioner of Khulna, Housing Authority, and Bastuhara Colony Registration Committee was formed to carry out the on-site survey.

The committee prepared a list of 1,502 families living in the colony through field survey and submitted a report. However, no progress was made since then.

Before allotting the land, Bangabandhu had pledged in this regard at an electioneering rally in 1970 at Khulna Circuit House ground.

Under his direction, the process of development and allotment registration of Bastuhara Colony began 1972 onwards, but later stopped after his assassination.

Visiting the colony recently, this correspondent observed that almost all structures are tin-shed houses in a congested, shabby, and dilapidated condition, where poor, working class people are living in a precarious state.

Lack of drainage and sewerage facilities turned the environment largely unhygienic, while almost of the area remains submerged under rain water in monsoon.

75pc telecom towers in Feni still non-functional

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Over 75 percent of the mobile telecom towers in Feni are non-functional as of 5pm yesterday, according to the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission.

In 11 flood-affected districts, approximately 7 percent of the mobile towers are out of service now.

Of the total 14,551 towers, 1,008 are inactive at present in the flood-affected Feni, Noakhali, Lakshmipur, Cumilla, Brahmanbaria, Chattogram, Khagrachhari, Habiganj, Moulvibazar, Sylhet and Cox's Bazar.

The BTRC said it is trying to resume operation of the affected mobile towers in coordination with the army.

The commission said two speedboats have been deployed in Fulgazi upazila of Feni in coordination with mobile operator Robi and tower operators Summit and Edotco to expedite network restoration efforts.

Additionally, two speedboats have been

Eminent citizens urge unity

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Twenty-seven prominent citizens, including academicians, authors, journalists, and rights activists, have called on the government and the people of Bangladesh to unite and work together to support the victims of the recent devastating floods.

In a statement issued to the media yesterday, they urged civil society, particularly social, cultural, and civic organisations, to take a more proactive role in providing coordinated assistance to those affected.

The statement highlighted that at least 18 people have lost their lives across 12 districts in the floods. It noted that citizens from all walks of life, including students and teachers, have stepped forward to assist flood-hit families.

The interim government has also sent relief items to the affected areas.

The signatories praised the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement for its efforts in crowdfunding and distributing various relief items to those impacted by the floods. They noted that the overwhelming response from the public, with people donating cash and relief materials, demonstrates the deep compassion and commitment of Bangladesh's citizens to support those in need during challenging times.

The statement included a seven-point recommendation, emphasising the importance of encouraging people to assist flood victims according to their capacity by quickly gathering and delivering essential items—such as dry food, drinking water, clothing, emergency medicine, and cash—to nearby relief centres.

It also called for better coordination with local organisations and authorities, suggesting that a coordinated delivery of relief supplies could reduce costs and increase the efficiency of aid distribution.

The signatories urged prioritising aid to remote and hard-to-reach areas, with special attention to

Red Cross China donates $100,000 for flood victims

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The Red Cross Society of China has donated $100,000 to support victims of the devastating floods that have affected millions in Bangladesh's eastern and southeastern regions.

The donation was handed over by Chinese Ambassador to Bangladesh, Yao Wen, during a meeting with Prof Dr M U Kabir Chowdhury, chairman of the Bangladesh Red Crescent Society, at their headquarters yesterday.

During the ceremony, Ambassador Yao Wen expressed deep concern and sympathy on behalf of the Chinese government and people for the loss of lives and property in Bangladesh.

"China, which also frequently suffers from natural disasters, extends its sincere sympathies to the people of Bangladesh. Though disasters are ruthless, people are compassionate," he said.

Yao Wen added that China is ready to continue providing assistance based on Bangladesh's needs to aid in disaster relief and reconstruction efforts, further strengthening the comprehensive strategic partnership between the two countries.

In addition to China's contribution, the UK has announced £33,000 in immediate humanitarian assistance to support over 12,000 people affected by severe flooding in Feni, Khagrachari, and Noakhali.

The aid will be implemented by Start Fund Bangladesh and Save the Children International and will provide search and rescue, food, cash transfers, clean water, sanitation, and hygiene supplies.

Meanwhile, the BCS'81 Forum Bangladesh has announced a donation of Illegal sand lifting continues unabated in Chowagachha

MOHSIN MILON, Benapole

Residents of Jashore's Chowgachha upazila have alleged that the local administration is yet to take any action against a syndicate that has long been illegally extracting sand from Marjad Bawar area in Patibila union.

Hundreds of truckloads of sand are being lifted from the spot using excavator every day, putting the nearby croplands, river-protection dam, roads and other structures and trees at risk, they also alleged.

According to the Sand Quarry and Soil Management Act, 2010, no sand can be extracted from rivers, canals, ponds and other waterbodies within one kilometer of any road, culvert or other structure.

However, some local influential in Patibila union -- Touhid Sheikh, Tito, Farukh Ahmed, Ibrahim Hossain, Liton Hossain, Mithu, Roshan Ali and Ala Uddin -- have been lifting sand without adhering to the law.

Visiting the spot recently, this correspondent observed excavators were engaged in illegal sand extraction on the riverbank.

Ziarul and Kabir Hossain, two workers who were lifting sand using excavator, said Mithu owns the machines.

The extracted sand is sold for different development works including filling up of low-lying lands, and construction works, they also said.

About 100 truckloads of sand are being lifted every day, and each truckload of sand is sold for Tk 2,500-3,000, they added.

Wishing anonymity, a local said sand lifting must be done from a designated sand quarry with the government's approval.

Farooq Hossain, who also owns excavators, said, "We know our activities are illegal. Many others are also running their machines here. We have been lifting and selling sand after managing officials concerned of the administration. We provide sand to different government-run development works at low cost."

Contacted, Chougachha Upazila Nirbahi Officer Sushmita Saha said policemen were sent to stop illegal sand lifting after receiving complaint in this regard.

Legal action will be taken against those involved, she added.

No scope to delay polls

Says Workers Party

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Workers Party of Bangladesh, a key ally of the recently ousted Awami League government, yesterday said that there is no scope to delay the next election.

They said timely election is mandatory to kick start a new democratic process.

In a statement issued yesterday, the party's politburo responded to the Chief Advisor's address to the nation, highlighting the urgency of holding elections.

"The immediate past government failed to create a fair electoral process. Due to the absence of fair elections, there is now a strong public demand for one," the statement said.

The party stressed that democratic political

Would have gone myself if not for my two children: Pori Moni

Pori Moni, who is one of the most vocal actresses in the country and a humanitarian by her own merits, has recently made a heartfelt plea to the nation, urging everyone to support those affected by the devastating floods that have ravaged parts of Bangladesh.

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

While Pori Moni initially planned to visit the affected areas herself, she decided against it due to concerns for her two young children. Instead, she sent a team with essential supplies, including clothes, medicine, and food, to those in need.

"My heart aches for the flood victims," Pori Moni shared with The Daily Star in an exclusive interview. "These people are suffering through no fault of their own."

Pori Moni, who was always seen supporting the underprivileged, explained her decision to send a team rather than visit personally, citing concerns for her children. "With two small kids at home, I couldn't take the risk of travelling to the flood-hit areas."

However, the actress assembled a team of ten people who travelled to the affected regions to distribute aid. "My main concern was ensuring the assistance reached those who needed it directly. The team has been staying with the victims, providing clothes, medicine, and food."

Although initially hesitant to speak publicly about her efforts, the Swapnajaal famed actress decided to share her story to inspire others, who can come forward to help those in need. "I didn't want to make this public, but then I thought, if people see what I'm doing, it might encourage them to help as well. If I were a flood victim, I would be desperate for any kind of assistance."

She continued, "This is not the time to sit at home. We must all stand by the flood victims and offer whatever support we can, no matter how small."

The actress also expressed her admiration for the students and people who have been actively collecting and distributing aid at Dhaka University's Teacher-Student Centre (TSC). "The student community has shown incredible spirit in gathering supplies and standing by the flood victims. This is the true essence of Bangladesh—everyone rushing to help in times of need."

Amid these challenging times, Pori Moni took a brief respite to celebrate her son Shahim Mohammad Punyo's second birthday in the Sundarbans, far from the ongoing unrest. Reflecting on the celebration, she said, "After the recent mass movement, we've all been through some tough days. I wanted to celebrate my son's birthday in a special way. Although I initially planned to invite journalists and close friends, we ended up having a quiet celebration in the Sundarbans."

She described the experience as deeply memorable. "In the Sundarbans, we explored the jungle, and my son and I had a wonderful time together. We even had matching outfits made, and Punyo was so happy. These are memories that will last a lifetime."

Despite the joyous occasion, Pori Moni faced criticism after sharing photos from the celebration. Addressing the negativity, she remarked, "No matter how much good you do, there will always be a small fraction of people who will criticise. But the majority, I would say 90%, will say positive things. If we focus on the negativity, we won't be able to move forward."

Reflecting on the state of the nation, Pori Moni acknowledged the gravity of the recent events, "The recent mass movement felt like an uprising. We've only gained independence once, and uprisings might have happened before, but it has happened successfully now. The credit goes to the students. My respect goes out to those who lost their lives, and may their souls rest in peace. We will never forget their sacrifice."

As for her professional life, Pori Moni is cautious about returning to work. "I'll think about resuming work once the current political situation calms down. For now, I'm waiting for a more peaceful environment. The projects I've already worked on will be released soon."

Zayed Khan shocked by lawsuit

A lawsuit was filed against 50 people on Sunday, including three celebrities: Zayed Khan, Shariar Nazim Joy, and Sazu Khadem. The charges stem from an alleged attack on the motorcade of BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia at the Fakirapool intersection in April 2015.

Upon discovering the news, Zayed spoke to the Daily Prothom Alo, from Canada, where he expressed, "I am shocked. The abrupt involvement of my name in this false case is deliberate."

In response to the case, he stated, "Every artiste is entitled to their political beliefs; they should be personal and subjective. However, I have never engaged in anything improper or controversial."

Bangladeshi short film 'Darkak' wins award at Shimla Int'l Film Festival

Zayed Siddiqui directorial short film Darkak has earned the Special Critics' Award at the 10th Shimla International Film Festival, India.

The festival took place from August 16 to 18 at the historic Gaiety Theatre Cultural Complex in Shimla, Himachal Pradesh, India, where Siddiqui personally received the award on its concluding day.

Previously, Darkak also vied for the Best International Short Film Award at the festival.

On August 18, the award-winning filmmakers were honoured during the closing ceremony by the festival's chief guest, Himachal Pradesh Governor Shiv Pratap Shukla, according to a press release issued by the production company.

Adding to its success, Darkak has secured global distribution deals with Australia-based Screen Scope and US-based Seven Palms Entertainment, expanding its reach to international audiences.

Cases against Hasina

According to the case statement, Manju joined the protest called by the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement on the road in front of Borobari Bazar on July 20. When some of the accused, being instructed by others, attacked and shot at the protesters, Manju suffered bullet wounds and died.

In Rangpur, another murder case has been filed against Hasina, along with 29 others, over the death of Merajul Islam, a fruit vendor, during the student movement on July 19.

Merajul's wife, Nazmim Islam, filed the case with the Metropolitan Magistrate Court. The court directed Kotwali Police Station to investigate the matter alongside the ongoing investigation into the incident, reports our Dinajpur correspondent.

Quader, Asaduzzaman, former inspector general of police Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, former Commissioner of Rangpur Metropolitan Police Md Moniruzzaman and former DIG of Rangpur Range Abdul Baten were among the accused.

Meanwhile, a case has been filed against 30 named persons, including M Iqbalur Rahim, a former AL lawmaker of Dinajpur-3 (Sadar) also a former whip of Jatiya Sangsad, over the death of a student during a protest in Dinajpur on August 4.

Faridul Islam, brother of deceased Rabiul Islam Rahul, filed the case with Dinajpur Sadar Police Station, accusing 300/400 unidentified persons too.

Rahul, 17, a student at Raniganj Ahiya Hossain School and College in Sadar upazila, received bullet wounds during a protest on August 4. He died from his injuries on August 10.

Prof Niaz also served as the Bangladesh Country Representative of the International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN).

Roadmap for transition

He said the chief adviser hinted at some reforms, but those cannot be implemented in a short time.

Fakhrul, however, expressed optimism that things are moving in a positive direction for the benefit of the people.

He said Yunus correctly stated that the timing of the election is a matter of political decision. "It will surely be a political decision. But for this decision to be made, the government needs to engage in discussions with political parties and politicians."

He hoped that the chief adviser would soon begin talks with the political parties.

Jatiya Party (Zafar) organised the discussion at the Jatiya Press Club, marking the ninth death anniversary of its founder Kazi Zafar Ahmed.

On Sunday evening, Yunus in his address to the nation assured that a free, fair, and participatory election would be arranged after completing necessary reforms in the administration, the judiciary, the Election Commission and electoral system.

Fakhrul yesterday said the BNP aims to give the interim government the opportunity to perform its duties.

He said people will not accept a return to the previous situation when they had lost all their rights.

"So, we are waiting with patience, and the people are waiting. But it must happen within a reasonable time. I believe that within this reasonable time, there will definitely be an election and a government will be formed by the people."

Fakhrul appreciated Yunus for his remark that the interim government will create an environment where no one would be able to turn the country into a police state.

"This is exactly what we have always wanted... If they do this, we will fully support their efforts."

He said Yunus assured that justice must be ensured for all extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances. "This is what we want, and we repeatedly state that this justice must be served."

Fakhrul said the interim government must withdraw the false cases filed against BNP and other party leaders and activists filed during the Awami League regime.

"We have seen in the newspaper reports that cases against the chief adviser and an adviser have been withdrawn... We hope that the 145,000 cases against us will also be withdrawn immediately."

Supporting the chief adviser's statement on police reform, Fakhrul said they want the police to be transformed into an ideal force for the people. "We want it to happen very quickly."

He said students along with the ordinary people thwarted an attempt by a group of Ansar members to create chaos by laying siege to the Secretariat. "It's an ominous sign as the defeated forces are trying to undermine the victory of the people by hatching conspiracies."

He called upon the people to stay alert to such plots.

Fakhrul urged different aggrieved groups of people to have patience and refrain from laying siege to the Secretariat and other government establishments.

He also urged the students not to create situations with unnecessary use of force that could disrupt administrative functions.

"We have seen that students in some schools and colleges are putting pressure on teachers to resign. There are proper procedures for this; you can lodge complaints, and if proven, action will be taken. But teachers should be allowed to continue their work."

He said people in the administration who supported and aided the ousted AL government, and were involved in killings are still holding their posts.

"We don't want to see their faces anymore. Please remove those individuals as soon as possible and bring in patriotic people who want to work and those who have been deprived. Ensure that the administration is run by them. Otherwise, the nation will not forgive you for this." Fakhrul said.

Asif sends U-20s

Earlier, Bangladesh had taken the lead in the 35th minute when Rabby Hossain Rahul raced into the box down the left flank to drive a low shot that was mishandled by India custodian Priyansh Dubley, with forward Asadul Molla driving the rebound home.

India dominated the second half and created at least five chances but Bangladesh's captain and first-choice-keeper Mehedi Hasan Srabon made a couple of saves before he had to leave the pitch due to an injury in the 69th minute.

Asif looked confident right away but could not stop a left-footed shot from Ricky Meetei Haobam in the 75th minute from a scramble followinga poor clearance from the Bangladesh defenders.

Bangladesh were reduced to 10 men just a minute before the final whistle, with defender Kamacai Marma Aky picking up his second yellow card. However, Asif and the penalty takers showed their mettle to help achieve Bangladesh's initial target of playing in the final, where they will take on Nepal on Wednesday.

"I want to thank the players who performed with their willpower and inner instincts because the opponents were India, who have always been a difficult side, especially against Bangladesh," Maruful said at the post-match press conference.

"India played matured football, creating a lot of chances," the UEFA A licenced coach said. "For us, everything was in the right direction after taking the lead but there one thing that is our national crisis (going defensive) -- the players must learn to play attacking football after taking the lead.

"We are now hopeful about the final against Nepal, who are a strong opponent on their home ground but we are optimistic about play a good match against them," Maruful said.

objection from the court and the prison authorities," said Farhad.

Rajib, a blogger and activist of the Gonojagoron Mancha movement, was hacked to death on February 15, 2013, near his home in the capital's Mirpur.

He was the first victim of a series of similar attacks on secular writers and bloggers at that time.

A Dhaka court in the case handed death penalties to two people, life-term imprisonment to another, and five-year imprisonment to Rahmani on December 31, 2015.

The convicts other than Rahmani had vowed to kill "atheist bloggers" after reading Rahmani's books and listening to his sermons, the investigation officer said in the charge sheet. They targeted Rajib "for his blog posts under the pseudonym 'Thabababa'".

Rahmani earlier came out of Kashimpur High-Security Jail on January 21 after securing bail in five cases. He was arrested two days later in connection with another case after police, citing a suspected member of the Al Qaeda-linked group, alleged that Rahmani had started plotting sabotage immediately after his release.

Kazi Nazrul was born on 11 Joishttha, 1306 Bonggabdo in the village Churulia, West Bengal of India's Bardhaman district. His father's name was Kazi Faqeer Ahmed and mother was Zahida Khatun. His nickname was 'Dukhu Mia'.

The nation got inspirations from Nazrul's poems and songs during the great Liberation War in 1971 and all other democratic movements and struggles.

Nazrul wrote nearly 3,000 songs and composed many of them which are known as Nazrul-Geeti or Nazrul Sangeet.

After the independence of Bangladesh, Nazrul was brought to Dhaka from Kolkata along with his family.

The family was given a home in Dhanmondi.

the birth of Lord Sri Krishna.

Professor Yunus expressed his vision for a Bangladesh where everyone can practice their faith without fear and where religious sites, like temples, do not need to be guarded, said a press release sent by the chief adviser's office.

"Our responsibility is to safeguard the rights of every citizen. It is our duty to ensure justice for all," the chief adviser told Hindu leaders at State Guest House Jamuna.

"There can be no divisions among the people of our country. We are all equal citizens, and this interim government is committed to protecting the rights of every individual," he added.

Hindu leaders, in turn, greeted the chief adviser on the auspicious occasion, sharing that they had prayed for the harmony and prosperity of the nation, as well as for the success of the interim government.

They also noted that Janmashtami celebrations had been suspended in flood-affected regions, and they had focused on sending food and relief to those areas instead.

The Hindu leaders praised Prof Yunus's recent comments at the Dhakeshwari temple, stating that his words would contribute to fostering a non-communal society and ensuring religious harmony across the nation.

During the meeting, the issue of land grabbing, including the seizure of property belonging to Hindu temples, was raised by the leaders.

Among the Hindu leaders present were Kajal Debnath and Monindra Kumar Nath of the Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Unity Council, Charu Charan Brahmachari of ISKCON, Basudeb Dhar and Santosh Sharma of the Bangladesh Puja Udjapon Parishad, and Priti Chakraborty, chairperson of Universal Medical College and Hospital.

Suspend co-op treaty with Israel

Media groups call on European Union

Some 60 media and rights organisations yesterday urged the European Union to suspend a co-operation accord with Israel and impose sanctions, accusing it of "massacring journalists" in Gaza.

"In response to the unprecedented number of journalists killed and other repeated press freedom violations by the Israeli authorities since the start of the war with Hamas, Reporters Without Borders (RSF) and 59 other organisations are calling on the European Union to suspend its Association Agreement with Israel and to adopt targeted sanctions against those responsible", the groups said in a joint statement.

The call came ahead of a meeting by EU foreign ministers in Brussels on August 29.

US polls debate in the balance as Trump cries foul

AFP, Washington

A much-anticipated US presidential debate next month appeared in doubt yesterday as Republican candidate Donald Trump questioned whether he would participate, and both camps sparred over the use of live mics.

Trump had already balked at participating in the September 10 showdown with Democratic candidate Kamala Harris, amid ongoing quibbles.

On his Truth Social media platform Sunday, Trump accused TV broadcaster ABC of bias, posting: "I ask, why would I do the Debate against Kamala Harris on that network?

Harris's campaign yesterday said that the two camps were locked in disagreement over whether each candidate's mic would be muted when the other spoke.

During a June 27 debate on CNN between Trump and President Joe Biden, who was the Democratic candidate at that time, microphones were turned off when it was not a candidate's turn to speak.

It was a condition negotiated by Biden, and one that was meant to apply to the September debate on ABC as well.

But Harris, who replaced Biden after his disastrous performance at the CNN debate, prefers a return to the norm of keeping microphones on.

"We believe both candidates' mics should be live throughout the full broadcast," Harris communication director Brian Fallon said in a statement.

Morality law will be 'gently' enforced

Says Afghanistan's Taliban govt

AFP, Kabul

Afghanistan's Taliban authorities said yesterday a recently ratified morality law would be enforced "gently", after the international community and Afghans voiced concern over new restrictions.

Women must cover completely and not raise their voices in public, according to a 35-article law announced Wednesday by the justice ministry.

It imposes wide-ranging stipulations from behaviour to dress and social interactions, including rules on men's clothing and beard length as well as bans on homosexuality, animal fighting, playing music in public and non-Muslim holidays.

The UN, rights groups and Afghans have expressed concern that the law could lead to increased enforcement of the rules, many already informally in place since the Taliban authorities took power in 2021 and implemented a strict interpretation of Islamic law -- or sharia.

"I must make it clear that force and oppression won't be used while implementing these rules," said deputy government spokesman Hamdullah Fitrat in a voice message he shared with AFP.

Israel losing its deterrent power

Says Iran amid heightened regional tensions, praises drone and missile assault by Lebanon's Hezbollah group

AFP, Tehran

Iran yesterday praised the drone and missile assault by Lebanon's Hezbollah group on Israel, saying its arch-foe had lost the ability to prevent such attacks amid heightened regional tensions.

Hezbollah leader Hassan Nasrallah on Sunday said the group, which is backed by Tehran, had launched a large-scale attack on Israel, targeting "the Glilot base -- the main Israeli military intelligence base".

Iran's Parliament Speaker compared the attack to the "defeat" of Israeli forces in 2006 war with Hezbollah

Israel's military said the installation was not hit.

"The Zionist regime may be able to hide, distort or censor some facts regarding Lebanese Hezbollah operations, but it knows very well that the existing facts will not change," Iran's foreign ministry spokesman Nasser Kanani posted on X.

"The Israeli terrorist army has lost its effective offensive and deterrent power and now must defend itself against strategic strikes."

Kanani noted that the Hezbollah attack "extended deep into the occupied territories", and said the "strategic balance has undergone fundamental changes" to the detriment of Israel.

He also criticised the United States for its "comprehensive" support for Israel, which had failed to "predict the time and place" of Hezbollah's actions.

Parliament Speaker Mohammad Bagher Ghalibaf on Sunday compared the attack to the "defeat" of Israeli forces in the 2006 war with Hezbollah.

"Today's defeat of the regime was on a par with the defeat in the 2006 operation, and they cannot hide this defeat," he posted on X.

Israel on Sunday launched air strikes into Lebanon, saying it had destroyed "thousands" of Hezbollah rocket launchers and thwarted a major attack.

In a televised address, Nasrallah said his group had carried out a two-phased attack, first launching "340 Katyusha rockets" at 11 military positions in northern Israel and the annexed Golan Heights.

Hezbollah militants have traded near daily cross-border fire with Israel since the offensive began in Gaza on October 7.

Fears grew of a wider regional conflagration after the killing of Hamas political chief Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran and Hezbollah commander Fuad Shukr in Beirut.

Iran and its allies Hamas and Hezbollah have accused Israel of being behind both killings and vowed to seek revenge.

Iranian Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi posted on X late Sunday that Tehran's reaction to Haniyeh's death would be "definitive, and will be measured & well calculated".

"We do not fear escalation, yet do not seek it -- unlike Israel," he added.

Big polluters urged to pay at Pacific summit

AFP, Nuku'alofa

Emissions-belching nations were challenged to stump up for climate-related damage as a key Pacific islands summit opened yesterday, with low-lying Tuvalu declaring: "If you pollute, you should pay."

The Pacific Islands Forum got underway in Tonga's capital Nuku'alofa, with leaders hoping to draw global attention to the region's worsening climate plight.

"We really need to ensure that we continue to push for action from countries that are the most polluting," Tuvalu Climate Minister Maina Talia told AFP on the sidelines of the summit.

"Polluter pays should be on the table."

Pacific leaders will mount a renewed push later this week for a climate adaptation fund, an idea that largely hinges on financial contributions from foreign nations. They will also push to speed the transition away from oil, gas and other polluting fuel sources.

"We cannot address climate change without addressing the root cause, which is the fossil fuel industry," Talia said. "It's disaster after disaster, and we are losing the capacity to rebuild, to withstand another cyclone or another flood," he added.

Took 'control measures' against Philippine ships

Says China amid row over a shoal in S China Sea

AFP, Beijing

China said yesterday it took "control measures" against two Philippine Coast Guard ships that had entered waters near the disputed Sabina Shoal in the South China Sea.

The China Coast Guard accused Manila of sending two ships to "illegally barge into waters near Xianbin Jiao", using the Chinese name for the Sabina Shoal.

The ships "continued to dangerously approach normally sailing Chinese coast guard ships, inciting hype", it said in a statement.

"The Chinese coast guard took control measures against the Philippine ships in accordance with the law," it added.

Beijing claims most of the strategic South China Sea and has been involved in maritime confrontations with Manila in recent months, sparking fears of armed conflict that could draw in the United States, a Filipino military ally.

Multiple confrontations have taken place in recent days around the Sabina Shoal, located 140 kilometres west of the Philippine island of Palawan and about 1,200 kilometres from Hainan island, China's nearest major landmass.

"The Philippine Government deplores the repeated aggressive, unprofessional and illegal actions displayed by Chinese maritime forces against Philippine vessels and aircraft over the past week," Manila's National Maritime Council said. Both sides have in recent months stationed coast guard vessels near Sabina, where the Philippines fears China is about to build an artificial island.

RIOTS IN BRITAIN

Pak court acquits man charged with cybercrime

REUTERS, Lahore

A Pakistani court yesterday acquitted a local man of cybercrime offences involving the spread of fake online information which fuelled riots in Britain, his lawyer said.

The riots began after false information circulated online wrongly blaming an Islamist migrant for the killing of three young girls in a knife attack in the northern English town of Southport in late July.

Farhan Asif, who ran a web publication, was arrested in the eastern Pakistani city of Lahore and charged last week by the country's Federal Investigation Agency (FIA).

"He has been absolved in the investigation," his lawyer Rana Rizwan Akhtar told Reuters TV, saying the investigation agency could not find any basis to prove that his client was involved in any illegal activity.

The court acquitted the accused after the agency submitted its report, he said. Asif had provided the agency with all of his social media accounts and access to all of his devices, he said. The accused had posted an article on his X social media account which said that the attacker was a Muslim immigrant, and also shared pictures of the killings, according to the case registered against him.

The riots have been characterised as "far right" by public figures from the prime minister downwards. For many people, this description suggests the disorder was somehow organised by named, specific, formal groups or political parties; and the far right's history of protest and violence by organisations like the National Front reinforces this idea.

Durov has 'nothing to hide'

Says Telegram after France arrest

AFP, Paris

France held the Russian-born founder of Telegram Pavel Durov in custody for a second day of questioning yesterday over alleged offences related to the popular messaging app, which insisted he had "nothing to hide".

His arrest after flying into the Le Bourget airport outside Paris late Saturday is the latest extraordinary twist in the career of one of the world's most influential tech icons.

The detention of Durov, 39, was extended beyond Sunday night by the investigating magistrate who is handling the case, according to a source close to the investigation. This initial period of detention for questioning can last up to a maximum of 96 hours.

When this phase of detention ends, the judge can then decide to free Durov.

Dr Yunus's address and the path forward

Must work together for democracy and reforms

In a much-awaited address to the nation, the chief adviser to the interim government, Dr Muhammad Yunus, delivered a timely, thoughtful, and comprehensive message to the citizens. He emphasised the need to implement various reforms to institutionalise democracy in the country, attending to the most pressing demands of our people. However, we would like to remind the interim government that it has not one but two urgent tasks at hand. The first is to administer the country in these turbulent times and, simultaneously, to pursue reforms—both of which together form a mammoth task.

Given the present state of the nation, the number of reforms needed may seem endless. However, pursuing all of them is neither realistic nor achievable in the short to medium term. Nevertheless, the chief adviser mentioned that his administration has planned wide-ranging reforms that resonate with the demands of the student-led mass movement that brought down the autocratic government of Sheikh Hasina. He further stated that these reforms are essential to prevent a return to being a police state, which would be a devastating outcome given the terrible suppression that people endured for 15 years and the sacrifices made by so many to end fascistic rule.

Dr Yunus also mentioned the need to form a police commission to overhaul law enforcement, a bank commission to reform the financial sector, and to conduct fair investigations into the violence that occurred in recent times. He also called for comprehensive reforms in education, the empowerment of local government bodies, and many other initiatives including taking action to ensure press freedom. The government's commitment to ensuring justice for all the extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances—both anathema to any civilised society—is also praiseworthy. We will, of course, have to wait to see results. Meanwhile, we will urge the government to undertake institutional reforms that can safeguard citizens from such egregious crimes in the future as well.

Dr Yunus mentioned that the issue of elections was a political decision, and that he would leave it up to the people. Here, we would like to commend him for reminding the nation where the power truly lies—with the people. He said that the advisers of the interim government would hold dialogue with political parties to determine how decisions regarding the holding of elections would be made. He also expressed a desire to involve all stakeholders in discussions about the interim government's tenure. But he did not make it clear how that could be achieved. Here, we believe the interim government needs to form a comprehensive framework for communicating with all stakeholders in society.

In his address, Dr Yunus also invited everyone to come forward and suggest guidelines to help the government gather their input. Therein lies the opportunity for civic engagement. Moving forward, we hope that the people will work together and help in ongoing efforts to ensure that this opportunity for reforming the nation is not squandered again.

Ansar-student clashes quite troubling

Govt must restore discipline in the force, address legitimate demands

Sunday's clash between demonstrating Ansar members and students is a deeply troubling development with potential security implications for the country. Reportedly, the clash occurred after the former kept all five gates of the Secretariat locked throughout the day despite government assurances of addressing their demands, including job nationalisation and abolishing the mandatory, unpaid leave system. Things turned violent around 9:20pm when a large crowd comprising students and general people responded to a call to free trapped officials, leading to at least 50 getting injured, before the army eventually intervened to restore order.

This is but the latest example of the chaos that surfaced across different sectors after the interim government took over on August 9. The frequency and intensity of protests by various interest groups have escalated to a point that police on Sunday night banned all sorts of demonstrations near the Secretariat and the residence of the chief adviser. The Ansar development is particularly alarming as it showed the lack of trust and discipline partly resulting from years of politicisation. One may recall how in 2023 a bill was tabled in parliament that would have given Ansar battalions—an auxiliary force—the authority to detain criminals, search bodies or seize goods, turning them into a parallel police force. The role of Ansar in the bloody clashes that preceded the fall of Awami League also left deep scars within this 55,000-strong force.

There are three branches of Ansar: General Ansar, Battalion Ansar, and Village Defence Party (VDP). Their demands for job nationalisation, rooted in grievances over low pay and lack of benefits, have been brewing for some time. But Sunday's development cannot be seen just as a reaction to the failure to address those grievances. After the incident, Nahid Islam, the information and broadcasting adviser, stated that continued demonstration even after government assurances was "part of a conspiracy". The director general of Ansar and VDP went as far as to say those who protested and clashed were not Ansar members, labelling them "outsiders" with ulterior motives. Investigations are currently under way. Already, 377 Ansars were sent to jail in four cases after being taken to a Dhaka court on Monday, while nine senior officials were transferred. We hope the probe into their activities will unearth any potential conspiracy and lead to actions to restore discipline within the force.

But that doesn't take away from the need to fulfil the legitimate demands of general members of Ansar. The formation of a seven-member committee to examine their demands is a positive step, but it must be followed by concrete actions. The authorities also need to take stern action to prevent such security meltdowns from recurring. Given what has occurred surrounding the Ansar force in recent times, we feel a comprehensive review of the internal situation in the force has become essential. It must be done with an aim to reduce our vulnerability to such incidents in our security landscape in the future.

Stabilising prices is the immediate priority

FAHMIDA KHATUN

As the new interim government is trying to settle down, expectations are soaring. People are eagerly waiting to see how the government will address their immediate needs, especially providing respite to the poor, low-income, and fixed-income middle-class people who have been suffering from the devastating effects of high inflation for over two years. Continuous high inflation but no increase in wages and salaries have eroded their purchasing power. Many have also used up their savings to survive due to the high cost of living.

According to Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS) the point-to-point inflation rate in Bangladesh was 11.66 percent in July 2024 compared to 9.69 percent in July 2023. The non-food inflation has gone up as high as 14.10 percent in July 2024 from 10.42 percent in July 2023, according to BBS. The increase in electricity prices several times also pushed the non-food inflation rate to 9.68 percent in July from 9.15 percent in July 2023.

Inflationary pressure is being felt severely in the face of wage growth declines. The above-mentioned BBS report indicates that wage growth of low-paid and unskilled workers declined to 7.93 percent in July 2024 compared to 7.95 percent in June 2024, though inflation increased from 9.72 percent in June 2024 to 11.66 percent in July 2024.

The former government failed to take effective measures to contain high inflation. Bangladesh Bank (BB) was reluctant to use monetary policy tools to control inflation and continued to impose a cap on both lending and deposit rates from April 2020 to June 2023, even though the inflation rate was much higher than the fixed lending rate. Later, BB introduced a reference lending rate—the six-month moving average rate of treasury bills (SMART), which failed as it did not follow the reality of the market and was not supported by appropriate fiscal policies.

BB's decision to withdraw the interest rate cap and make it a market-led rate in May 2024, taken at the suggestion of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), could not bring any positive results till now due to late adoption. The new governor of the BB has indicated that the policy rate will be increased further to tame inflation. In May 2024, the BB hiked the policy rate to 8.5 percent from 8 percent in January 2024. The policy rate, which is the rate at which commercial banks can borrow money from a country's central bank, was kept the same in the Monetary Policy Statement for July-December 2024. With the intention to increase the policy rate, the governor of BB has signalled the upcoming interest rate hike in commercial banks to the market, thereby slowing down the increase in the money supply to fight inflation.

FILE VISUAL: STAR

However, the monetary policy alone cannot contain inflationary pressure and must be implemented with a coherent fiscal policy. The government followed an expansionary policy without any effort to reduce administrative and operational costs and wastage during difficult times. The budget deficit for the FY2025 was kept at 4.6 percent despite high inflation and suggestions from economists. To meet its expenditures, the previous government continued to borrow from commercial banks alongside BB as overdraft. In FY2023, the government borrowed about Tk 98,000 crore from the BB. Before the outgoing governor of BB was appointed in early July 2022, the limit for overdraft for the government from the bank was Tk 6,000 crore. However, upon his appointment, the previous governor increased the overdraft limit for the government to first Tk 8,000 crore and then to Tk 12,000 crore. However, the previous governor continued to cross this limit. The government borrowing high-powered money from BB has contributed to high inflation.

The other reason for high inflation is the imperfect market mechanism and the dominance of a limited number of importers, sellers, and producers. High import prices are frequently blamed for high domestic prices, as Bangladesh relies on fuel and other essential commodity imports. High fuel prices, transportation, and logistical costs impact locally produced items. Besides, the taka has depreciated by about 27 percent from July 2022 to June 2024, which has also increased prices.

International prices have been declining for many months. However, consumers do not see much reduction in the prices of both imported and domestic commodities. There is a large difference in prices at production, wholesale, and retail levels, even if there is no dearth of essential commodity supply in the market. The prevalence of middlemen in the supply chains who take a margin of the price, as well as a weak logistics network, contributes to higher prices.

However, the existence of various malpractices contributes the most to high prices. Rent-seeking by organised groups, including local goons, often belonging to the political party in power, and members of law enforcement agencies collecting money from vehicles carrying products from various districts to the marketplace are common. The creation of artificial shortage of certain commodities by syndicates has been widely discussed. Such unethical practices increase the market prices of commodities which the consumers ultimately bear. Unfortunately, the previous government turned a blind eye to these malpractices as the government existed with support from corrupt individuals and groups.

The recent severe floods in several districts of Bangladesh have taken many lives while affecting thousands of people. The floods have affected agricultural production in the flood-affected districts, and, due to supply shortages, prices of goods have increased exponentially.

While the government has announced that it would focus its efforts in helping the flood-affected people, their food security has to be at the forefront. Unfortunately, the budget for fiscal year 2025, as announced by the previous government, cut the distribution plans for food grains, despite high food inflation. Therefore, food distribution programmes must be enhanced through open market sales (OMS) and food-friendly programmes. The government must also increase cash support to the vulnerable.

As the interim government is committed to undertaking reforms, increasing transparency in the pricing system of goods should be a major concern. Bangladesh Competition Commission (BCC), which plays a crucial role in supervising the price of commodities, should augment its efforts and develop an all-encompassing database on the prices of all commodities across the nation, spanning from the farm to the market. Close surveillance and oversight are needed for effective market regulation in order to maintain control over commodity pricing. BCC should regularly monitor the behaviour of dominant market players, examine instances of market manipulation, and take appropriate action. The Competition Act, 2012 should explicitly tackle the problem of monopolies in the market and provide clear antitrust laws. Individuals who breach the norm should be subjected to legal consequences. Therefore, measures towards inflation control have to be a multi-dimensional and collaborative process.

Legal reforms crucial for justice and fairness

Abdur Razzaq

ABDUR RAZZAQ

Sheikh Hasina's rise and clinging to power for 15 long years were through certain processes—however flawed those may be—but her fall was quite dramatic. August 5 marked our freedom from the Hasina-led Awami League dictatorship, which comprised of suppression, oppression, and merciless persecution. A new era has begun thanks to the supreme sacrifices of our young generation in particular, and the people in general. It is now the sacred duty of the entire nation to preserve and protect this newfound freedom not only for the present generation, but for future generations as well.

The interim administration, led by Nobel laureate Professor Dr Muhammad Yunus, faces far greater challenges than any of the past caretaker administrations did, starting with the first one led by Justice Shahabuddin Ahmed in 1990. On August 18, while meeting foreign diplomats and international agencies, Dr Yunus expressed his intention to reform the election commission, the judiciary, civil administration, security forces, and mass media. The list is long but it is far from exhaustive. The interim government has other things to do as well, such as holding the perpetrators of crimes to account, including financial crimes, and above all, the trial of Sheikh Hasina for committing Crimes Against Humanity (CAH) under the International Crimes (Tribunal) Act, 1973.

The 1973 act, even with its several amendments, is an outdated one. It has been heavily criticised by the international community, including Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International, International Bar Association, the UK Bar Association, and the European Union for falling far below the international standard. In my capacity as Chief Defence Counsel of the 10 opposition politicians who were indicted under the 1973 act (five of whom were executed), I am fully aware of the international community's criticism.

> The parliamentary committees under the full control of the party in power have become non-functional. In a parliamentary democracy, the opposition has a very important role to play. Under our constitution, winners take all. Ideally, we need to begin our new journey with a balanced constitution.

The last nail in the coffin of the act is the very recent UK Supreme Court's verdict on it. In view of the matter, it won't be advisable to proceed with the trial of Sheikh Hasina either in her presence or in absentia with the act as it is. The trial process will not be acceptable to the international community and will rightly face a barrage of criticism.

However bleak Hasina's record may be, the interim administration's objective should not be to exact revenge but to establish rule of law. Hence, this law should be updated to the international standard. Moreover, CAH being a very complicated area of law, it is crucial that the prosecution team is be well-versed in it.

The greatest contribution of the administration would be to clean up the rotten political system, and put an end to divisive politics. Perhaps more importantly, it should open up our decade old political system to new ideas, so that educated and patriotic young people find it comfortable to enter politics and contribute to nation-building. Unhealthy student politics should be cured by national consensus.

The present constitution has become unworkable. By amending it with their brute majority, the Awami League has changed certain sections of the constitution in alignment with their party manifesto. In any event, so much power has been given to the prime minister under the constitution, and so little to the president, that a Roman emperor would envy the powers of the former instead of the latter.

The parliamentary committees under the full control of the party in power have become non-functional. In a parliamentary democracy, the opposition has a very important role to play. Under our constitution, winners take all. Ideally, we need to begin our new journey with a balanced constitution.

This administration certainly does not have the mandate to frame a new constitution for which we need a national consensus. Once a national consensus is reached, a constituent assembly needs to be elected by the people to frame a constitution within a particular period, say within 120 days. After the new constitution has been framed, the constituent assembly needs to be dissolved, and a fresh election should be held for the re-establishment of parliament.

Here, the political parties need to make sacrifices. They have to put the country before their party. Bearing in mind the 15 long years of oppression, misrule, and misuse of powers, we can reasonably expect our political parties to act purely in the nation's interests in this critical juncture of our history.

It is unfortunate that the country which produced leaders such as Shaheed Suhrawardy and AK Fazlul Haque has now become leaderless. In the early days of our independence, the late Abul Mansur Ahmad, who was an Awami Leaguer all throughout his life, used to advise and criticise the Awami League and its leadership, both privately and publicly. We do not have such a wise politician amongst us now, leading to our civil society being divided along party lines.

Finally, this administration is not yet free from external and internal existential threats. This administration matters to each and every Bangladeshis. We cannot and must not allow it to fail.

DISCOURSE OF FLOOD

Power, politics and people

Pavel Partha,
an ecology and biodiversity conservation researcher, is director at Bangladesh Resource Centre for Indigenous Knowledge (BARCIK). He can be reached at animistbangla@gmail.com.

PAVEL PARTHA

August saw simultaneous heavy rain and cloudburst in Northeast India, Tripura, Assam and Meghalaya. Subsequently, water overflowed as the gates of hydropower project, barrages and dams were opened. The upstream flow crossed the danger level at 14 points in seven transboundary rivers of Bangladesh. Many flood-control embankments, including the one on Gomati, have collapsed. Feni, Cumilla, Noakhali, Khagrachhari, Habiganj, Chandpur, Cox's Bazar, Munshiganj, Sylhet, Lakshmipur, Chattogram, and Brahmanbaria have flooded. Twenty people have died, while more than five million have been affected, we have no information about livestock and wildlife.

This whole event has started a debate on whether the August floods are natural or politically-caused. Such a question is incorrect because all disasters have both natural and political aspects.

The main cause of the August flood is excessive rainfall in a short period. We witnessed similar floods recently in Sylhet, Sunamganj, Bandarban and even in Dubai. Climatologists maintain floods due to excess rain and meteorological droughts are impacts of climate change. Scientists have also proven that global warming is exacerbating the climate crisis and rich countries with their fossil fuel-dependent neoliberal, consumerist economies and systems are mainly responsible.

The connection between the August floods and the climate crisis is, in no way, apolitical. Floods are political irrespective of India's action of opening gates of power plants, dams, and barrages because the global politics centring the climate is a given. Besides, the unresolved joint river management undertakings between India and Bangladesh are also part of political discourse.

Also, the recent floods have given us a message that whether it rains or not, the avenues for water from upstream to downstream to flow naturally have, over the years, decreased. As rivers and wetlands have been filled up, many canals disappeared, and floodwater, finding no space to flow, spreads all around, inundating the land and caused waterlogging.

A crisis of prediction and preparedness?

For a long time, we have been raising questions about disaster forecasting and preparedness. Lack of will, proactivity and accountability in providing forecasts and warnings has come to the fore many times. The practice of indigenous traditional forecasting—along with preparing for hazards by analysing cloud patterns, wind speed, temperature variations, constellations or various activities of flora and fauna—is now rare. The state never recognised the subaltern knowledge in the mainstream disaster management.

Mostly the Meteorological Department's forecasts are primarily considered now. Moreover, its information does not translate equally across the country, classes, gender and professions. For example, "danger signal-8" does not mean the same thing in coasts, haors, hills and Barind tracts. Besides, we see no early warnings or effective forecasts when haors are severely submerged by flash flood or when Barind tracts are scorched by severe droughts. Interestingly, the Met is under the defence ministry, as the state considers forecasting and warnings to be a "defence" aspect.

Since Cyclone Sidr in 2007, forecasts relating to cyclones have been regularly broadcast. After Cyclone Aila in 2009, forecasts and disaster preparedness became more structured. Previously, disaster broadcasts were disseminated through radio, television, newspaper, and loudspeakers or flag-pulling at the local level. During cyclones Bulbul, Fani, Amphan, Jawad, Roanu, Yaas, Sitrang and Midhili, online platforms and social media are also played an important role in cyclone warning. Besides the Met office, many independent meteorologists and organisations are providing forecast information too.

However, the tradition of disaster preparedness varies across the country with its diversified geography and culture. A social narration of forecasting and disaster preparedness has developed relatively well in the coasts—not in all the 19 coastal districts, but predominantly in the Satkhira-Khulna region. In the Northeast's haors, especially in Sunamganj, Kishoreganj and Netrakona, people only prepare for disasters to harvest paddy in Boro season. In the north, the people of Kurigram, Lalmonirhat, Nilphamari or Gaibandha have many local pre monsoon preparedness. Haors face disaster risks in March-April, coastal areas in May-June and November, and other parts of the country in monsoon. But floods in August are a new phenomenon, at least according to the elders of Feni, Noakhali, Khagrachhari and Cumilla.

So, was there no prediction or advance early warning for the current flood? There was, both before and after the July uprising. At the beginning of August, the Meteorological Department of Bangladesh forecasted short-term floods in north, north-central and southeast regions. It pointed to heavy monsoon rains as the cause. According to the Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre of Water Development Board, the waters of seven transboundary rivers were flowing above the danger level. Even the outgoing head of state, at the beginning of July, relayed the possibility of floods. The South Asian Climate Outlook Forum predicted them way back in April.

Even after so many predictions, why weren't our preparations strong enough? I think, the present government had virtually no time to prepare in advance, as many things happened at incredible speed after the uprising. At the same time, India delayed in giving comprehensive advance warning of excessive rainfall and floods. This is a breach of previous transboundary river management related commitments and agreements.

Transboundary river dictatorship

In 2005, when we identified the haor problem as a transboundary crisis, there wasn't a large enough movement on this issue. People in general opposed the Farakka barrage, there were expectations regarding sharing Teesta's water, and some were against the Tipaimukh dam.

I tried to understand the transboundary crisis by visiting the common river-basin villages and towns of Bangladesh and Northeast India. Additionally, I have regularly written about the crises in downstream Bangladesh due to the construction of large dams upstream, hydropower projects, roads, bridges, ecological destruction, deforestation, and harmful mining works in the border hills. In 20 long years, I haven't found any vibrant voices who started now "anti-India" protests by bringing up August floods.

The National River Conservation Commission listed 1,008 rivers in the book Bangladesh Nod-Nodir Shonga o Shonkha, published in 2023. The Water Development Board has divided the country's rivers into 17 hydrological regions and identified 57 rivers as common transboundary rivers. However, many more transboundary rivers like Mahadeo or Ganeshwari (Rongdi) are still out of the list. In almost every Trans boundary Rivers and streams, India has built large dams, hydroelectric projects or structures, or blocked the flow of inter-state water flow through different development project or encroachment and pollution. This transboundary dictatorship is endangering not only downstream Bangladesh but also upstream people's lives, wildlife and ecology.

This dictatorship is contrary to international agreements and commitments on transboundary river management. The Bangladesh-India Joint River Commission, formed in 1972, has not yet taken all the necessary decisions about all transboundary Rivers and surrounding water ecosystem. In the 1996 Ganga Water Sharing Treaty, both India and Bangladesh are responsible for equitable and transparent management of the river. According to the United Nations Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD1992), states cannot carry out activities that endanger the biodiversity of neighbouring countries. In the 38th meeting, meeting of the Joint River Commission held in 2022, it was decided that India would inform Bangladesh about floods at the right time. As we have seen in the August flood, people did not have ample opportunity to take preparation for saving lives and property because the authorities concerned have failed to inform on time.

Flood trauma and water justice

A state's one-sided, authoritarian stance on transboundary rivers inflicts severe disaster and flood-trauma on the people of other states. At the same time, water retention and control from upstream create public discontent in downstream townships. And the narrative to fight for river-democracy and water justice gains momentum.

In 2019, the High Court ruled that rivers are living entities. But both the state of Bangladesh and also India's neoliberal system and colonial attitude do not treat rivers as living entities. Both states chop up rivers, control them by force, and engage in plundering. Although Bangladeshis marched against Farakka barrage, the state of Bangladesh supported the Kaptai dam, which displaced one lakh people from their birth place, submerging homesteads and farmland. Forget the upstream, the downstream is also being butchered, as Bangladesh has also imprisoned rivers through barrages, embankment, encroachment, and pollution.

While there is debate over the release of excess water stored in reservoirs, such incidents are taking place on a smaller scale right inside the country. The rubber dams built on Sukh river in Thakurgaon or Khasiamara in Sunamganj or Ganeswari in Netrakona wrong the villagers living both upstream and downstream by trapping water in dry season or releasing it in monsoon.

While voices from Bangladesh claimed that the opening of India's barrage gates is the cause of August flood, at the same time Bangladesh also had to open the gates of Kaptai Hydropower plant due to overflow. There are many more examples of such water-injustice with the people of upstream and downstream by the river-killing development systems. In 1985, Bangladesh built a dam on Feni river. In 2021, the Maitri Bridge built by India on Feni was inaugurated. Meanwhile, India also constructed the Dumboor dam on Gomati river, which is dangerous, evident by its collapse during the recent floods. All this while, in the name of sand trade, Gomati has been mutilated in Bangladesh.

All these river-killer events profess our anthropocentric development philosophy centring rivers. Neither state has yet stood for the free flow of all kind of water bodies including river. So, it is important to present this philosophy to demand water justice in joint river management discourse. People should urge that all dams and structures be removed from upstream to downstream of transboundary rivers. Water's essence is to flow from top to down, cloud to soil, from upstream to downstream, without any hindrance from the authoritarian powers that be.

Navigating energy efficiency for Bangladesh's energy security

Shafiqul Alam
is lead analyst of Bangladesh Energy, at the Institute for Energy Economics and Financial Analysis (IEEFA)

SHAFIQUL ALAM

According to the International Energy Agency, a fundamental tenet of energy security is having a steady supply of energy at reasonable prices. Between 2009 and 2024, Bangladesh primarily focused on scaling up power infrastructure, while efforts to develop energy resources fell short. The country's exposure to the volatile international fossil fuel market increased during this time, leading to challenges in maintaining a steady energy and power supply. Soaring tariffs amid inflationary pressure in the last two years made energy less affordable to the low and lower-middle-income groups.

The government's efforts in the last one and a half decades contributed to economic growth; however, the road ahead is still bumpy, with fuel imports likely to spiral, which in turn might worsen the country's energy security.

At this time, it would be prudent to change the highly import dependent energy model. With different energy-consuming sectors providing significant energy efficiency (EE) opportunities, Bangladesh's approach to accelerating energy security should include EE at its core. Going forward, enforcing EE policy instruments and creating a favourable ecosystem for them to thrive in will be all-important to promote EE. Bangladesh's energy efficiency and conservation master plan up to 2030 shows viable EE and conservation potential of 21 percent and 28.8 percent in the industry and household sectors respectively. However, a 10 percent efficiency gain on grid electricity consumption could lessen the country's power demand between 1,500 megawatts (MW) and 1,700 MW (based on day and evening peak power demands during April to July 2024). Demand management could offer a multitude of benefits, such as the immediate demand for capital-intensive and large fossil-fuel-based power plants, the country can use freed-up resources to bring down T&D losses. This investment appears timely, given that the country registered T&D losses of around 10.3 percent in fiscal year (FY) 2022-23 against the global average of less than eight percent. Analysis by Institute for Energy delay or lessen the investment in new and large fossil-fuel-based power plants, and minimise fossil fuel import bills on the back of reduced demand for power.

Usually, Bangladesh has competing priorities in the power sector. It feels the burgeoning pressure to consistently invest in incremental power generation capacity and to improve transmission and distribution (T&D) systems. As EE provides relief by delaying Economics and Financial Analysis (IEEFA) concludes that a one percent improvement in T&D losses will reduce the country's energy generation needs by 884 gigawatt-hours (based on FY2022-23 data). This will help avoid oil import bills worth Tk 12.38 billion ($106.3 million) per annum (assuming the average fuel cost of producing electricity from oil-fired plants is Tk14/kilowatt-hour).

Moreover, industries and households display a notable gas-saving opportunity. IEEFA's study substantiated that EE in industrial captive power generation can reduce liquefied natural gas (LNG) import bills of $460 million per annum. EE in industrial processes demonstrates additional gas-saving potential. Likewise, due to billing systems for gas burners in most households not accounting for consumption quantity, people often exhibit wasteful gas consumption behaviours. If such behaviours are rectified through raising awareness, it could contain spiraling gas consumption and result in substantial national resource savings.

While EE can optimise energy consumption and accelerate energy security, Bangladesh needs to focus on policy enforcement to achieve the desired results.

The energy audit regulations (EAR), issued in 2018 and revised in 2024, specify guidelines for performing energy audits and the certification of energy auditors and managers. Furthermore, the Sustainable and Renewable Energy Development Authority (SREDA) declared 189 enterprises as large energy consumers (designated consumers) that are mandated to carry out energy audits and submit periodic reports.

A logical progression should ensure that designated consumers carry out energy audits and submit reports to the SREDA periodically. However, this step will only generate data on the EE potential of audited consumers and can at best motivate some consumers to implement a few energy-saving measures. Instead, setting up annual or periodic energy-saving targets for designated consumers will guide them towards EE for compliance purposes. SREDA should crosscheck the annual EE results of designated consumers and prescribe corrective measures to underperforming consumers.

The government could consider increasing energy savings targets of the designated consumers and enlarge their base. Verification and proper enforcement of EAR will encourage industries to establish a systematic energy management practice to achieve the highest level of efficiency.

On the other hand, the Bangladesh government issued the EE labelling regulations in 2023, laying the foundation for assessing the minimum energy performance standards (MEPS) of different appliances. Energy efficiency labels should be introduced, based on MEPS, to help consumers make informed decisions while purchasing lights, fans, air conditioners and other appliances.

Once labels for appliances are available, the Bangladesh Standards and Testing Institution should regularly monitor the market to phase out appliances that do not meet the MEPS.

Energy-efficient refrigerators and air conditioners with inverters are already costlier than their counterparts without inverters. As the FY2024-25 national budget has imposed higher minimum import duties on imported compressors that have inverters, consumers will find energy-efficient refrigerators and air-conditioners more expensive. The government should revisit the duty imposed on imported compressors with inverters and develop an ecosystem to encourage the use of efficient appliances. Once the country achieves adequate manufacturing capacity to meet local demand, the government could reimpose such duties.

If the country builds on its strong EE potential, it can reduce imported energy dependence and utilise monetary savings to upscale clean energy and enhance energy security. Furthermore, higher energy prices make the investment in EE expedient.

Striking the balance between living alone and a full-time career

If you want to maintain consistently satisfactory job performance and aim for promotions, you need to strike a difficult, but not impossible, balance. Here are some simple ways you can do so.

SHAMS RASHID TONMOY

If you're living alone, whether by choice or circumstance, balancing a full-time job with the myriad of responsibilities of household management, finances, and personal care can be a tough ordeal. If you want to maintain consistently satisfactory job performance and aim for promotions, you need to strike a difficult, but not impossible, balance. Here are some simple ways you can do so.

ILLUSTRATION: ZARIF FAIAZ

Maintain a routine
Household chores can pile up fast, especially when you're pulled to a random meeting at the last minute. As such, creating a solid routine for everyday tasks, for both home and office, can help relieve pressure on yourself. Allocate specific time slots for cleaning, paying the bills, and conducting self-care activities like exercising and recreation. For instance, set a day each week, preferably a weekend, for grocery shopping. Set two-three weekdays each week for quick house cleaning and at least one weekend for a more thorough cleaning of your living space.

Prepare meals in advance
Cooking, despite its sheer importance, is one of the most time-consuming tasks on any given day, given how it involves shopping and preparing for ingredients as well. As such, if you buy in bulk on weekends and dedicate two-three days per week to making a lot of food at once, you can avoid the daily stress of cooking after a long workday. However, be sure to refrigerate properly after each meal, and cook only as much as you need.

Careful financial management
While financial management is a skill everyone should have, it is especially important when living alone. The salary you are getting is being used to pay for your rent, bills, groceries, travel, and any other expenses in between. You can use the 50-30-20 budgeting strategy here; keeping 50% of total income to pay the bills, 30% for things you want to buy, and 20% for savings. However, keep the allocation flexible in case you need to save more or spend less in a given month.

Be patient with yourself
At the end of the day, even your best efforts might not always be enough to achieve a perfect balance. In those moments, take a deep breath, step back, and prioritise self-care. Don't overwhelm yourself with more responsibilities than you can realistically manage. When needed, ask friends and family for advice, or even reach out to experts for more professional help. Recognising the steps needed for self-care is a big sign that you are ready to thrive in both your personal and professional life.

Australians can now ignore work calls outside office hours

REUTERS, Sydney

Australians can now enjoy their personal time without the intrusion of work-related communications, thanks to a new "right to disconnect" law that came into effect on Monday. This legislation protects employees, in most cases, from being penalised for not responding to work emails, calls, or texts outside of their official working hours.

Supporters say the law gives workers the confidence to stand up against the steady invasion of their personal lives by work emails, texts, and calls, a trend that has accelerated since the Covid-19 pandemic scrambled the division between home and work.

Australians worked on average 281 hours of unpaid overtime in 2023, according to a survey last year by the Australia Institute, which estimated the monetary value of the labour at A$130 billion ($88 billion). The changes add Australia to a group of roughly two dozen countries, mostly in Europe and Latin America, which have similar laws.

To cater for emergencies and jobs with irregular hours, the rule still allows employers to contact their workers, who can only refuse to respond where it is reasonable. Determining whether a refusal is reasonable will be up to Australia's industrial umpire, the Fair Work Commission (FWC), which must consider an employee's role, personal circumstances, and how and why the contact was made.

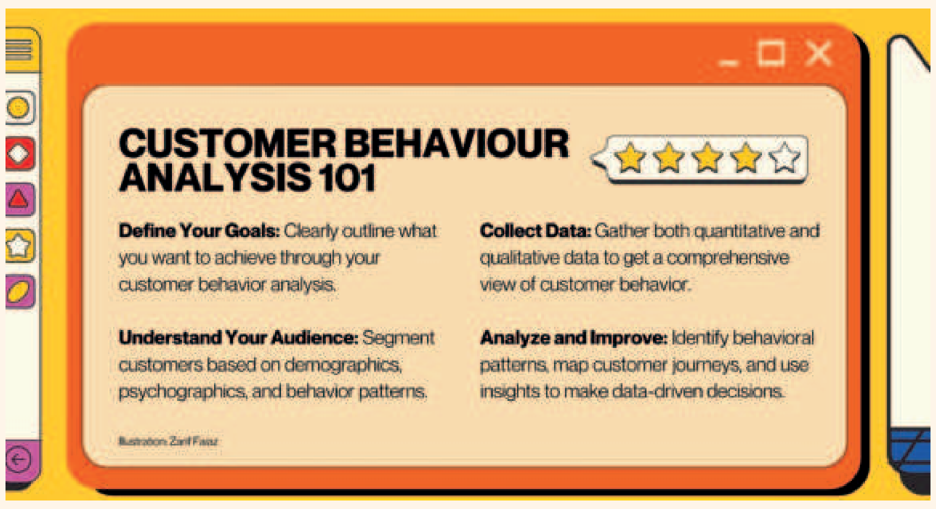
How to conduct a customer behaviour analysis the right way



CUSTOMER BEHAVIOUR ANALYSIS 101

Define Your Goals: Clearly outline what you want to achieve through your customer behavior analysis.

Collect Data: Gather both quantitative and qualitative data to get a comprehensive view of customer behavior.

Understand Your Audience: Segment customers based on demographics, psychographics, and behavior patterns.

Analyze and Improve: Identify behavioral patterns, map customer journeys, and use insights to make data-driven decisions.

Illustration: Zarif Faiaz

Understanding customer behaviour is crucial for improving products, marketing strategies, and overall satisfaction. Conducting a customer behaviour analysis involves several key steps.

Define your business goals
Begin by defining your goals and desired outcomes. Determine what you want to understand about your customers and set key performance indicators (KPIs) to measure success, such as improving the customer journey or increasing conversion rates.

Segment your audience
Segmenting your audience involves categorising customers based on shared characteristics like demographics, psychographics, and behaviour patterns. Identifying your most valuable customer segments helps tailor your marketing strategies to meet their specific needs.

Collect quantitative and qualitative data
Gather both quantitative data (e.g., purchase history, website visits) and qualitative data (e.g., customer surveys, interviews). This combination provides a comprehensive view of customer behaviour, explaining both how often customers buy a product and why they prefer it.

Analyse customer journeys
Map out customer journeys to identify stages from initial awareness to purchase and post-purchase interactions. This analysis highlights key touchpoints and areas for improvement.

Identify behavioural patterns and trends
Examine behavioural patterns and trends over time to spot consistent behaviours among different customer segments. Understanding these patterns helps inform decisions about inventory management, marketing initiatives, and product development.

Apply findings to improve customer experience
Use insights to make data-driven decisions, such as personalising marketing campaigns and optimising product features. Regularly update and refine your analysis to stay attuned to evolving customer needs and preferences.

Microsoft launches unified Teams app for both personal and work use

NEXT STEP DESK

Microsoft has just launched a unified Teams app that supports both personal and work accounts on Windows 11, Windows 10, and Mac. This new version eliminates the need for separate apps, which previously confused users who had to juggle between 'Microsoft Teams (free)' for personal use and 'Microsoft Teams (work or school)' for professional or educational purposes.

According to a recent blog post by Amit Fulay, Vice President of Product at Microsoft, the new Teams app will allow users to manage all their accounts from a single platform. Whether you're using a personal, work, or education account, they can now be accessed side by side within the same app. Users can switch between accounts by selecting their profile picture in the upper right corner of the app.

With the new unified app, users can now choose their preferred account when joining a Teams meeting or even join as a guest without signing in. This is particularly beneficial for those who frequently switch between personal and work-related calls, says Fulay. Furthermore, users who prefer Teams for personal use can schedule free meetings, invite participants with a join link, and create communities for group interactions.

What you should know about Pavel Durov, Telegram CEO

NEXT STEP DESK

Pavel Durov, the billionaire founder and CEO of the instant messaging app Telegram, was reportedly arrested on the evening of August 24 at Bourget Airport near Paris, according to French media outlets TF1 TV and BFM TV, which cited unnamed sources.

TF1 and BFM both said the investigation focused on a lack of moderators on Telegram and that police considered that this situation allowed criminal activity to continue undeterred on the messaging app.

Here are some things you should know about Pavel Durov and Telegram:

Russian-born Durov, 39, is the founder and owner of messaging app Telegram, a free-to-use instant messaging platform that competes with other social media platforms such as Messenger, WhatsApp, Instagram, TikTok, and WeChat. The platform aims to surpass one billion active monthly users within a year.

Telegram is influential in Russia, Ukraine and the republics of the former Soviet Union. It has become a critical source of information on Russia's war in Ukraine, used heavily by both Moscow and Kyiv officials. Some analysts call the app "a virtual battlefield" for the war.

Telegram's increasing popularity, however, has prompted scrutiny from several countries in Europe, including France, on security and data breach concerns. In May, the EU tech regulators said they were in touch with Telegram as it neared a key usage criterion that could see it subject to more stringent requirements under a landmark EU online content legislation.

Durov, whose fortune was estimated by Forbes at $15.5 billion, left Russia in 2014 after refusing to comply with government demands to shut down opposition communities on his VKontakte social media platform, which he sold.

Durov became a French citizen in August 2021. He moved himself and Telegram to Dubai in 2017, and according to French media, he has also received United Arab Emirates citizenship. He is also a citizen of St. Kitts and Nevis, a dual-island nation in the Caribbean, according to media reports.

"I would rather be free than to take orders from anyone," Durov told U.S. journalist Tucker Carlson in April about his exit from Russia and search for a home for his company, which included stints in Berlin, London, Singapore and San Francisco.

Cautious batting, skillful bowling behind Tigers' Pindi triumph, say coaches

Exceptional performances from both batting and bowling units, coupled with some fantastic catching and astute captaincy catapulted Bangladesh to a history-making 10-wicket win over Pakistan in the first Test in Rawalpindi on Sunday. In three days' time, Bangladesh will be looking to clinch their maiden Test series win over Pakistan when they take on the hosts in the second Test at the same venue. On Monday, Bangladesh's batting coach David Hemp and pace bowling coach Andre Adams spoke with The Daily Star's Samsul Arefin Khan, shedding light on their convincing win and what they hope to achieve in the following match. Here are the excerpts:

The Daily Star (TDS): How do you see the pace unit's performance in the historical Test win over Pakistan?

Andre Adams (AA): I'm incredibly proud. If you look at our last Test performance against Sri Lanka, they were certainly under par. I think there are certain ways to win Test matches. We felt that the way we played in the first Test gave us the best opportunity. And credit to our bowlers as they won it for us at the end. The pacers were fresh in the second innings thanks to the batters and were able to strike and bowl with pace. I think our first innings bowling was pretty good. I think Shakib (Al Hasan) bowled brilliantly. Mehedi (Hasan Miraz) was also amazing. The pace bowlers were excellent in both innings and really challenged the Pakistani batsmen, made it difficult for them. I thought the fields (Najmul Hossain) Shanto set in the second innings were spot on. So that was a very good game.

TDS: What do you feel was behind the bowling attack's success in the match?

AA: The thing about this group is they are incredibly skillful. I look at the batting and bowling group and think if they can play their part, they can put pressure on most teams. We have a very young bowling line-up. The Bangladeshi people should be incredibly proud of that performance and they should also be pretty excited about the young bowling group coming through.

TDS: How challenging will it be for the pacers to maintain consistency in Tests?

AA: That's the focus for every coach. Consistency might be the most used word in coaching. We try to help the guys understand how they can be more consistent. When you look at Mushfiqur (Rahim), the standard he sets on and off the field, that's a living example on how one has to do to be world class. It's always wonderful to have such an example, that kind of beacon to walk towards. That's the kind of desire, discipline and hunger we want to see day in day out.

TDS: How do you view the 'pace revolution' in Bangladesh cricket?

AA: Well, it's been a couple of years in the making. I think as a group they want to get better. They have to work hard off the field, do things to get fitter, stronger and faster. But the main thing with fast bowling is to bowl the right ball in the right moment. That's something you can learn. The more leadership we get in the bowling group, the more chance the young guys will have to learn faster. So, it's pretty good when you do well on a flat wicket. We have the pace to cause some uncertainty, we have the skill to bowl the right ball at the right time. The guys are learning every day. They want to get better and they have that desire. The competition in the fast bowling group is a great thing for Bangladesh cricket. It's a good headache for everyone.

TDS: What will be Bangladesh's plan in the second Test, where a draw or win will earn them their maiden Test series win over Pakistan.

AA: I don't know what sort of wicket we will get for the second Test. I don't know how much the plan will change. This is a country where you have to be patient in Test matches. I don't see the plans changing too much from the blueprint of the previous game. The plans could change if they (Pakistan) change their playing XI.

TDS: It looked like you guys had specific plans for Babar Azam, can you share that?

AA: I can't share the plan (laughs). Obviously, Babar is a great player and you have to be clear about what you want to do to get him out early. You have to pay attention to guys like Babar and (Mohammad) Rizwan, who can take the game away from you.

The Daily Star (TDS): What a fantastic performance from the players, pulling off their maiden Test win over Pakistan, that too on Pakistan soil...

David Hemp (DH): When you play a Test match, you have to play well every day. That's why it's so difficult to win Test matches. Hats off to the players. We showed great energy and consistency on the field, kept supporting the bowlers in taking wickets, some of the catches that were taken were excellent, coupled with the batting and bowling. That was a really good win. The trick is now to turn up and do it all again in three days' time.

TDS: Bangladesh's first inning score of 565 was their best ever total against Pakistan in Tests, what was catalyst behind it?

DH: The batting effort was all about discipline and having the mentality of leaving the ball and not worrying about taking singles, not focusing too much on going for boundaries but still looking to score and keep the scoreboard ticking along.

TDS: What was the plan of the batting group before the match?

DH: What we talked about before the game was how we could set up the game from a batting point of view. Traditionally in Pakistan, the games go to the fifth day. If the bowlers keep bowling in a straight line challenging the stumps, for the batters it becomes a matter of not getting bored, taking singles and making sure you don't play across the line. From the batting point of view, we talked about putting ourselves in a position from where we can win the game. We spoke the importance of surviving the first 20-30 balls to get into the innings. Once you get yourself settled with 30-40 runs, you can make the innings count, try and go on to convert that to a significant score. We wanted to bat for a minimum of 125 overs.

TDS: Do you think the lengthy preparation Bangladesh took for the series helped?

DH: Obviously, there was a little bit of disturbance for a couple of weeks before we came here because of what was going on in Bangladesh. But up until that stage, the preparation was excellent. After the Sri Lanka series, we had a discussion about what we can do better against different oppositions in different wickets. The red-ball camps while the white-ball players were away worked really well and then the HP team playing in Australia and the 'A' team playing in Pakistan certainly assisted in the individual preparation. I think that had a positive impact on the team preparation.

TDS: Shadman Islam returned to the side in place of injured Mahmudul Hasan Joy and hit a brilliant 93. Having two performers for one position is a good headache to have, right?

DH: Sometimes it can obviously be a bit of a headache [laughs]. That means a difficult conversation. But you would rather have a difficult conversation because there is a lot of competition for spots than not have any conversations at all. If everybody plays well consistently and to their potential, I think the selectors and head coach will have a lot of tough decisions to make.

TDS: Shakib Al Hasan's batting form has been poor for a while. Is he now being considered as more of a spinner than an outright all-rounder?

DH: After watching him practice, my personal opinion is he is still driven to succeed and perform with bat and ball. He missed out on the first innings but from whatever I have seen from him in practice and preparation, he is certainly driven to perform and do well in both skillsets. So, I personally don't see that as a concern or an issue.

SHORT CORNER

'On-field, Shakib has nothing else on his mind'

Shakib Al Hasan's mentor and current Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) director Nazmul Abedeen Fahim was not surprised by the left- arm spinner's bowling performance on Day 5 of the first Test against Pakistan, saying his former pupil's ability to keep out all outside noise sets him apart. "He [Shakib] has nothing else on his mind. He only thinks about the batter and where to bowl. He may worry about those things at other times, but not while he is bowling. This is what separates him from others. We see others struggling to play their natural game after some incidents or facing criticism. That's not the case for Shakib," Fahim told the media in Mirpur yesterday.

Bangladesh, Pakistan lose WTC points for slow over-rate

Pakistan and Bangladesh have suffered a blow to their chances of reaching the ICC World Test Championship final after they were found guilty of a slow overrate during the first Test in Rawalpindi. Hosts Pakistan were found to be six overs short during the Test and lost six World Test Championship points, while visitors Bangladesh - who recorded a 10-wicket triumph over their Asian rivals - were docked three points after being found three overs short of the acceptable rate.

I'm speechless, says Endrick after landmark goal

Endrick made his official Real Madrid debut in style. Spanish champions Real Madrid earned a 3-0 win over Real Valladolid in La Liga on Sunday and the Brazil teenager Endrick, who replaced Kylian Mbappe late in the match, needed only 10 minutes to become the youngest foreign player to score for Madrid in the Spanish league at 18 years, 35 days, surpassing Frenchman Raphael Varane, who was 18 years, 152 days when he scored in 2011. "I'm speechless. I can only thank God for all that is happening to me," he said after the match.

'True gentleman' Eriksson dies at 76

AFP, London

Prince William hailed Sven-Goran Eriksson as a "true gentleman" as tributes poured in following the former England manager's death on Monday.

Eriksson passed away surrounded by his family after revealing in January he had "at best" a year to live after being diagnosed with terminal cancer.

The 76-year-old Swede was the first foreign manager of England, taking them to the World Cup quarter-finals in 2002 and 2006, while reaching the same stage at Euro 2004.

As well as his colourful five-year spell with England, Eriksson managed several of the world's top clubs and countries during 42 years in the dugout.

In his role as president of the English Football Association, Prince William met Eriksson on many occasions.

"Sad to hear about the passing of Sven-Goran Eriksson. I met him several times as England manager and was always struck by his charisma and passion for the game. A true gentleman of the game," he wrote on X.

Although Eriksson was unable to end England's wait for a first major trophy since the 1966 World Cup, his teams produced several memorable performances, including a 5-1 rout of Germany in a World Cup qualifier in 2001.

After stepping down from the England job in 2006, Eriksson managed Manchester City in the 2007-08 season and the Premier League club joined the tributes to their former boss.

Local coaches deserve recognition and opportunities

SPORTS REPORTER

The likes of Mushfiqur Rahim and Mominul Haque were already going through their gears in the Bangladesh Tigers camp as early as May 26, preparing for the upcoming Test assignments. The camp, held under the guidance of local coaches, played a significant role in Bangladesh's preparations, even as unrest in the country presented obstacles.

While the national team have worked with local coaches for months, the players only began training with the foreign coaching contingent after moving to Pakistan.

Following Bangladesh's historic victory in the first Test in Rawalpindi on Sunday, questions surrounding head coach Chandika Hathurusingha's tenure were reassessed. Yet, the contributions of the local coaches in the country are never paid their due credit.

When spinner Mehedi Hasan Miraz seeks advice, he turns to Bangladesh Tigers' camp head coach Sohel Islam, who has also mentored Miraz in the national side as a spin coach. Others, such as Mizanur Rahman Babul, have guided players during the camp and are currently overseeing the Bangladesh 'A' side in Pakistan. Local coaches are, more often than not, shunned, with barriers often preventing them from becoming part of the national coaching staff.

PHOTO: STAR

Under the Nazmul Hassan Papon-led board, the lack of experience of local coaches had been frequently highlighted as a key factor behind their exclusion. Yet, players often rely on coaches like Mohammed Salahuddin and others in grassroots coaching to better understand their game.

After the win in Rawalpindi, Mushfiqur Rahim paid tribute to the local staff who prepared them in Dhaka, Sylhet, and Chattogram.

"I just want to share a few things from before the Test series. There was a two, two-and-a-half-month gap, right? So we had a pretty special camp back home with the Bangladesh Tigers camp, and all the local support staff were there. That was really beneficial for all the players in their preparation," he said.

The question remains as to how to strengthen the local coaching base. Nazmul Abedeen Fahim, mentor to many national team stars and now a Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) director, believes the contributions of local coaches need to be highlighted.

"I feel that the media are responsible for this too. The media never highlights these things. Maybe we don't do as well. By 'us', I mean the board doesn't appreciate it. The media do not highlight the areas where local coaches are contributing. I feel that whatever contributions are made, regardless of magnitude, should be recognised; it's very important.

"Appreciation is needed for those who are doing good work. The fact that they have been working for a long time has its effect," Fahim said.

As time goes by, BCB's task will be to put words into action and ensure that local coaches receive the credit they deserve, not only through recognition but also through opportunities to work and improve.

Cases against Hasina keep mounting

She is made accused in 2 more murder cases

STAR REPORT

The number of cases filed against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina has risen to 66, with two new cases filed in Gazipur and Rangpur yesterday.

The cases include 56 for murder, seven for crimes against humanity and genocide, two for abduction, and one for attack on the BNP procession.

In Gazipur, Hasina, along with Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader and 83 others, were sued over the death of one Manju Mia, 43, during a student protest in Borobari area on July 20.

Former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, former lawmaker Tipu Munshi, former minister Mashiur Rahman Ranga, Gazipur city Awami League President Azmat Ullah Khan were among the accused.

Insar Ali, the father of the deceased, filed the case with Gacha Police Station, accusing 500-700 unnamed individuals as well, Ziaul Islam, officer-in-charge of the police station, told our local correspondent.

Having conceded the equaliser six minutes after coming off the bench, substitute goalkeeper Mohammad Asif made amends with two big saves as Bangladesh beat defending champions India 4-3 in penalty shootout in the second semifinal of the SAFF U-20 Championship in Nepal yesterday. The regulation time had yielded a 1-1 draw.

Bashundhara Kings' young goalkeeper Asif blocked Akash Tirkey's fifth shot with his outstretched right leg as Maruful Haque's charges burst into wild celebration at the ANFA Complex in Lalitpur.

The final save came after the young goalkeeper had saved the first shot from Thanglalsoun Gangte while Bangladesh's Piash Ahmed Nova, Moinul Islam, Shakil Ahmed Topu and Ashraful Haque had converted all four of their attempts.

Over 70 killed in militant attacks

Baloch Liberation Army claims responsibility

REUTERS, Quetta

At least 73 people were killed in Pakistan's province of Balochistan when separatist militants attacked police stations, railway lines and highways and security forces launched retaliatory operations, officials said yesterday.

The assaults were the most widespread in years by ethnic militants fighting a decades-long insurgency to win secession of the resource-rich southwestern province, home to major China-led projects such as a port and a gold and copper mine.

"These attacks are a well thought-out plan to create anarchy in Pakistan," Interior Minister Mohsin Naqvi said in a statement.

The Baloch Liberation Army (BLA) armed militant group took responsibility for the operation they called "Haruf" or "dark windy storm". In a statement to journalists they claimed more attacks over the last day that have not yet been confirmed by authorities.

Pakistan's military said 14 soldiers and police and 21 militants were killed in fighting after the largest of the attacks, which targeted buses and trucks on a major highway.

Balochistan's chief minister said 38 civilians were also killed. Local officials said 23 of them were killed in the roadside attack after armed men checked passengers' IDs before shooting many of them and torching vehicles.

"People were taken off buses and killed in front of their families," Chief Minister Sarfraz Bugti said in a televised press conference.

Rail traffic with Quetta was suspended following blasts on a rail bridge linking the provincial capital to the rest of Pakistan. Militants also struck a rail link to neighbouring Iran, railways official Muhammad Kashif said.

Interim govt is on right track

Says Jamaat ameer

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Jamaat-e-Islami Ameer Shafiqur Rahman yesterday said Chief Adviser Muhammad Yunus's speech echoed the aspiration of the nation.

He said the interim government is on the right track. "Allah and the people will support him if they move forward this way."

The Jamaat chief came up with the remarks while talking to reporters at Dhaka Medical College Hospital after visiting students injured during the clashes between the students and Ansar members.

Shafiqur said, "The chief adviser gave a responsible speech, which was necessary at this moment. The nation needed to hear about hope. We think the speech echoed people's desire."

Regarding the movement of different quarters over their demands, Shafiqur said, "They [government] have just taken charge. Where have you [the protesters] been in the last 15 years? Since they have been patient then, we urge them to be patient for a little longer. Give them [the government] a chance to sort things out."

Israel orders fresh evacuation in Gaza

Displaced Palestinians flee Deir Al-Balah; truce talks in Cairo end without a deal

AGENCIES

Israel issued new evacuation orders for Deir Al-Balah in the central Gaza Strip early yesterday, forcing more families to flee, saying forces intended to act against Hamas and others operating in the area.

In recent days, Israel has issued several evacuation orders across Gaza, the most since the beginning of the 10-month offensive, prompting an outcry from Palestinians, the United Nations and relief officials over the reduction of humanitarian zones and the absence of safe areas.

The Deir Al-Balah municipality said Israeli evacuation orders have so far displaced 250,000 people.

Israeli military strikes killed at least seven Palestinians yesterday, medics said. Two were killed in Deir Al-Balah, where around a million people were sheltering, two at a school in the Al-Nuseirat camp and three in the southern city of Rafah, near the border with Egypt.

The military campaign has killed at least 40,435 Palestinians in Gaza, according to the Hamas-run territory's health ministry yesterday.

The new orders forced many families and patients to leave Al-Aqsa Hospital, the main medical facility in Deir Al-Balah, where hundreds of thousands of residents and displaced people had taken shelter, for fear of bombardments. The hospital is close to the area covered by the evacuation notice.

Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) said in a statement on X on Sunday night that an explosion approximately 250 metres away from the MSF-supported Al-Aqsa Hospital triggered panic, reports Reuters.

"As a result, MSF is considering whether to suspend wound care for the time being, while trying to maintain life-saving treatment."

Russia fires 200 missiles, drones at Ukraine

5 killed; energy facilities hit

REUTERS, Kyiv

Russia launched about 200 missiles and drones at Ukraine yesterday, killing five people and striking energy facilities nationwide, Kyiv said, while neighbouring Nato member Poland reported a drone had probably entered its airspace.

Power cuts and water supply outages were reported in many areas, including parts of Kyiv, as officials said the attack - 2-1/2 years into Russia's full-scale invasion - targeted power or other critical infrastructure in at least 10 regions.

Russia dramatically stepped up its strikes on the Ukrainian power grid in March in what Kyiv has said looked like a concerted effort to degrade the system ahead of next winter when people need electricity and heating most.

Yesterday's missile and drone salvo was Russia's most intense in weeks, coming as Ukraine is claiming new ground in a major cross-border incursion into Russia's southern Kursk region while Russian forces steadily inch forward in Ukraine's east, closing in on the transport hub of Pokrovsk.

"It was one of the biggest combined strikes. More than a hundred missiles of various types and about a hundred Shahed drones. And like most previous Russian strikes, this one is just as sneaky, targeting critical civilian infrastructure," President Volodymyr Zelensky said on Telegram.

ENFORCED DISAPPEARANCE

Govt sets up inquiry commission

It has to submit report in 45 days

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday formed a five-member inquiry commission to identify and find the people who were forcibly disappeared by various intelligence and law enforcement agencies between January 1, 2010, and August 5, 2024.

The formation of the commission comes three weeks after the toppling of the previous government, which had persistently denied reports of enforced disappearance and maintained that the victims went into hiding willingly to embarrass the authorities.

Bangladesh currently has no laws criminalising enforced disappearance nor has it ratified the United Nations International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance.

The country has now tasked retired High Court judge Justice Moyeenul Islam Chowdhury to lead the new commission that will investigate the circumstances under which people were forcibly disappeared by any law enforcement or intelligence agency.

These agencies include Bangladesh Police, the Rapid

UCB freed from ex-land minister, family's grip

2 more banks removed from S Alam's control

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The family of former land minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury Javed lost its grip on United Commercial Bank (UCB) yesterday as the Bangladesh Bank dissolved the lender's board of directors.

The dissolved 18-member board was heavily dominated by Saifuzzaman's family members, including his sister Roxana Zaman Chaudhury and relatives Anisuzzaman Chowdhury and Asifuzzaman Chowdhury.

Saifuzzaman's wife, Rukhmila Zaman, had been serving as chairman of the bank till August 16, when the bank reconstituted the board of its own accord in an attempt to keep a portion of Saifuzzaman's family onboard, industry insiders alleged.

The bank reconstituted its board again yesterday for the same reason just hours before the banking regulator dissolved the board, they added.

Over the years, Saifuzzaman has influenced various activities at the bank,

Major reshuffle in police force

3 top cops forced into retirement; 5 retired police officials reinstated

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

In a major reshuffle in the police force yesterday, three top police officials have been sent into forced retirement and five mid-ranking officials, who had been forced to retire by the Awami League government, have been reinstated.

Also, 24 district police superintendents were transferred to police units across the country.

The government also transferred 38 additional SP- and 14 assistant superintendent of police- (ASP) ranked officers from Dhaka Metropolitan Police to different police units, including in-service training centre, river police, and Rab.

How a family grabbed multiple banks

S Alam and his family bypassed rules cleverly in capturing seven banks and two non-banks

AHSAN HABIB

The Bangladesh Bank is supposed to protect customers' interests, but it did not do so when it permitted Mohammed Saiful Alam and his family to seize multiple banks and funnel enormous sums as loans.

Alam, the chairman of S Alam Group, and his family members used the central bank's special permission to unprecedentedly possess large shares of seven banks and two financial institutions despite prohibition by the Bank Company Act.

For example, they have a 30 percent stake in Islami Bank while the law caps such shareholding by a family in a bank at 10 percent. That allowed Alam's relatives to take a total of Tk 25,000 crore loans from the bank with far less investment in it, official data shows. The actual amount is believed to be more than three times the official figure.

The Alams are the only family in Bangladesh with all members and some of their relatives sitting on the boards of several banks simultaneously. They deftly captured the banks' shares as the central bank relaxed the rules for them.

Analysts and experts have condemned such a practice as "totally unacceptable and absurd", as it has put the banks, and the entire financial sector at risk.

The experts have been calling for efforts to reduce family control over the banks for a long time. However, their suggestion fell on deaf ears with the central bank bypassing rules to let Alam and his family strengthen their control over the banks.

All the members of the family were directors of different banks until last week when the

FLOOD RELIEF

Lack of logistics key obstacle

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Inadequate logistics continue to plague relief distribution along the eastern flank of Bangladesh that has been ravaged by the recent flood. Although the government has allocated food relief and cash -- 20,650 tonnes of rice and Tk 3.52 crore -- many among the 5.6 million flood victims of 11 districts are yet to benefit from it.

While the flood situation has improved in the absence of torrential rains in the eastern districts and water levels are subsiding, local administration and volunteers still find it hard to reach remote areas since they do not have enough boats. As a result, there is a strong demand for relief materials in deep pockets. Some of the officials have also complained of inadequate allocation of relief materials.

According to a daily update of the Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief, Chattogram was allocated Tk 35 lakh and 2,100 tonnes of rice, Feni was allocated Tk 62 lakh and 2,900 tonnes of rice, Cumilla, Noakhali and Sylhet were each allocated with Tk 45 lakh and 2,600 tonnes rice, Moulvibazar with Tk 30 lakh and 2,350 tonnes of rice, Habiganj with Tk 35 lakh and 2400 tonnes of rice, Brahmanbaria with Tk 15 lakh and 1,600 tonnes of rice, Lakkhipur and Khagrachhari with Tk 10 lakh and 500 tonnes of rice each, and Cox'sBazar with Tk 20 lakh and 500 tonnes of rice.

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Muhammad Yunus, the chief adviser to the interim government, has presented his vision with objectivity and assured his government's commitment towards the countrymen in his televised address to the nation, said eminent citizens.

The speech has met the expectations of the people, said Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh.

"Without any verbosity or rhetoric, Yunus, as expected of him, provided straightforward responses to a whole range of issues that have been agitating the minds of the people in the prevailing extremely challenging circumstances."

The speech strongly emphasised equality for everyone irrespective of any marker of identity and fundamental rights and justice without any form of discrimination.

"One could easily find in the speech a true articulation of the underlying spirit and aspirations of 'New Bangladesh' as pronounced by the unprecedented student-led people's movement."

Modi's tweet and a question

TANIM AHMED

In his recent tweet, Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi stated that while talking to US President Joe Biden, they spoke about Ukraine, and "also discussed the situation in Bangladesh and stressed the need for early restoration of normalcy, and ensuring the safety and security of minorities, especially the Hindus, in Bangladesh".

Not just Prime Minister Modi, the Indian foreign ministry's brief states that the two leaders "expressed their shared concern" about the situation in Bangladesh.

The two leaders hoped that "safety and security of the minorities, particularly Hindus, in Bangladesh" would be ensured.

Curiously though, the White House readout of the same telephone conversation does not even mention Bangladesh, which probably indicates that Biden's concern about the "situation" in this country is not as much as Modi had thought it to be or what his foreign ministry's statement makes it out to be.

The Indian prime minister had already spoken to Muhammad Yunus, the de facto Bangladesh prime minister, soon after his inauguration, and chose to take up this issue with the American president. He might have, instead, raised it with his counterpart in Bangladesh again, if he was still unsure whether the matter was satisfactorily resolved.

MY DHAKA

Understanding the 'Dhaka Dhakka' phenomenon

ASHIF AHMED RUDRO

Moving to a new city can be intimidating, and when it's Dhaka, there are bound to be some stories.

Cultural shock is a real thing and it can happen even within your own country. Moving to Dhaka comes with such experiences and instead of cultural shock, I like to call these -- "Dhaka Dhakka."

Here are a few things that are common in Dhaka, but usually surprising to the newcomers:

NOT KNOWING YOUR NEIGHBOUR

If you come from a rural area, chances are that you know almost everyone in your village.

Some people are even so well informed that they can tell you what their neighbour is cooking for dinner on any given day.

But this is hardly the case in Dhaka.

Unless you have been living close by for a long time, people in Dhaka barely know their neighbours. And in most cases, they do not have the time or the patience for it either.

IT'S ALIVE 24/7

Village markets get dizzy by 10:00pm. By 11:00pm, everyone is closing up.

In remote areas, late nights are quiet, desolate, and frighteningly dark. Dhaka is not bound by any such schedule.

Even at midnight, there are people on the roads, and many places are found buzzing at midnight, such as Nazirabazar.

Places like Karwanbazar and other wholesale markets in Dhaka are equally noisy in the middle of the night as they are at any other time of the day. Dhaka is alive every hour of the day and every day of the week.

NOBODY CARES ABOUT OTHERS

There are so many people in Dhaka and everyone is so busy with themselves that nobody has the time to sit back and care about what another person is doing.

In smaller cities and villages, you find that people will stop and stare. Some would even come up and inquire sometimes.

This happens more often in villages where individualism hasn't quite caught up yet and the concept of privacy is still alien. So, everyone is interested in someone else's business.

But in Dhaka, nobody has the time or interest to care about what others are doing.

LOVE FOR SLEEP

Sure, Dhaka is alive 24/7 and buzzing even at midnight, but the city loves to sleep more than anything else.

One can really feel that on weekends and other national holidays. While you might be used to people starting their day as early as possible back in your hometown, Dhaka reminds you that there is no need to rush into the day when it's your day off.

On workdays, Dhaka will surprise you with its millions of commuters and their dedication but on holidays, you can expect to start the day as late as possible. Even the shops will open late so you're better off sleeping.

'THERE'S A MARKET FOR THAT'

Remember that time when people used to say "There's an app for that?" Well, Dhaka is sort of like that.

If you are looking for something, there probably is a market for that somewhere in Dhaka.

From common items such as books and clothes to unique items such as antiques and paintings -- whatever you need -- there is a marketplace for that in Dhaka. All you have to do is ask around.

Digesting the "Dhaka Dhakka" can take some time. For those who are willing to embrace the city, it can happen fast.

But if you are scared by Dhaka, then it's not going to get any easier because Dhaka is many things, but forgiving is not one of them.

Erdoğan calls Yunus, promises aid for flood victims

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan congratulated Bangladesh Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus on assuming leadership of the interim government over a phone call yesterday.

During the call, President Erdoğan condoled the loss of valuable lives in the flood-affected areas of Bangladesh and said Turkey would provide humanitarian aid to the flood-stricken people.

Chief Adviser Yunus thanked the Turkish president, who is a long-time friend of the 2006 Nobel laureate.

He called for increased trade with Turkey and said Bangladesh would need Turkish investment in key sectors, including manufacturing, in which Turkey is a formidable global power.

President Erdoğan said he would soon send a high-powered delegation to Bangladesh in their efforts to help rebuild the country.

He invited the chief adviser to visit Turkey. Prof Yunus accepted the offer, saying he would visit the country at a convenient time.

The chief adviser also invited President Erdoğan to visit Bangladesh. He also accepted the offer.

Student returns from Assam after backlash on social media

STAR REPORT

A Bangladeshi student studying in India's Assam returned home on Monday as many people reacted angrily to her heart emoji reaction on an "anti-India" post on social media, PTI reported yesterday, quoting local police.

The student of the National Institute of Technology in Silchar requested the institution's authorities to allow her to return to Bangladesh, Cachar Superintendent of Police Numal Mahatta said.

The SP said the fourth-semester student of the electronic and communication department of NIT was sent back through the Integrated Check Post (ICP) at Sutarkandi in Karimganj district.

"This is not a case of deportation... She reacted with a love symbol in one anti-India post on Facebook by her senior and NIT Silchar alumnus who left India around six months back after completing his course. He now lives in Bangladesh," Mahatta said.

including approval of loans, according to the insiders.

The central bank constituted a five-member board for the bank, including two shareholder directors and three independent directors.

Sharif Zahir, chairman of National Finance, was made a shareholder director. Zahir is also the managing director of Ananta Group and a former vice-chairman of UCB.

Md Tanvir Khan, director of Eastland Insurance, is the other shareholder director.

Sajjad Hossain, former executive director of Bangladesh Bank, Yusuf Ali, former deputy managing director of Agrani Bank, and Obaidur Rahman, a chartered accountant, were named independent directors.

The new board was constituted to protect the interests of the depositors and ensure good governance as per section 45 of the Bank Company Act, 1991, read a letter from the central bank to the UCB managing director.

Saifuzzaman has acquired at least 260 properties in the United Kingdom, paying at least 134.76 million British pounds or Tk 1,888 crore, according to The Daily Star's calculation based on company filings that are publicly available on UK government websites.

The three-time Awami League lawmaker also has at least 537 mortgages against properties in the UK, a majority of which are in London.

Allegations are also rife about the former land minister using UCB for personal gain.

The Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit found that Saifuzzaman and Rukhmila have also amassed huge fortunes in the United States and Dubai.

Saifuzzaman is a relative of S Alam Group Chairman Mohammed Saiful Alam.

TWO BANKS FREED OF S ALAM

The S Alam Group's dominance over two banks, namely Global Islami Bank and Union Bank, was upended yesterday as the Bangladesh Bank dissolved their boards, which were heavily controlled by individuals linked to the conglomerate.

In recent days, National Bank, Islami Bank Bangladesh and Social Islami Bank have also been freed from the S Alam Group's clutches.

The central bank dissolved the 21-member board of Global Islami Bank and 11-member board of Union Bank, and appointed five independent directors for each.

Mohammad Nurul Amin, former managing director of Meghna Bank, has been appointed as chairman of Global Islami Bank's board following his selection as an independent director.

Similarly, the banking watchdog appointed Md Farid Uddin Ahmed as the chairman of Union Bank after selecting him as an independent director.

Ahmed is a former managing director of Islami Bank Bangladesh.

Founded in 1985 by Mohammed Saiful Alam, a relative of former Awami League politician Akhtaruzzaman Chowdhury Babu, S Alam Group has grown into one of the largest conglomerates in Bangladesh.

The banks have been facing huge deficits in their current account balances with the central bank for more than a year due to widespread loan irregularities and scams.

Govt sets up inquiry commission

Action Battalion, Border Guard Bangladesh, the Criminal Investigation Department, the Special Branch, the Ansar Battalion, National Security Intelligence, military forces, and the Directorate General of Forces Intelligence (DGFI).

The commission will provide descriptions of the incidents of enforced disappearance to the authorities concerned and make recommendations, according to a gazette notification of the Cabinet Division.

Relatives will be informed if the commission discovers someone forcibly disappeared, said the notification signed by Cabinet Secretary Md Mahbub Hossain.

It will also gather information from the investigation already carried out by any agency or organisation on the incidents of enforced disappearances.

The other four members of the commission are Justice Md Farid Ahmed Shibli, another former judge of the High Court, rights activists Nur Khan and Sazzad Hossain, and Nabila Idris, a teacher at BRAC University.

They will submit the report to the government after completing their investigation within 45 working days in line with the Commissions of Inquiry Act, 1956, under which the commission has been formed.

Sanjida Islam Tulee, coordinator of Mayer Daak, a platform for the families of victims of enforced disappearance, said, "The investigation process must be transparent and the report must not seek to hide any of its findings. A system must be set up for victims to submit evidence."

The AL's narrative regarding reports of enforced disappearances unravelled after the horrifying stories of people, who were confined to secret detention centres, became public following the dramatic fall of Hasina's government.

The victims of enforced disappearance began to speak out after their release from the secret facilities known as "Aynaghar". These victims come from different age groups and political and social backgrounds, but their narratives of the thick-walled, iron-door prison cells are strikingly similar. These facilities are notorious for their complete isolation, with detainees unable to see any light from the outside world.

Many of these were run by the DGFI. The agency's heads are reportable directly to the prime minister and the prime minister's security adviser.

At a meeting with the DGFI on August 6, a six-member team, including rights activists and a UN representative, demanded access to the detention facility. The team was allowed to visit the DGFI headquarters in Dhaka on August 7.

After coming out of the facility, rights activist Shireen Huq told families of some victims that the DGFI said there were no detainees in their Dhaka facility. The agency also said that they would form a joint commission to arrange visits for rights activists to 23 other facilities across the country to see if the victims of enforced disappearance were there.

Now demands are being made from the families of the victims, rights activists and different other quarters to put an end to such torture in confinement to Aynaghar-style facilities.

According to rights organisation Odhikar, at least 708 people were victims of enforced disappearance between 2009 and June 2024.

The US in December 2021 imposed sanctions on Rab and seven of its top officers over serious rights abuses. It said the Rab and other Bangladeshi law enforcement agencies were responsible for more than 600 enforced disappearances since 2009 and nearly 600 extrajudicial killings since 2018.

Major reshuffle in police force

Over the last one week, 13 top police officers have been sent into forced retirement in "public interest".

Many of these officials have been alleged to have used excessive force to suppress the student movement that toppled the AL government on August 5.

Much-talked-about names like Monirul Islam, additional IGP at Special Branch; Habibur Rahman, DMP commissioner; Atiqul Islam, additional IGP of police headquarters; Mohammad Ali Miah, CID chief; and Krishna Pada Roy, additional IGP of the Police Headquarters, were among those forced to retire.

Some of them have murder cases filed against them.

Police and home ministry sources said the changes were made as a part of measures to revamp the force that has been "politically used" for a long time.

"We have transferred the officials out of Dhaka as a part of measures to revamp the force," Md Mainul Hasan, commissioner of the DMP, told The Daily Star yesterday.

He said, "Capable, professional, and deprived officers are being selected for filling the vacant posts."

Muhammad Nurul Huda, a former inspector general of police, termed the moves "administrative measures or actions warranted by the present situation".

He told The Daily Star, "The officials, who have been given charge in new posts, should strictly follow the law so that the image [of the force] is restored."

REINSTATEMENTS, RETIREMENTS

With three circulars, the government yesterday sent three top police officials, including an additional inspector general of police (IGP), into forced retirement from today.

The officials are Krishna Pada Roy, additional IGP of police headquarters; Mozammel Haque, Khulna Metropolitan Police commissioner; and Sarder Rakibul Islam, additional commissioner.

The circular invoked section 45 of the Public Service Act, 2018.

The five reinstated police officials, who were forced to retire between 2020 and 2023, are Deputy Inspector General of police Abdullah Al Mamun, and SPs Nazmul Karim Khan, Ali Hossain Khan, Delwar Hossain Mia, and Zillur Rahman.

Five circulars were issued in this regard yesterday.

They would be considered on duty from the day of their forced retirement, and they would be entitled to arrears, promotions, and other benefits as per rules, read the circulars.

The home ministry during the AL rule had cited "public interest" as reason for them being forced to retire.

THE NEW TO BE WATCHED

Sources said many of the newly posted DMP officials do not have experience in working in the capital.

Talking to this newspaper, a source, requesting anonymity, said, "It would be hard for the newly appointed officers to perform their duties if they have no experience in dealing with crime in the capital ... ."

DMP Commissioner Mainul said, "We will keep the newly transferred officials under the scanner and follow their work. If they fail to perform and maintain the professional standard, then they would be sent back.

"We want to ensure the best service to people ... ."

Earlier, the authorities transferred all additional commissioners and deputy commissioners of eight crime divisions and eight detective branches of the DMP.

The officials, who were posted outside Dhaka, are now being given the charges of these divisions and DB branches.

NEW SPs, DIGs

The home ministry in another circular transferred the SPs of 24 districts.

New officials were also appointed to these districts.

The districts that got new SPs are Rangpur, Gazipur, Cumilla, Dhaka, Sirajganj, Chattogram, Manikganj, Mymensingh, Gaibandha, Habiganj, Rajshahi, Munshiganj, Sylhet, Narayanganj, Natore, Pabna, Patuakhali, Bagerhat, Kishoreganj, Jhenaidah, Magura, Tangail, Jashore, and Narsingdi.

In another circular, the home ministry yesterday transferred two additional inspectors general of police and six DIGs.

Additional IGP (supernumerary) AKM Hafiz Akter and KH Mahid Uddin were transferred to the Industrial Police and Tourist Police.

DIG Munibur Rahman of DMP was sent to the Armed Police Battalion headquarters while DIG Faruk Ahmed to the DMP.

DIGs (supernumerary) Israil Howlader, Khondoker Nazmul Hasan, Masud Karim, and Hasan Md Shawkat Ali were posted to the DMP.

It presented a clear vision of Bangladesh and money laundering has raised expectations and would motivate the relevant institutions to take action to set concrete examples that abuse of power, especially at high levels, can no longer be enjoyed with impunity, Iftekharuzzaman said.

Yunus has rightly conveyed the message that it is upon the people to determine when the much-needed elections will be held.

"There is no denying that one of the deliverables of the interim government is the restoration of people's right to vote as the means of transition of power. But the election cannot be regarded as an end in itself without meeting the key aspirations of the movement," he added.

In his address to the nation on Sunday, Yunus requested the people to discuss and prescribe what is the least the interim government needs to do, said Serajul Islam Choudhury, professor emeritus at the University of Dhaka.

"Our expectation is that an election should be held and for that, a proper atmosphere should be created."

At the very least, the expectation is that due honour will be given to the aspiration of liberty.

There are several other expectations such as proper treatment for those injured during the mass upsurge and financial compensation for the families of those killed.

"Perpetrators of these murders must be brought to book. There is a need to rein in the immense powers given to the police and the RAB. Efforts should be made to stop wealth laundering, plundering and corruption."

Ramping up employment generation, bringing prices under control, ensuring freedom of expression and dismantling all types of syndicates are crucial.

Furthermore, adopting a policy of development towards social ownership and moving away from the trend of capitalist development is also essential.

"If you can ensure this, an atmosphere of polls will be created. This should not take that much time. There are proposals of different reforms and commissions but those are time-consuming exercises," Choudhury added.

In his statement, Yunus highlighted that a key priority for the interim government is to seek justice for the hundreds killed and thousands injured during the July Protests, said Sara Hossain, a Supreme Court advocate and a rights activist.

"He also said it out loud and clear that no one should face injustice when seeking justice. I hope the government will act on this and take swift measures to bring to account some of those responsible for the gross human rights violations we have just witnessed, and also stand by the victims, remembering the long history we have in our country of impunity across the years."

It was good to hear Yunus emphasise the importance of respecting each other irrespective of ethnicity, religion or gender, marking a clear step away from the politics of division and hatred and towards a vision of common goals and a shared future.

Yunus asked all those raising grievances for patience.

"People have genuine grievances, and with the restrictions on democratic space, they have had little opportunity to voice them for years."

They need to be heard and issues resolved based on priority.

"But more importantly we need to move ahead with a practical reform agenda, including for public institutions, which have been hollowed out. Once this is done, the government can move forward with other tasks."

Hossain agreed with Yunus that there should be reforms before holding elections.

"We have not witnessed proper elections for many years. Elections are not just a matter of institutional practices or legal rules; political parties should play a role and they should be ready for it. For that, voters need genuine choices, and all political groups must have a fair chance to be involved," she added.

Through his address, Yunus aimed to reassure the countrymen about the actions being taken and addressed the challenges of democratic transformation and the necessary reforms for it, said Selim Raihan, professor at the University of Dhaka's economics department.

Yunus mentioned that the interim government assumed power based on the mandate of the students and the people and asserted that the government would remain in place as long as they have that support.

However, one thing that needs clarification on how much control this interim government has over the administration.

"Every institution is in mess, with many being severely damaged -- it is a monumental task to rebuild them. I believe the government should create a comprehensive package outlining the necessary reforms and then hold a referendum on that."

If the government go to an election without making significant progress on the reforms, it will be like returning to square one, said Raihan, also the executive director of the South Asian Network on Economic Modelling.

He suggested that a white paper on the state of the economy should be issued and that similar initiatives should be taken across different sectors such as the constitution, administration, elections and others to ensure their accountability.

Yunus now heading 6 ministries

Portfolios of four other advisers redistributed

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Chief Adviser Muhammad Yunus is now in charge of six ministries or divisions as the portfolios of five advisers were redistributed yesterday.

The Cabinet Division has issued a circular in this regard.

Yunus, the head of the interim government, was in charge of 10 ministries and divisions, but as per the circular he has given up charge of the land, science and technology, shipping, and women and children affairs ministries.

According to the new decision, Adviser Salehuddin Ahmed has been given the charge of the science and technology, and finance and commerce ministries.

Hasan Arif has been given charge of the

UN RIGHTS DELEGATION

Bangladesh assures full cooperation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh is committed to providing full cooperation to the United Nations, Home Affairs Adviser Lt Gen (retd) Jahangir Alam Chowdhury said yesterday following a meeting with a visiting UN delegation at the Secretariat.

The three-member delegation, led by Rory Mungoven, Chief of the Asia-Pacific Section of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), arrived in Bangladesh on August 22 to investigate human rights violations that occurred between July 1 and August 15.

The team also included Livia Consenza and Alexander James Amir El Jundi, both human rights officers at OHCHR.

During the meeting, the home adviser requested the UN to consider including more Bangladeshi personnel from the army, police, and other forces in UN peacekeeping missions.

Rory Mungoven described the meeting as positive, saying, "We are in Bangladesh to discuss how the UN could conduct an investigation and fact-finding mission regarding the events of the past two months, as requested by the interim government."

He added that the delegation is also exploring other areas where they can assist and support the interim government and the people of Bangladesh.

"We are halfway through our visit, and the discussions have been very positive. We are inspired by the efforts of the students and people of Bangladesh, and we want to support them in the best way possible," Mungoven told reporters at the Secretariat.

APPOINTMENTS OF CECs, ECs

HC asks why indemnity of search bodies not illegal

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday issued a rule questioning the legality of a provision that provides indemnity to president-appointed search committees that recommend appointments of CECs and other ECs for holding polls in the country.

In the rule, the court asked the respondents to explain why Section 9 of the Chief Election Commissioners and Other Election Commissioners Appointment Act, 2022, which has given such impunity to search committees, should not be declared illegal and contradictory to the constitution.

The law secretary and the election commission have been made respondents to the rule, which is returnable in four weeks.

The HC bench of AKM Asaduzzaman and Justice Muhammad Mahbub-Ul Islam issued the rule following a writ petition challenging the legality of the provision, which was filed by 10 Supreme Court lawyers on August 18.

Section 9 states that the appointments of CECs and other ECs based on the recommendations of the search committees previously formed by the president and their activities will be deemed as valid and no question shall be raised in any court in this regard, said the petition.

Advocate Mohammad Shishir Manir appeared for the petitioners during the hearing of the petition.

He told the HC that Section 9 of the act has taken away the jurisdiction of the judiciary, as it has been said that any question cannot be raised in any court of the country.

Such impunity is totally unconstitutional, he added.

Earlier, Shishir Manir told The Daily Star that his clients have challenged the impunity given to the search committees formed in 2017 and 2022, headed respectively by Justice Syed Mahmud Hossain and Justice Obaidul Hassan, judges of the Supreme Court's Appellate Division, to recommend appointing the CECs and ECs for holding the elections in 2014 and 2018.

Together, they work tirelessly to repair a dyke

A breach in the embankment has flooded over 35 villages in Sylhet

MINTU DESHWARA

A breach in the Manu River embankment in Moulvibazar's Kulaura upazila has led to widespread flooding, submerging over 35 villages and causing significant damage to crop fields, houses, and roads.

The breach, which occurred on August 20, has left the region reeling as floodwaters continue to inundate the area.

The damage was particularly severe in the villages of Belartal, Alinagar, and Dhalia, where sections of the embankment gave way due to persistent rainfall and water flow from across the border.

Local residents and officials have pointed fingers at the Bangladesh Water Development Board, accusing it of using substandard materials in constructing the embankment, leading to its collapse.

Despite these challenges, the story has taken a hopeful turn as hundreds of local residents, students, and social organisations have come together to repair the damaged embankment themselves.

"The Manu river's breach has devastated our community, but we're not waiting for government aid. We've taken matters into our own hands," said Umar Ali, a student involved in the repairs.

Ali and other local youths were among the first to respond, quickly filling the breach with sandbags.

Soon after, they were joined by former UP member Abbas Ali, social activist Dr Monirul Islam Sohag, and other villagers.

The repair effort, which began on the night of August 22, has become a community-wide endeavour.

Men, women, and children have been working side by side, filling sacks with soil and stacking them to rebuild the embankment.

The scene is one of determination and unity, with villagers refusing to let the floodwaters defeat them.

"We've been working since dawn, every day, to protect our homes and crops," said Dr Sohag, who also contributed Tk 1 lakh to support the effort.

"Many of the embankments in this area are unstable, and we're doing everything we can to safeguard our land," he added.

Local youth Yasin Ali voiced frustration over unfulfilled promises by public representatives to build a permanent embankment, but he praised the community's spirit.

"The people here are incredible. They've come together to do what needs to be done. It's inspiring to see," said Yasin.

Abbas Ali echoed these sentiments, noting that while the situation is dire, the collective effort has brought the community closer together.

"We've been working at great personal risk, but it's worth it to protect our neighbours and our homes," he said.

Russia interested in exploring five more gas wells

Envoys of three countries call on chief adviser

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Russian state-owned energy company Gazprom has expressed interest in exploring five additional gas wells in Bhola, as well as further wells inland, Russian Ambassador to Bangladesh Alexander Mantytskiy revealed during a courtesy call on Chief Adviser Muhammad Yunus at the State Guest House Jamuna yesterday.

Mantytskiy also highlighted Russia's ongoing support for Bangladesh in international forums and discussed several key cooperation areas, including the Rooppur Nuclear Power Plant.

Asiatic 3Sixty supports flood relief efforts

STAR REPORT

The Asiatic 3Sixty family has come together to support those affected by the recent floods, contributing one day's salary to a relief fund, said a press release.

This effort was further amplified by matching contributions from the organisations under the Asiatic 3Sixty umbrella, effectively doubling the total amount collected.

The full donation has been handed over to the Chief Adviser's Relief Fund of the interim government. This fund will be used to provide essential supplies such as food, clean water, medical assistance, and other critical support to flood victims.

Echoing him, Ziaul Ahsan Titu, proprietor of Ziaul Traders and also councillor of ward-28, said, "My safety is my first priority now. My materials and equipment have been looted from the work site already. However, if I get security from the authorities, I will complete the remaining work in time."

Visiting at least seven wards including 21, 25, 28, and 9, this correspondent observed that sand, stones and other materials were left scattered on road near the construction sites. Only a few workers were seen on some sites.

Kudrat-e-Khuda, president of Sanak Khulna unit, called upon the KCC authorities to restore public confidence by addressing the issue and finding a way to resume the works of these crucial projects immediately, alongside ensuring transparency and accountability, and steps to prevent future disruptions.

Contacted, Moshiuzzaman Khan, chief engineer of KCC, said work has already resumed on 11 project sites while steps are on to resume the rest.

five years after his disappearance.

Mikel, reading from a written statement, demanded the release of individuals held in the secret detention centre known as "Aynaghar".

He said that over the past 15 years, more than 50 UPDF leaders and activists have been killed without trial, disappeared, arrested, or tortured.

Mikel called for an end to military control in the CHT, arguing that democracy is impossible under such conditions.

He expressed support for the interim government but stressed the importance of including the CHT in any upcoming reform plans to prevent the resurgence of a fascist regime.

In the case, the complainant alleged that some of the accused as per instruction directly or indirectly from some others opened fire while hundreds of students, including Rubel, were protesting in Adabor on August 5.

Rubel succumbed to bullet wounds at a hospital two days later, the case said.

Another Dhaka court placed Hasanul Haq Inu on a seven-day remand in the Abdul Wadud murder case.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Ali Haider passed the order after police produced him with a 10-day remand prayer, court sources said.

On August 21, Abdur Rahman, the victim's brother-in-law, filed the case with New Market Police Station against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and 129 others.

Besides this case, Inu has been accused in several other cases after Hasina resigned and fled on August 5 in the face of a mass uprising.

Meanwhile, in the courtroom, a group of pro-BNP lawyers hurled expletives and attempted to attack Inu and Menon. Some unruly lawyers even threw eggs at them despite law enforcers' presence.

70 indigenous families attacked

The student leaders called on the government to restore the damaged sculpture.

Specific incidents highlighted during the press conference include the torching and looting of homes in Pipalla village, Biral upazila, and Birganj upazila in Dinajpur, leaving many residents displaced out of fear.

In Bochaganj, 12 bighas of land belonging to the indigenous communities were seized, and in Parbatipur upazila, houses were occupied after being set on fire.

Further attacks were reported in Ranisankail upazila of Thakurgaon, where four houses were burned down.

In Godagari upazila of Rajshahi, several villages were targeted, with valuables worth Tk 10 lakh looted. Similar incidents occurred in Chapainawabganj Sadar upazila, where fish from several ponds were looted, and in Patnitola upazila of Naogaon, where shops owned by indigenous families were ransacked.

The students at the press conference demanded a thorough investigation into the attacks and immediate government action to protect the affected communities.

Russia interested

This project, which benefits from Russian technical and financial support, is nearing completion and is expected to become operational next year.

Additionally, Russia is keen on exporting LNG to Bangladesh and constructing a gas pipeline from Bhola to Khulna, he noted.

Chief Adviser Yunus acknowledged Russia's historical support during Bangladesh's Liberation War and its crucial mine-cleaning operations at Chittagong Port.

He urged Russia to increase its imports from Bangladesh and emphasised the need for expanded economic and educational cooperation.

In a separate courtesy call, Saudi Arabia's Ambassador Essa Yousef Essa Al Duhailan informed Yunus that approximately 3.2 million Bangladeshi workers in Saudi Arabia send around $10 billion in remittances annually, with half sent through official channels.

Yunus praised Saudi Arabia as a key friend of Bangladesh and reminisced about his visit to the country for the World Football Summit. A Ambassador Essa Yousef also raised the issue of renewing passports for 69,000 undocumented Bangladeshi residents in Saudi Arabia and discussed Saudi interest in investing further in Bangladesh's logistics, services, and renewable energy sectors.

Meanwhile, during a meeting with Pakistani High Commissioner Syed Ahmed Maroof, Yunus called for the revival of SAARC to enhance regional cooperation and boost economic ties in South Asia. He expressed hope that SAARC could become a model for regional integration similar to the European Union.

Maroof emphasised the need to revitalise trade and economic relations between the two countries and advocated for easing visa procedures and establishing direct flights between Bangladesh and Pakistan.

well-wishers not to come and exchange greetings with flowers and other stuff, as the country is going through a crisis, said sources at his office.

"The context of my taking charge is a bit different. The blood of the martyrs has not yet dried. Many students are screaming in pain. On the other hand, millions of people are living in dire straits due to the current flood situation in the country. As part of our sympathy to all of them, we request you refrain from any lavish arrangements, including flowers, at this time," Professor Niaz said.

A circular from the education ministry yesterday announced that President Md Shahabuddin, as chancellor of the university, appointed him under the Dhaka University Order, 1973.

He replaced Prof ASM Maksud Kamal, who resigned from the post of DU VC on August 10.

Prof Niaz was the former chairman of the Department of Development Studies at DU. He also was a pro-vice chancellor at Independent University, Bangladesh.

He has a distinguished career in academia and development management. He holds a PhD degree with distinction from the University of Wales Swansea and has earned numerous scholarships, including the UK Commonwealth Scholarship.

He subsequently pursued postdoctoral research at the University of Oxford, University College Swansea, and Asian Institute of Technology.

Prof Niaz also served as the Bangladesh Country Representative of the International Union for Conservation of Nature.

accused attacked the police station and beat up police personnel.

A few law enforcers sheltered in many areas, but the attackers dragged them back to the police station and mercilessly beat them to death.

At least 15 police personnel were killed during the attack. Thirteen died on the spot, and two others died in hospital. Attackers also vandalised and torched the police station.

Enayetpur Police Station Officer-in-Charge Hasibullah Hasib said they have recorded the case and are investigating it.

"Police are trying to nab the culprits," he said.

HC scraps petition

Supreme Court lawyer Kamrul Hasan submitted the petition as a public interest litigation on August 20.

In the petition, he also requested the HC to form an inquiry committee to identify those responsible for formulating the "wrong curriculum" and to suspend the current curriculum.

"There are lots of errors in the curriculum and syllabus of secondary level education and the student's guardians have reportedly expressed concern with this issue," Kamrul Hasan told The Daily Star.

He also said he will again move the same petition before the HC later.

AUGUST 5-7

70 indigenous families attacked in the north

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

At least 70 families from the indigenous communities across five districts in the northern region have come under attack since the fall of the Hasina-led Awami League government on August 5.

The violence, which continued for three days, left 25 people injured and resulted in significant property damage.

The Adivasi Chhatra Janata, a student body representing the communities in Dinajpur, revealed the details during a press conference at the Dinajpur Press Club yesterday.

Ishwar Tudu, a leader of the organisation, presented the keynote address, detailing the extent of the attacks.

The violence occurred between August 5 and August 7, affecting the districts of Dinajpur, Thakurgaon, Rajshahi, Chapainawabganj, and Naogaon.

The attacks involved looting, vandalism, and arson.

In addition to the destruction of homes, the attackers also looted fish from ponds and damaged or stole crops, with total financial losses estimated at approximately Tk 2.5 crore.

Despite the severity of the attacks, no official cases have been filed yet.

The violence also included the defacement of the Shidhu-Kanu sculpture, a monument commemorating the historic Tevaga movement, located on the way to the Kantajew temple in Kaharol upazila, Dinajpur.

ACC forms panel to assist anti-graft operations

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) has formed a panel to maintain the ongoing anti-corruption operations and support the law enforcement agencies.

Md Shahriar, director general of ACC, disclosed this in a letter yesterday.

The panel will assist in seizing evidence and handling legal matters during search operations, the letter said.

The panel includes ACC Deputy Directors Debabrata Mondal, Md Humayun Kabir, Md Saiful Islam, and Mohammad Tajul Islam Bhuiyan, as well as assistant directors Muhammad Zafar Sadeq Shibli and Shoyeb Ibne Alam.

The panel was formed with the commission's approval, the ACC said.

The body will assist in searches with the ACC secretary's approval, the anti-graft watchdog added.

HC scraps petition on bringing edn reform

It says govt needs time for that

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday refused to accept a writ petition that sought its order on the government to reform the education system at the secondary school level.

The bench of Justice AKM Asaduzzaman and Justice Muhammad Mahbub Ul Islam dropped the petition, saying the interim government needs time to bring reforms in the education system.

No order should be passed on the government in this regard, the court said.

Attorney General Md Asaduzzaman opposed the writ petition, citing similar points.

Most KCC projects halted

Contractors go into hiding after AL govt's ouster

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

- Suspension of projects leave roads incomplete
- Contractors demand security
- Tk 468cr worth of projects remain unfinished

After the fall of the Awami League-government on August 5 following a mass uprising, Khulna City Corporation's mayor, most of the ward councillors, and pro-AL contractors fled.

As such, most of the ongoing projects of KCC have been halted since then.

KCC has been working on a Tk 823 crore project to develop the city's drainage system, and a Tk 607 crore project for renovation of the city's roads.

According to sources, most of the works of these projects were being implemented by pro-AL contractors. Also, it has been alleged that some of the works were being done by the mayor himself and some councillors anonymously using the licence and work orders to other contractors. With them now on the run, these projects have been lying suspended.

City residents expressed concerns that solution to Khulna's existing problems, including waterlogging and dilapidated roads, will now either take much longer to be solved, or will be left incomplete midway.

At least 23 of the KCC's 31 ward councillors were directly involved in some of these project works contractually.

Abdur Razzak from ward-25 said the renovation work of at least four major drains have been suspended for two weeks, exacerbating waterlogging.

AKM Kibria Hossain, a resident of ward 28, said local residents are now being compelled to cross the 2km concrete road from Jorakal Bazar to Rupsha on foot as it has been left half done.

According to KCC, around 50-70 percent works of the drainage and road development projects have so far been completed. However, unless the works resume soon, the projects may get delayed.

Other halted projects include renovation of the road in front of Kuet, and construction of a waste treatment plant in Shalua and Chitrali Market.

The remaining works for all these projects are worth around Tk 468 crore.

A ward councillor, who is also contactor of at least 12 development works, said wishing anonymity that he has been threatened by locals, who also vandalised his residence and office.

"Amid the lack of security, how am I going to oversee the works and complete

AUG 4 COP KILLINGS

Four AL leaders and 6,000 unnamed sued

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

A case was filed yesterday against four local Awami League leaders and around 6,000 unnamed individuals on charges of killing 15 police personnel at Enayetpur Police Station in Sirajganj on August 4.

The accused AL leaders are: AL's Enayetpur union unit President Ahmed Mostafa Khan Bachchu, Secretary Ajgar Ali, Khukni Union Parishad Chairman and also AL's union unit President Mulluk Chand, and Bhangabari Union Parishad Chairman Johurul Islam Bhuiyan.

Enayetpur Police Station Assistant Sub-Inspector Abdul Malek filed the case.

According to the case statement, the accused often forced the police to fulfil their illegal demands. On August 4, when police did not listen to them, the

Ensure safe env in edn institutions

Ministry directs DCs

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Education Ministry has instructed district commissioners (DCs) to oversee the overall maintenance of a conducive environment in educational institutions under the current circumstances.

The ministry's Secondary and Higher Education Division issued an order in this regard yesterday.

The order stated that demands for the resignation or removal of heads and officials at some universities, colleges, and schools have led to unpleasant situations in various parts of the country.

"In some cases, teachers have been personally harassed, which caused a deterioration in law and order. Such a situation is unacceptable," the order reads.

At the university level, vice-chancellors, pro vice-chancellors, or other officials may resign on their own. If necessary, the chancellor can remove them according to the law.

The order also stated that the SHED or the Directorate of Secondary and Higher Education can investigate and take necessary actions, including transfers, for heads or officials in government schools and colleges.

"Similarly, governing bodies or the DSHE can take action in the case of private educational institutions. In such cases, the relevant department or office will investigate and take action if there is a specific complaint against a teacher or official," it also said.

MURDER CASES

Menon, Inu placed on remand

STAR REPORT

Workers Party President Rashed Khan Menon was remanded for six days and Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal President Hasanul Haq Inu for seven days yesterday in separate murder cases filed in Dhaka.

Menon, a key leader of the Awami League-led 14-Party Alliance, was remanded in the case over the death of garment worker Rubel during the mass uprising on August 5.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Saifur Rahman passed the order after investigation officer Mintu Chandra Banik, an inspector of Adabor Police Station, produced him before the court with a 10-day remand prayer, a sub-inspector working in the court told The Daily Star.

On August 22, Rafiqul Islam, father of the victim, filed a murder case with Adabor Police Station against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and 147 others.

Release detained UPDF supporters

Demands Mikel Changma

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

United People's Democratic Front's organiser Mikel Changma yesterday urged the interim government to release 29 supporters of the organisation and its affiliated bodies from jail.

Speaking at a press conference at the Jatiya Press Club, Mikel Changma highlighted that while political prisoners in other regions are being released, UPDF leaders and activists in the Chittagong Hill Tracts remain incarcerated, with some detained for over five years.

Mikel presented an eight-point demand, including the formation of a special tribunal to investigate all murders and human rights violations in the CHT during what he described as "the fascist regime of Hasina".

He also called for the United Nations' involvement in the judicial process.

UPDF leader Mikel returned home on August 7,

How a family grabbed multiple banks

central bank dismantled the board of the Islami Bank to ensure good governance after the new interim government launched its efforts to fix the troubled sector as part of a broader reforms plan.

Alam is the chairman of First Security Islami Bank's board while his wife Farzana Parveen is a director. Their son Ahsanul Alam, daughter Maimuna Khanam, and son-in-law Belal Ahmed control the boards of Islami Bank, Global Islami Bank and Social Islami Bank respectively. Alam's brothers, sisters, and other relatives also sit on the boards of several banks.

The law bars a person with a significant shareholding in a bank from buying a substantial stake in another bank. The same rule applies to their family members and companies.

Alam, however, grabbed Islami Bank and Social Islami Bank in 2017 despite having significant shares of First Security Bank, and Union Bank.

A top official of the Bangladesh Bank confirmed that Alam's family received the central bank's approval to buy the stakes despite the banking regulator's obligation to block the process.

The law states that not more than three members of a family are allowed to hold the directorship of a bank. A family and their firms cannot acquire more than 10 percent of shares jointly.

However, besides the 30 percent stake in Islami Bank, Alam's family members and their firms together own about 22 percent of Social Islami Bank shares, 28 percent of First Security Islami Bank, and 30 percent of Global Islami Bank, according to the shareholding reports of the banks.

They also have 5 percent shares in each of Al-Arafah Islami Bank and Northern Insurance, and more than 70 percent in Aviva Finance and Union Bank each.

Shareholding data of Bangladesh Commerce Bank could not be obtained but the website of S Alam Group claims it owns the bank.

Toufic Ahmad Choudhury, director general of Bangladesh Academy for Securities Markets (BASM), described the control of Alam's family over the banks as "totally unacceptable".

Although legal restrictions were put in place to stop the family control in banks, S Alam had been allowed to wield its control over the banks for its own benefit, Choudhury said, referring to the loans taken by the Alam family and their relatives.

"The banking business is quite different. Depositors are the real owners of the banks," said Choudhury, also a former director general of the Bangladesh Institute of Bank Management (BIBM).

An analysis of Islami Bank's financial reports shows that the Shariah-based bank provided about Tk 25,000 crore loans to Alam's relatives. Social Islami Bank showed nearly Tk 5,000 crore loans to them in its financial reports.

The other banks followed in the footsteps of these two banks. Officials of these banks, who requested anonymity, said the loans given to Alam's relatives were bigger than what official data shows.

The total amount could be above Tk 75,000 crore from Islami Bank alone, one of the officials said.

A top official of a bank said many directors abused their power to save themselves from becoming loan defaulters by rescheduling loans year after year. So the criteria for directors should be changed in such a way that will not allow them to have their loans rescheduled when they face a default.

Data also showed how the S Alam family's presence on the board affected the banks, all of which except Al-Arafah Islami Bank remain in the yellow zone – meaning their financial health is between "good" and "fragile".

Fahmida Khatun, executive director of the Centre for Policy Dialogue, said this is "the best example of how a single family controls the banking sector".

As the regulatory body, the Bangladesh Bank is responsible for allowing this to happen while the government gave S Alam a free rein over the banks by amending the laws, she said.

Despite repeated requests from analysts, parliament allowed the increasing presence of families on a bank's board. It doubled the number of members of a family allowed on a bank's board to four before reducing it to three amid huge pressure from analysts. On top of that, a director was allowed to remain on the board for 12 years.

"This is absurd," said Fahmida.

When many family members remain on a bank's board, they can influence the board for the benefit of people or organisations linked to them. In some cases, directors with a much lower stake also obtain such benefits.

For instance, Alam's relatives received loans above Tk 25,000 crore from Islami Bank officially while their contribution to its paid-up capital was around Tk 300 crore, according to the financial report of the bank.

It shows how high their gain is compared to their investment in the bank, Fahmida said.

The economist recommended amending the law further to allow only one member of a family on a bank's board and limiting a bank director's tenure to six years.

A top official of a leading private bank, who preferred not to be named, questioned the Bangladesh Bank's role in allowing the S Alam family to control so many banks. "What did the central bank do when the family was grabbing the banks? It was their responsibility to stop the family," he said.

The Daily Star tried to contact Saiful Alam via text message, but he did not reply. BB spokesman Mezbaul Haque did not receive phone calls for comment.

and baby food worth Tk 35 lakh and another Tk 35 lakh for fodder.

Shahina Akhter, deputy commissioner (DC) of Feni told The Daily Star confirmed that she had received the relief materials but could not reach the remote areas. "Initially we could not distribute the materials in the remote areas as it was hard to reach the villages. But from today (Tuesday) we plan to distribute rice in every ward."

"We have already sent instructions to all UNOs accordingly," she said.

Tania Bhuiyan, the Upazila Nirbahi Officer (UNO) of Fulgazi sub-district under Feni confirmed receiving about 250 tonnes of rice, 500 sacks of dry food and Tk 7.5 lakh as relief from the DC office. "We have been facing difficulties in sending relief to remote areas. But the army and navy are trying their best."

Apart from the government relief initiatives, armed forces air dropped around 48,000 packets of food among destitute people. Also, private volunteers distributed an estimated 60,000 packets of food, she said.

Considering that both government agencies and non-government organisations as well as volunteers were engaged in distributing disaster relief materials, the ministry directed deputy commissioners of the flood affected districts to coordinate efforts with units of the anti-discrimination student movement, army, navy, fire service and civil defence, medical teams and other volunteer units.

Local government officials of Noakhali and Laxmipur districts also said they were facing difficulties to distribute relief in remote areas.

Kabirhat UNO Mohammad Sarwar Uddin, under Noakhali district, said he received 96 tonnes of rice and Tk 4.5 lakh in cash for two lakh people affected by the flood. "But we are not able to distribute that in the remote areas due to a lack of boats," he told The Daily Star.

Subarnachar UNO Md Al Amin Sarkar said they had received 76 tonnes of rice and Tk 3.5 lakh. "We are trying to reach the remote areas," he said.

Lakkhipur Sadar UNO Arifur Rahman said they have so far received 126 tonnes of rice and Tk 4 lakh for people of 21 unions.

Raipur UNO Imran Khan said the government allocation was inadequate. "We are not getting relief from any non-government sources here. And we are not able to reach remote places away from roads because we don't have boats," he said.

Contacted, Fatikchhari UNO Mozammel Haque Chowdhury said flood waters receded in most of the areas in the upazila on Tuesday, adding, "Only two unions—Suabil and Harualchhari—are still under water."

While water had receded in many localities, some low laying areas still remain inundated, said Yamin Hossain, additional deputy commissioner of Cox's Bazar.

The Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre (FFWC) said that overall flood situation was improving as water level is receding in all major rivers in eastern and northeastern Bangladesh.

Petition filed for reviewing SC verdict system was introduced through political consensus and thus became a part of the constitution's basic structure, which cannot be scrapped.

The Appellate Division verdict, which cancelled the 13th amendment, is self-contradictory as the court in its short verdict said that the next two national elections (10th and 11th parliamentary polls) could be held under the caretaker government system, but this was not mentioned in the full judgement, the lawyer said.

Replying to a question, he said if the Appellate Division grants the review petition after holding a hearing, the caretaker government system will be reinstated.

On Sunday, Appellate Division Chamber Judge Justice Md Ashfaqul Islam allowed the five citizens to file the review petition.

The chamber judge passed the order after the petitioners filed an application seeking permission to lodge the review petition.

The four other citizens are Tofail Ahmed, M Hafizuddin Khan, Md Jobirul Hoque Bhuiyan and Zahrah Rahman.

The petitioners in the review petition said that the sole purpose of the 13th Amendment Act was to ensure democracy by holding free and fair elections under a nonparty caretaker government which would be in charge for only 90 days, and accordingly, the 13th Amendment became an essential part of the basic structure of the constitution.

They said that the right to vote in public elections is a fundamental feature of the constitution, which cannot be curtailed by a judgment of the Appellate Division; and furthermore, free and fair elections are a part of the basic structure of the constitution and democracy. Hence, the impugned SC judgment, which declared the 13th Amendment Act void and ultra vires the constitution, is liable to be reviewed.

The petitioners also argued that direct consequence of the abolition of the nonparty caretaker government system through the impugned judgment was three consecutive failed elections in 2014, 2018 and 2024. This not only destroyed the foundation of democracy, but also led to the politicisation and manipulation of the judiciary. Accordingly, the circumstances that have emerged as a result of the student-mass revolution leading to the overthrowing of the government on August 5, 2024, warrant a review of the impugned judgment to ensure a democratic transition and a peaceful handover of power.

A seven-judge full bench of the Appellate Division, headed by then chief justice ABM Khairul Haque, by a majority view on May 10, 2011, declared the 13th amendment null and void.

Modi's tweet and a question

Admittedly, there were attacks on Hindus immediately following the fall of Sheikh Hasina's autocratic regime on August 5. The minority groups had unfortunately fallen victim to bigots and brigands who exploited the brief absence of law enforcement agencies. That was immediately addressed, with citizens' groups including madrassa students and Muslim clerics -- in the temporary absence of the police -- coming forward to guard places of worship and homes of fellow Bangladeshis, whether Hindu or Buddhist, in a show of communal harmony that has done us proud.

Furthermore, these attacks targeting religious minorities subsided within a few days of the flare-up and there has not been a single such incident reported over the last week. But the attacks should never have happened in the first place and we must make our utmost effort that it never occurs again.

The timing and context of the Indian premier raising it with the US president makes it difficult to understand his rationale for doing so. India is perceived to be one of Sheikh Hasina's chief enablers in legitimising rigged elections and strengthening her misrule. As such, anti-India sentiment runs rather high among Bangladeshis at the moment.

More recently, Bangladesh's eastern districts along with India's Tripura and Assam, have been facing one of the worst floods in decades. It was also on August 26 that there was news of the Farakka Barrage opening all its gates to let the water through, which is reportedly normal procedure.

It was in this context that Prime Minister Modi raised his concerns over a religious minority before even recognising the plight of millions of people affected by the floods. This can only create further misunderstanding between neighbours at a time when we desperately need to improve relations with each other.

Russia-France ties hit new low after arrest of tech boss

REUTERS, Paris

Relations between Moscow and Paris have reached a nadir following the arrest of Russian-born Telegram boss Pavel Durov, Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said yesterday, after the tech billionaire's detention was extended until Wednesday.

Durov, who has French as well as Russian nationality, was arrested near Paris over the weekend as part of an investigation into crimes related to images of child sex abuse, drug trafficking and fraudulent transactions on the platform, French prosecutors said on Monday.

It remains unclear if he knew about the threat of arrest in France. Durov's French lawyer did not immediately reply to a request for comment.

Durov's arrest has plunged Moscow-Paris ties to their lowest level, Lavrov said, capping months of deteriorating relations between the two nations.

French authorities accused Russia of trying to destabilise it ahead of the Paris Olympics in response to its more hawkish stance on the Ukraine war - claims Russia has denied.

Durov's detention was extended by 48 hours late on Monday, a spokesperson for the Paris prosecutor's office said yesterday. After that, prosecutors will either need to charge or release him.

With close to 1 billion users, Telegram is particularly influential in Russia, Ukraine and the republics of the former Soviet Union. It presents itself as a haven for free speech, but is also widely used by far-right, anti-vax and conspiracist movements, as well as political dissidents.

Without providing evidence, Vyacheslav Volodin, the chairman of Russia's State Duma, the lower house of parliament, earlier said the United States, through France, was attempting to exert control over Telegram.

Police detain an activist as they march towards the state secretariat demanding the resignation of Mamata Banerjee, chief minister of India's West Bengal state, in Kolkata yesterday. Police in India fired tear gas and water cannon, as they clashed with thousands of protesters seeking justice for a doctor who was raped and murdered in Kolkata this month. Russia pounds Ukraine

AFP, Kyiv

Russia fired a wave of attack drones and missiles at Ukraine that killed at least four people, authorities said yesterday after the second night of heavy strikes across the war-battered nation.

The overnight barrage came a day after the Kremlin launched one of its largest-ever aerial attacks on Ukraine, which targeted energy facilities and killed several people.

Ukraine's air force yesterday said it downed half of the 10 missiles and 60 of the 81 Iranian-designed attack drones launched from several regions of Russia and from occupied-Crimea.

"Unfortunately, despite the effective work of our air defence systems, four people were killed and 16 were wounded," President Volodymyr Zelensky said in a post on social media.

He said rescue work was ongoing at the impact sites and vowed a response to the attacks.

"Crimes against humanity cannot be committed with impunity," he said.

AFP journalists in the capital Kyiv heard air raid sirens echo over the city throughout the night as well as an explosion, likely from air defence systems.

Local authorities said earlier yesterday that two people had been killed in the southeastern Zaporizhzhia region and two in the central city of Kryvyi Rig after a missile struck a hotel.

The Russian attacks on Monday triggered widespread blackouts and condemnation from Ukraine's allies in Europe and the US.

Russia said the attack had targeted infrastructure linked to the Ukrainian military. NATO member Poland said its airspace was violated during the barrage, probably by a drone.

Since invading in February 2022, Russia has launched repeated large-scale drone and missile attacks on Ukraine, including punishing strikes on energy facilities.

In Kyiv, Ukraine's electricity grid operator said that emergency blackouts would be applied throughout the day to reduce pressure on the grid following the fresh attacks that damaged energy infrastructure nationwide.

"Ukraine's power system is currently recovering from nine massive Russian attacks, with a power deficit and emergency and scheduled repairs underway at power facilities," Ukrenergo said in a statement, urging Ukrainians to reduce their electricity consumption.

The bombardment comes as Ukrainian forces are pushing an offensive in Russia's border region of Kursk, a surprise operation that has seen Kyiv gain swathes of territory in three weeks.

The governor of Russia's Belgorod region, which borders Kursk and Ukraine, yesterday said he was aware of reports the Ukrainian army had tried to cross the border.

Zelensky said late Monday that Ukraine's surprise cross-border incursion into Kursk region launched on August 6 was partially to "compensate" for Kyiv's inability to strike deeper into Russian territory.

He has been appealing to Ukraine's allies to allow his forces to use Western-supplied weapons to strike targets inside Russian territory as part of efforts to thwart more aerial bombardments.

Despite Ukraine's push inside Kursk, which Kyiv hoped would divert Russian forces from the front line in the east of the war-battered country, Moscow has been making steady gains.

flames," the official told The Daily Star at 6:10pm.

He said a team of engineers from the Public Works Department (PWD) visited the factory premises in the afternoon to make an assessment of the damage, but they could not enter the building.

Alauddin said they will not launch a rescue operation until they are given the go-ahead by the expert team.

Saiful Islam, sub-divisional engineer of PWD in Narayanganj, who accompanied the team, said, "The building became very risky as parts of it collapsed and there were some fires."

He said they will visit the factory site again today to decide if it is safe for the firefighters to conduct a rescue operation.

Anwarul Haque, assistant director of fire service, in the morning said, "We managed to reach a staircase on the ground floor and search the roof of the building, but found no one there."

Visiting the factory premises in the afternoon, Narayanganj Deputy Commissioner Mahmudul Haque said the fire service will launch a rescue operation in the quickest possible time.

He said the building had a large stock of sulfur, rubber, plastic, and other raw materials for production of tyres.

The DC said an investigation cell will be formed to prepare a list of the missing.

He said the district administration yesterday formed an eight-member inquiry committee, headed by Narayanganj Additional District Magistrate Hamidur Rahman, to investigate the incident. It has representatives from fire service, Power Division and the police.

LIST OF MISSING PEOPLE

Students started preparing a list of the missing people since noon yesterday. Family members and relatives of 126 missing persons reported to the students till 6:00pm, said Mahima Mir Ripa, a student of Government Murapara College.

She said though the fire broke out on Sunday night, they did not find anyone compiling a list of the missing people till Tuesday morning.

Holding photographs and national identity cards of the missing persons near the factory, their relatives were looking for them, Mahima said.

"Please find my brother alive or dead," said Rafiqul Islam Ratan, brother of Abdul Motaleb, 40, at the main gate to the factory holing Motaleb's NID card and a photo.

Motaleb had rushed to the factory looking for his teenage son Yasin Gazi, a worker of the factory.

Yasin, however, returned home later.

The DC said Rupganj upazila administration was compiling a list of the missing people. He said they will also collect the list being prepared by the students.

Stop police culture of implicating rivals

Fabricated FIRs, arrests without evidence deplorable

After the fall of a repressive political regime, we have entered a new era of governance. However, police still seem to be trapped in the old culture of looking at things through a partisan lens. According to a report by Prothom Alo, police are arresting Awami League leaders and activists as accused in cases they had filed before August 5, when the regime fell, although it was BNP-Jamaat men and general protesters who were initially accused in the First Information Reports (FIR) of those cases.

The newspaper cited 34 such cases filed between July 17 and August 1 relating to the murder of 64 people, where BNP-Jamaat men and protesters had been shown as accused. The initial FIRs of three other cases filed by victims' families also mentioned the same coterie of suspects, although they later claimed they didn't file those FIRs. For example, the mother of one victim, who was fatally shot on July 16 in the New Market area, denied accusing BNP-Jamaat men although the initial FIR implicated them. But after the arrest of Awami League leaders Anisul Huq and Salman F Rahman on August 14, a revised FIR was submitted to court replacing the names of previous suspects with "unidentified accused". Anisul Huq, Salman F Rahman, and another person were also shown arrested and taken on remand under that case.

This indicates that police did not carry out due diligence and probe into the killings before arresting anyone. Moreover, they just randomly replaced the accused, calling the whole exercise into question. Such laxity only weakens the legal basis of court cases and denies victims their right to a proper trial. At the same time, there is a risk that actual perpetrators will go scot-free. Besides, the plethora of cases being filed against Awami League leaders and former MPs and ministers without evidence is making a farce of the judicial system, with legal experts saying these cases will not last in court or even pass the initial stage.

What's equally concerning here is the police's culture of always accusing the opposition. Before August 5, it was BNP-Jamaat men who were their favourite scapegoats, and now it is AL men. This is not only undermining the spirit of the anti-discrimination movement that led the mass uprising; it is also eroding public confidence in police. When discussions of freeing police force from the shackles of politicalisation are going on, the above pattern of police behaviour shows where the priorities of any reform initiative should be. The legal system must not be used as a tool of retribution under any circumstance. Rather, to ensure justice, police must investigate any cases without bias. They must come out of their mindset of appeasing those in power, and instead vow their loyalty to the people.

We need better data governance

For success in modern times, there is no alternative to reliable data

Data discrepancies among different government departments continue to be a significant concern, with the most recent mismatch arising in revenue collection and expenditure figures. According to a report in this daily, data from the finance ministry showed that Tk 277,925 crore was collected during the July-April period of FY23-24, while the National Board of Revenue (NBR) reported collecting Tk 289,376 crore, resulting in a discrepancy of Tk 11,451 crore. Similarly, regarding expenditure under the Annual Development Programme (ADP), the Implementation Monitoring and Evaluation Division (IMED) estimated that ministries and divisions had spent Tk 125,315 crore during July-April of FY23-24. However, the finance ministry's data shows an expenditure of Tk 92,126 crore, which is Tk 33,189 crore lower than the IMED's figure.

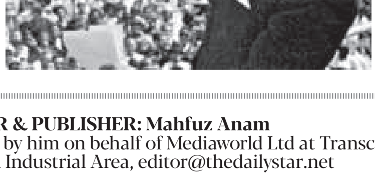
Last year, a similar discrepancy was observed between the tax collection figures published by the finance ministry and the NBR—a Tk 4,031 crore difference for July-April of FY22-23. Additionally, the ADP spending data showed a gap of Tk 41,136 crore between IMED and finance ministry figures. Apparently, the ministry calculates tax receipts based on reports from the Office of the Controller General of Accounts (CGA), while the tax administration accounts for revenue collection by including outstanding dues. This, officials say, is a major reason for the gap. But why are different departments using different methods of calculation? Why haven't they developed a uniform system of data evaluation that would ensure accuracy?

In April, Bangladesh Bank discovered that exports during July-April of FY23-24 were nearly $14 billion less than the shipment value of goods previously reported by the Export Promotion Bureau. The sheer margin of difference shocked everyone. These discrepancies and others highlight the poor state of data governance in the country. As economists have noted, if the finance ministry does not receive accurate spending data, it hampers the process of debt planning. Similar issues arise with other data inaccuracies that we seem to encounter frequently.

Given the circumstances, government institutions need to place greater emphasis on proper data governance. A systemic change to streamline the process has become essential so that flawed data doesn't lead to flawed policies. Experts say data mismatches may occur for two reasons—deliberate manipulation or accounting errors. There is strong suspicion that previous governments often deliberately manipulated data to enhance their image. We, therefore, hope that the interim government will take comprehensive actions to improve data governance among all relevant public institutions.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Civil rights march on Washington



On this day in 1963, some 200,000 people marched on Washington, DC, a high point of the civil rights movement, especially remembered for the famous "I Have a Dream" speech of Martin Luther King, Jr.

A good national address to start with

The chief adviser's much-awaited address to the nation came a little over two weeks after Dr Muhammad Yunus had taken over the helm of Bangladesh under unique circumstances. The Nobel peace laureate was on his way back from the Paris Olympics when people back home had already chosen him to lead the interim government. It rarely happens that a leader is chosen by national consensus because of adulation and respect. That was three weeks ago. In the meantime, there were a couple of questions that made the rounds: the interim government's mandate and tenure.

The Yunus-led government is a result of a student protest for reform that turned into an anti-government campaign and culminated in a people's uprising that toppled an iron-clad regime of 15 years. Sheikh Hasina's dictatorial regime had destroyed the institutions necessary for a functional state with respect for law and order. The 84-year-old professor of economics, renowned around the world for his social business concept, was a victim of the previous regime himself. Hence, reforms were always going to be a priority for the incumbents. There was a slight indication to the nature of reforms as Yunus mentioned them briefly to a reception of diplomats earlier this month, and some isolated mentions from some of the advisers. But this was the first time that the chief adviser elaborately laid out his vision of the reforms, for which he must be commended.

Chief Adviser Dr Muhammad Yunus addressed the nation on August 25, 2024.

Dr Yunus also touched upon certain challenges and urged the people to bear with him and have patience. As for the reforms, he predictably stressed on judiciary, law and order, administration, Election Commission, and the media. But the de facto prime minister also mentioned agriculture, health, and education. He mentioned a police commission and a banking commission. One of the advisers had previously mentioned media commission, but the chief adviser said he would carry out reforms to ensure free flow of information. He said the incumbents would take a strong stand against corruption. There is wholehearted agreement from most quarters that we need these reforms desperately. But there is also little doubt that all these reforms would take years, if not decades.

Having laid out his vision of reforms, the chief adviser rightly left it up to the political forces and the people. He mentioned twice in the same breath that his tenure and mandate would only be a reflection of the people's will, and that his government's tenure was entirely a matter of political decision. One can only interpret that as the incumbents' attempt to secure political as well as social acceptance of the government's reforms as well as its tenure.

One might venture to say that while Dr Yunus laid out his elaborate vision of reforms, he sought the people's mandate to endorse it—or rather, that he would like the people to set the limit, hence his mention of "the bare minimum that must be done." We recognise that the 170-plus million people of this country do not have a mechanism at their disposal through which they may express their opinion. Hence, it would perhaps be most prudent for the incumbents to achieve this through dialogue with experts, interest groups, researchers, academics and practitioners of the field. These people will then be able to set the ceiling.

At the same time, there is the important question of the interim government's tenure which, as Dr Yunus rightly said, has to be a purely political decision. But one must caution that his understanding of political acceptance must stem from having listened to the whole cross-section of the people.

Since many people are frustrated with predatory politics and the winner-take-all culture, engagement with the full spectrum of current political forces would still not mean full representation of the electorate. The chief adviser has only spoken to centre-right-leaning parties in his attempt to engage the political parties. Surely, the absence of leftist progressive liberal forces among his audience was an accidental omission. One can only presume that the omission of the 14-party alliance was out of practicality.

Hence—short of a referendum, which has its limitations and may well prove to be impractical under the circumstances—this regime would do well to engage with a broad range of stakeholders to ascertain public opinion. These could include professional bodies, businesses, students, trade unions, and the wider civil society.

Most Bangladeshis see this transition as an opportunity to rebuild the country. They are eager to cooperate and help the government in any way they can. These dialogues must begin soon before the exuberance subsides.

2024 FLOODS

Facts, feelings, and the art of engineering diplomacy

SHAFIQUL ISLAM

Just weeks after mass protests toppled Bangladesh's long-serving prime minister, the country is now grappling with a new crisis: devastating floods that have claimed lives and affected millions. With communication lines down and vital infrastructure damaged, the interim government faces the dual challenge of managing the disaster and combating the surge of misinformation.

In times of crisis, feelings often overshadow facts. Yet, distinguishing between the two is crucial for effective disaster management. This is where the art of engineering diplomacy can make a difference. By fostering cooperation with India, Bangladesh can develop a more reliable flood forecasting system. This collaboration can also help rebuild trust with India, shifting the focus from blame to exploring joint solutions for many shared problems.

The 2024 floods in Bangladesh didn't just happen by chance—they were the result of a perfect storm of climatic events. Firstly, we're in the thick of the monsoon season, which is hitting harder than usual this year. Add to that the Madden-Julian Oscillation, a powerful force driving warm, moist air from the Bay of Bengal toward the coast. To top it off, the jet stream over Central Asia has been positioned in a way that funnels even more rain into both Bangladesh and India. The combination of these factors has led to a series of intense rainfall events since late May, causing unprecedented flooding in many parts of both countries.

But not all floods are created equal, and this year's have been particularly early and severe. In late May, Cyclone Remal hammered southern Bangladesh and eastern India, with widespread floods leaving nearly 30 million people without power. Then, mid-June brought relentless rains that submerged Sylhet and Sunamganj, areas that received 242mm of rain in a single day—well above the monthly average. Southeastern regions didn't fare much better, with additional storms causing severe flooding in places like Feni and Cumilla.

On August 21, Feni recorded an unprecedented 312mm of rain in a single day, causing several rivers in the region to swell beyond danger levels. While extreme rainfall has been the primary catalyst for these floods, there is also speculation that the release of excess water from dams and barrages may have contributed to localised impacts. However, these releases are unlikely to be the main cause of the widespread inundation.

For context, consider the Dumboor Dam on the Gomati River in Tripura, India, which has a capacity of around 670 million cubic metres. By comparison, the rainfall over Feni on August 21 alone generated approximately 300 million cubic meters of water. This suggests that the rainfall itself played a much larger role in the flooding than any water released from the dam.

Across social media, many in Bangladesh are pointing fingers at India, accusing it of worsening the floods by releasing water from its dams and barrages. India has countered these accusations, attributing the flooding to natural factors, primarily the heavy monsoon rains.

The deep-seated mistrust between Bangladesh and India, exacerbated by recent geopolitical tensions and the spread of misinformation, has multiple layers. First, since Bangladesh's independence in 1971, India has often been perceived as a dominant regional power, influencing political and economic decisions within Bangladesh. Second, the close relationship between India and the recently ousted government of Bangladesh has intensified perceptions that former's interests have been prioritised over the latter's national interests, solidified by the former prime minister's exile in India. Third, the employment of Indian professionals in Bangladesh, despite high local unemployment, has deepened feelings of economic exploitation, compounded by the growing trade imbalance between the two countries. Fourth, long-standing disputes over water-sharing, especially involving the Ganges and Teesta rivers, have been a major source of tension. And finally, the spread of misinformation, fuelled by geopolitical developments, has exacerbated existing distrust.

To navigate disasters like the 2024 floods effectively, we must separate facts from fiction. This is where engineering diplomacy becomes crucial. It's not just about constructing physical infrastructure—it's about building trust and cooperation, both within our borders and beyond.

Two recent developments highlight this approach in action. First, the remarkable relief efforts led by students at Dhaka University, who mobilised to provide support to flood victims, demonstrate the power of grassroots action in the face of a disaster. Second, Chief Adviser Dr Muhammad Yunus's proposal to establish a high-level mechanism between Bangladesh and India to jointly tackle emergencies like floods signals a significant step towards regional cooperation.

The interim government has a unique opportunity to leverage this moment, not only to enhance flood forecasting systems, but also to address broader issues with India. By adopting a principled pragmatic framework, Bangladesh can develop solutions that are technically sound, socially acceptable, ethically responsible, and politically feasible. Some key areas for collaboration may include: developing a shared flood forecasting system that integrates processes, people, and politics, operationalising agreements to protect the Sundarbans, exploring infrastructure projects that enhance regional connectivity through Bangladesh, and addressing economic disparities and trade imbalances.

The floods of 2024 have shown us that it's time for a new approach—one that combines technical know-how with diplomatic skills. As M Inamul Haque correctly pointed out in this daily, "This situation needs to be handled diplomatically... we must avoid panicking, even though it's difficult. Panicking often leads to more problems." In these fast-moving and uncertain times, we need to be both principled and pragmatic.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION 2024

Kamala Harris should change her Gaza policy

Ramisa Rob
is in-charge of Geopolitical Insights at The Daily Star.

RAMISA ROB

The words "Palestine" and "Gaza" were missing a bit too much during the Democratic National Convention (DNC), which nominated the first female Black Democratic presidential nominee in history, in Chicago—the city with the largest population of Palestinian Americans in the United States. Widely popular former First Lady Michelle Obama said, "Hope is making a comeback," since Biden passed the torch to Kamala Harris. The Democratic Party has undeniably witnessed a new refreshing momentum, nostalgic of Barack Obama's first election campaign. But that hope she spoke of was not shared by roughly 30,000 pro-Palestine protesters—led in part by Palestinians and Jewish activists—who filled up the streets of Chicago and demanded that Harris earn their votes by ending the genocide in Gaza.

Kamala Harris has a tiny lead over Trump in the swing states of Michigan and Pennsylvania. These polls also don't factor Green Party candidate Jill Stein, who will likely take up some progressive votes from Arab Americans and generally those who care about Gaza, and put Harris in the back foot. Polls can never be trusted blindly and Harris should not take it for granted—a lesson from Clinton's loss to Trump in 2016, where polls wrongly predicted an easy sweep across the country for the first female Democratic nominee.

Pro-Palestinian delegates to the DNC, including Abbas Alawieh, an "uncommitted" delegate from Michigan, staged a sit-in protest outside the United Center. Prior to the DNC, the "Uncommitted Delegates" had been calling for campaign organisers to allow a Palestinian American to speak about Gaza, for a humble five minutes. Georgia state Rep Ruwa Romman, a Palestinian American Democrat, had drafted an appeal for unity, stating, "Let's commit to electing Vice-President Harris and defeating Donald Trump who uses my identity as a slur." The draft was never vetted and all requests were denied.

On the other hand, the parents of Hersh Goldberg-Polin, an Israeli American who lost part of his left arm and was taken hostage by Hamas during the October 7 attacks, spoke on the stage. The DNC's decision to provide space for only the Israeli side of the story, and not the Palestinian side, reflect the same-old prejudicial practices that have paved the way for Israel to commit a US-backed genocide with no end in sight.

Earlier in July, Kamala Harris had imparted hope regarding a shift from Joe Biden's disastrous policy on Gaza, when after meeting Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, she said she would not be silent about Palestinian suffering. All that hope has been effectively squashed by her acceptance speech in the DNC, as she loudly carolled her commitment to "Israel's right to defend itself," which means the provision of weapons to continue carpet-bombing Gaza and the ethnic cleansing of a devastated population under a manufactured "existential and security crisis" that Israel is purportedly facing, when in reality everyone can see it is what Palestinians are facing. Harris highlighted the sexual violence committed by the "terrorist organisation Hamas," and chose to stay silent about the sexual violence committed by the Israel Defense Forces (IDF) against Palestinian detainees—both men and women—documented by CNN and the United Nations. She called the situation in Gaza "heartbreaking," hypocritically eschewing that it is only the case because of the US's supply of lethal weapons to Israel's warmongering cabinet for the past 10 months.

Pragmatically, it is understandable that Harris cannot win a US election by going hardline against Israel. But her chances of winning by alienating those who care about Palestine are looking slimmer by the day. As Uncommitted Democrats take note of their censorship in the DNC, Green Party nominee Jill Stein, who has been a fierce critic of Israel's genocide, is reportedly choosing a Palestinian American as her running mate. Stein has made direct outreach to Palestinian Americans in Michigan, where Israel's genocidal war in Gaza has hit home with 390,000 Arab Americans. In this very key swing state, Harris made a blunder at a rally recently, when protesters chanted, "Kamala, Kamala, you can't hide! We won't vote for genocide!" What could've been a moment for her to express support and vow to take action, the vice-president snapped instead, saying, "If you want Donald Trump to win, then say that. Otherwise, I'm speaking," with an entitled stare. It is her job to convince voters to elect her instead of Trump, not the other way around.

The contrast between Stein and Harris so far suggests that Harris will definitely lose some voters over the issue of Palestine, even if Stein's bid to the White House is a long shot. Some people simply don't care if Donald Trump will win, more than they care about the inhumanity they have seen in Gaza where the Biden-Harris administration is complicit. Robert Francis Kennedy, Jr recently ended his campaign, endorsing Trump, but Stein told the Newsweek that she intends on staying in the race, that she will never back Kamala Harris, even if it means facing a repeat of accusations from Democrats that she contributed to a Trump victory. Voters appealing to a third party like Stein for being more progressive and humanitarian delivers a huge blow for Harris and a gift for Trump.

The liberal US media—which has shown its duplicity regarding the lives of Palestinians in Gaza since October 7 and have their fair share of complicity for parroting Israeli propaganda—has taken a U-turn of sorts. The New York Magazine now calls what is happening to citizens in Gaza "an ongoing genocide," for which Harris should end US support. Even The New York Times—who published a major uncorroborated report of gender-based sexual violence committed by Hamas on October 7—is now running op-eds like "Harris can change Biden's policy on Israel by upholding the law" by Peter Beinhart, where he argues that instead of an arms embargo, Harris, as a prosecutor, could uphold the law that prohibits the US from assisting any unit of a foreign security force that commits "gross violations" of human rights.

Most pro-Dem media outlets advance an agenda with their journalism, for many self-serving reasons, some of which are valid such as the fact that Donald Trump is a titanic threat to US democracy and press freedom. The media now understands that Biden's Gaza policy poses a significant problem for Harris, and she needs to distance herself from it to defeat Trump. Karen Attiah, a Black journalist in The Washington Post, wrote an article regarding the division between Black feminists on Harris regarding Gaza. Before the DNC, her words were clear: keeping silent on Gaza is too steep a price to pay for electing the first Black woman president.

As the DNC concluded, a letter to the editor was issued in response to Attiah's article, with the title, "Americans are choosing Harris or Trump, not Harris or Gaza." The writer argued, "Electing former President Donald Trump is a far greater existential threat to our country and the world, including Palestinians. Withholding votes from Ms Harris puts that outcome into play." The writer does not seem to realise that Harris herself has to say these words or devise a strategy out of it. The Harris campaign has steered clear from paying much attention to Donald Trump's insults—supposedly a learning lesson from Hilary Clinton's campaign—but she has to somehow assert that Trump would be even worse for Gaza, and that she will also be better than Biden, as it has been the current administration's biggest failure.

As of August 26, Harris maintains a tight lead of 2.5 percent in Michigan polls over Trump, and in Pennsylvania, the second largest home for Arab Americans, she maintains a 1.1 percent lead based on 29 polls. These polls don't include Jill Stein, who could take up the percentage of the leads that Harris has over Trump. Another fact to note: polls are polls. They can never be blindly trusted and should not be taken for granted—a lesson from Clinton's loss to Trump in 2016, where polls wrongly predicted an easy sweep across the country for the first female Democratic nominee.

After a loud DNC, it seems that the US media has come to Harris' defence, to tame the moral outrage over Gaza and paint the whole week in a positive light for voters. CNN praised Harris, calling her "tough and defensive" of Israel, but also "compassionate" of Palestinians. But we've seen starved skeletons, dead children under rubble, a headless child, charred bodies, and dismembered human beings in plastic bags in the besieged strip. The US has sent Israel more weapons than humanitarian aid to Palestinians, and that's a hard pill to swallow. So mere "compassion" will not work. If Kamala Harris wants to lose to Donald Trump in November, then she should continue speaking and silencing Palestinian voices. Otherwise, she should start speaking to her campaign managers regarding how to change her rhetoric and policy on Gaza before it's too late.

India needs to pursue equal partnership with Bangladesh

India is often portrayed as Bangladesh's closest ally. The two nations share a strategic partnership grounded in shared history, economic interdependence and strong cultural ties. However, this relationship has frequently been characterised by a power imbalance, with India being in a position to exert dominance over Bangladesh. If Bangladesh and India are to forge a more equitable friendship, three existing bilateral issues need to be addressed.

A vexing issue that has been in deadlock for decades is the disadvantages imposed on Bangladesh for being a lower riparian state. Even though the recent floods cannot solely be attributed to India opening the Dumbur dam, the situation serves as an eye-opener on our water-sharing agreements (or lack thereof), flood management capacity, and the need for bilateral negotiations where both countries can mitigate the damages from heavy rainfall without harming the other. Teesta River's water-sharing agreement is one example. If current trends continue, the Teesta water shortage could lower Bangladesh's rice production by roughly 8 percent by 2030 and 14 percent by 2050. This scarcity raises production costs and risks for farmers and also triggers social issues such as migration, displacement, and poverty.

Even though Sheikh Hasina's government allowed India several benefits, including the upcoming railway line that will allow the transport of goods and travel of passengers (including military personnel) from India to its seven northeastern states via Bangladesh, Dhaka continues to be sidelined. Under Hasina's government, Dhaka had not been able to leverage its concessions to India to make progress with Teesta or other shared rivers. The interim government now has an opportunity to address this issue and build strong political consensus for a more equitable and sustainable water-sharing and flood mitigation arrangement between the two neighbours.

The second issue is the border killings between India and Bangladesh. Despite the close friendship between the two countries, the border is riddled with mindless deaths of Bangladeshis at the hands of the Indian Border Security Forces (BSF). Ain o Salish Kendra, a human rights organisation in Bangladesh, conservatively reported that between 2013 and 2023, 332 people were killed by the BSF, averaging 30 deaths per year. Aside from the killings, the BSF has also subjected Bangladeshis at the border to gruesome torture and abductions. It makes little sense for two countries that share exemplary ties to allow such lethality on their border. Although the leadership in India pledged zero deaths, this reality is yet to materialise as state promises are unaligned with BSF actions at the border. If the previous home advisor's words are an indication, the Bangladesh Border Guard (BGB) will no longer remain passive and retreat in border conflicts in the face of aggression from the Indian side. But more importantly, it is pertinent for the interim government to address the crisis and catalyse strong political will from its Indian counterparts to end the killings and bring to book the BSF soldiers who engaged in prior misconduct that led to the loss of lives and lifelong injuries of Bangladeshis.

A third contentious point that requires a comprehensive reassessment is Adani's Godda power plant in Jharkhand which charges Bangladesh an exorbitant, above-market rate. The deal was initiated back in 2015 by Modi—who Adani's chairman is close to—and signed in 2017 with Hasina's blessing, despite the deal not being favourable for Bangladesh, as reported by The Washington Post.

Even though a report by the non-profit AdaniWatch suggested Bangladesh might have at least two ways to exit the contract, it turns out that Adani made sure to insert clauses that prevent Bangladesh from leaving even if Adani breaches the contract. First, private coal-fired power plants in India can export electricity if only India has a power surplus, which it currently does not. Second, the contract states that the Bangladesh Power Development Board (BPDB) must pay a levy of taxes and duties that Adani itself is exempt from, especially since it was declared a Special Economic Zone (SEZ). BPDB was supposed to be officially informed of these changes for a price adjustment within 30 days, but Adani failed to do so. BPDB still went ahead with the contract, even fast-tracking it under the political compulsion of the Hasina government. Unfortunately, as The Daily Star pointed out, Bangladesh can only leave if Adani's breach of contract negatively impacts the latter's ability to produce electricity. As it stands, making unethical profits off the backs of Bangladeshi tax-payers will not be harming Adani's bottom line anytime soon.

Despite the ironclad agreement, there may be a way out. Unresolved disputes may be "settled in accordance with the Rules of Arbitration of the Singapore International Arbitration Centre, 2016, 6th Edition," according to a lawyer interviewed by The Daily Star. If such a pathway can be pursued, the interim government may probe into the matter to identify any scopes for dispute resolution. Getting out of this contract or renegotiating the prices would drastically minimise costs in a country that is already plagued with debts and dwindling foreign reserves.

Whether it's our riparian rights, contentious border killings, or power deals designed to empty Bangladesh's coffers, it is true that Bangladesh often gets the short end of the stick. But Bangladesh can leverage its advantage as a zone of influence for great power politics and make use of its concessions to its upper riparian neighbour to ensure the sustainable prosperity of its land and people. It is also in the best interest of both India and Bangladesh to ensure the survival and thriving of their long-lasting exemplary friendship—with transparency and broad political consensus benefitting both countries equally.

As Bangladesh grapples with severe flooding, celebrities have united to support those affected by this disaster. Regions such as Feni, Noakhali, Lakshmipur, Cumilla, Habiganj, Moulvibazar, Rangamati, and Khagrachari are experiencing one of the worst floods in recent history. In response, many in the entertainment industry have taken action.

Arosh Khan and Tasnuva Tisha have travelled to Feni to offer support.

Some have personally delivered relief materials to affected areas, while others have made financial contributions to support the victims. Their collective efforts are providing much-needed assistance to those struggling in this dire situation.

Young artistes Arosh Khan and Tasnuva Tisha have journeyed to Feni to offer support. The actors, along with others, have formed groups to deliver relief supplies to affected villages by boat. In Feni, they organised dry food distributions and Arosh made two consecutive visits to flood-hit areas to provide support.

Actress Rukaiya Jahan Chamak has taken the initiative to support flood victims in Noakhali. She has provided clean drinking water, dry food, and essential medicines, doing her part to bring relief to struggling communities.

Singer Asif Akbar has addressed the ongoing flood crisis by launching the Asif Akbar Foundation. He announced this initiative, explaining that the foundation's main goal is to raise funds to support flood victims and assist in relief efforts during various natural disasters across the country. He shared his vision, saying, "I have fan clubs in all 64 districts. I plan to form teams of 11 members from each club who will actively stand by people in their districts during such disasters."

Musician Zunayed Evan from the band Ashes has also travelled to the flood-hit areas to aid victims. Joining him in these efforts are director Mohammad Mostafa Kamal Raaz, Shakal Ahmed, Rafat Mozumder Rinku, Emel Haque, and actors Airin and Rashed Simanto, along with many others, who are actively contributing to the relief efforts.

Producer and actor Monowar Hossain Dipjol has once again stepped up to support flood victims. He is leading efforts to distribute relief supplies to those in need. His team has already delivered aid by truck in Cumilla and Feni, and they have also reached remote areas by boat to ensure help reaches the most affected regions.

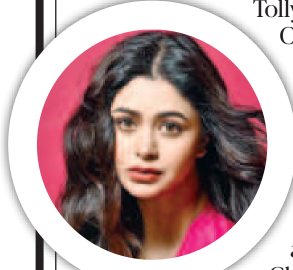
Actor Siam Ahmed has pledged to donate two months' earnings to support the victims, sharing this decision in a heartfelt video on Facebook. He also called on other media professionals to contribute according to their abilities. His wife, Shamma Rushafy Abantee, a digital content creator, has pledged to donate one month's earnings as well.

Additionally, actresses Azmeri Haque Badhan and Zakia Bari Mamo have promised to provide clothing for those affected by the floods. Artistes including Mehazabien Chowdhury, Tasnia Farin, Apu Biswas, Ananta Jalil, Barsha, and Imran Mahmudul have contributed various food supplies to aid the victims.

A concert held in the Dhaka University area successfully raised both relief supplies and funds for flood victims. The event, titled Joruri Shongjog, featured performances by over 30 bands and artistes, including Shironamhin, Sonar Bangla Circus, F Minor, Arghadeb, Sayan, and Krishnakoli. Their efforts have significantly contributed to providing aid to flood-affected communities.

Additionally, the Film Directors Association, the Film Actors Association, the Actors Guild, Get Up Stand Up, and the Bangladesh Artistes Society are all actively working under their respective banners to provide much-needed relief to flood victims.

Ritabhari Chakraborty demands justice for sexual assault survivors



Tollywood actor Ritabhari Chakraborty has come forward with bold accusations of sexual misconduct within West Bengal's entertainment industry.

Without naming anyone specifically, Chakraborty called for exposing those responsible and urged India West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee to initiate an investigation akin to the Hema Commission, which recently shed light on similar issues in the Malayalam film industry.

In a Facebook post on Monday night, she wrote, "The Hema Commission report exposing sexual assaults in the Malayalam film industry has left me wondering why the Bengali film industry isn't taking similar steps. Many of the reports echo experiences I've had or ones that actresses I know have faced."

Rokeya Prachi removed from Telepab VP post

Rokeya Prachi, a renowned actress and director, has been removed from her position as vice president of the Television and Digital Program Producers' Association of Bangladesh (Telepab), amid allegations of disciplinary breaches.

Director Shazzad Hossain Dodul, general secretary at Telepab, confirmed the news. While Prachi will retain her membership in the association, she has lost her influential role as vice president.

Dodul indicated that an official statement, detailing the specific breaches committed by Prachi, will be released to the media shortly. As of Tuesday afternoon, Prachi has not provided any comments regarding her dismissal.

Dhaka should engage with Arakan Army

the 1970s, with the largest one being in 2017. Currently, Bangladesh shelters more than a million Rohingya.

Rohingya repatriation to Myanmar and improving trade with the neighbouring country and the other ASEAN countries are the major objectives of Bangladesh.

Bangladesh has been maintaining relations with the Myanmar junta since it assumed power for Rohingya repatriation.

The emergence of a de facto statelet on its border that aspires for permanent autonomy will require Bangladesh's interim government to expand the scope of its engagement with the AA, the ICG said.

Despite the challenges Bangladesh faces domestically, it also has a key role in Rakhine State as do other outside actors, it said.

"While strengthening ties with the group, Bangladeshi envoys should emphasise the importance of treating the Rohingya humanely and with dignity," the report said.

To stabilise the borderlands and address drivers of irregular migration, Dhaka should also allow for more humanitarian aid to the area and trade across the frontier.

"Finally, Dhaka should improve security in the refugee camps, reduce the influence of armed groups there and allow a genuine Rohingya civil society movement to emerge."

The ICG said the other foreign governments should explore how they can work with the AA and neighbouring states to improve humanitarian access and expand assistance for all ethnic communities affected by conflict in central and northern Rakhine State.

For neighbouring states and other outside actors, the emerging situation in Rakhine State creates quandaries, not least the question of how to work with a de facto authority like the AA amid an international system that for legal and practical reasons privileges relationships with nation-states.

Despite the dilemmas, the ICG said neighbours and donors will likely find that the greatest potential for positive humanitarian and security impact by working with Rakhine State's de facto administrators toward mutual goals.

The AA forces have been accused of serious human rights abuses against the Rohingya, including the attack on August 5, for which the group denies responsibility.

Rakhine State requires leaders of both the Rakhine and Rohingya communities to rise above their historical animosity and defuse communal tensions.

"The AA should incorporate more Rohingya into its administration and commit to supporting an independent investigation into allegations of abuses against civilians, which should begin as soon as practicable."

Seek resolution at UNHRC session responsibility of accounting for the past to steer the country toward a rights-respecting future," said Lucy McKernan, deputy UN Geneva director at HRW.

"The government should support a Human Rights Council-backed investigation into recent abuses while also seeking UN backing for an independent domestic inquiry into the former government's 15 years of rights violations," she said.

The interim government should urgently implement measures to bring civilian oversight over security forces, disband the notorious Rapid Action Battalion, reform institutions in line with international human rights standards, and revise abusive laws.

To effectively follow through on its commitments to justice and accountability amid a highly divisive political environment, the interim government should ask the UNHRC to establish an independent mechanism with a comprehensive mandate to investigate, collect, store, and analyse evidence and cooperate with credible and independent national and international judicial bodies toward accountability for the July and August violence and its root causes, the rights organisation said.

A UNHRC-mandated investigation would have the greatest independence and credibility for Bangladeshis, who distrust domestic institutions and could avoid the political interference that could undermine purely domestic measures, it said.

The HRW suggested that the council resolution should also mandate OHCHR to monitor the human rights situation in Bangladesh through the transition period until there are free and fair elections, and report back regularly.

The HRW said the recent protests reflect the frustration that Bangladesh's economic progress has been unevenly shared.

Social protection should be reformed to guarantee an adequate level of protection for all, and to ensure that no one is excluded from public benefits because of their inability to pay bribes or because they lack social or political connections, it said.

It called upon the interim government to reform institutions, the security sector, and its justice and legal system, all of which have been deeply eroded under the previous government and earlier administrations, to bring about lasting, human rights changes.

The interim government should welcome the technical assistance of OHCHR to ensure the full independence of legal and judicial bodies, the rights organisations said.

In addition to disbanding the Rapid Action Battalion, the interim government should implement robust human rights training protocols across all security forces and remove laws that enable impunity for security force abuse, Human Rights Watch said.

"Without deep institutional reform and UN support to ensure independence and transparency, the hard-won advancements in Bangladesh could be easily lost," McKernan said.

"The UN and member states should demonstrate their support for all Bangladeshis by backing fact-finding and accountability measures and by investing in rights-based institutional and security sector reform," she said.

the victims' families searched for them but could not find them.

Early yesterday, locals found the bodies beside a road in Sadekpur area.

On information, police recovered the bodies, said Mohammad Mozaffar Hossain, officer-in-charge of Brahmanbaria Sadar Model Police Station.

"We have sent the bodies to Brahmanbaria General Hospital morgue for autopsy. The reasons for the deaths will be known after autopsy," he added.

Contacted, the hospital's Medical Officer Anik Dev said, "We have found multiple injury marks in the private parts of the girls. After primary investigation, we assume that they were raped around four days ago. However, further investigation is required for this to be confirmed."

Maimuna's father Abdul Barik, hinting at the possible involvement of a madrasa teacher, said they want a proper investigation and punishment of the people responsible.

Reject writ petition for banning AL

Islam during a hearing on the writ petition yesterday.

Following the hearing, the bench set September 1 as the date for issuing an order on the writ.

Arifur Rahman Murad Bhuiyan, executive director of Sarda Society, a rights organisation, filed the petition with the HC as a public interest litigation on August 19, seeking its order to ban AL as a political party and cancel its registration for the indiscriminate killing of students and general public during the anti-government movement.

In the petition, he implored the HC to pass an order fixing the tenure of the current interim government at three years, rename the institutions that were named after Sheikh Hasina, bring back Tk 11 lakh crores laundered abroad, and transfer officials who were appointed on contract during past regimes of the AL government.

During yesterday's hearing, Attorney General Asaduzzaman told the HC that the person who submitted the writ petition has no "locus standi" to file such a petition as his organisation's constitution does not allow him to do so.

He also said the writ petitioner did not include the Awami League as a party in the petition and did not serve any notice to AL prior to filing the writ.

He argued, therefore, the writ petition was unacceptable.

The attorney general then asked the HC to fine Arifur Rahman Murad Bhuiyan for submitting the petition and taking up the court's time unnecessarily.

Hasina faces 5 more cases

Magistrate Md Saddam Hossain.

Former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan, AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader, former AL lawmakers Shamim Osman and Ramesh Chandra are among the accused.

The magistrate recorded the statement and asked the officer-in-charge of Jatrabari Police Station to register it as a First Information Report (FIR).

In Mohammadpur, Hasina and 21 others were sued for the killing of Mansur Miah, a machine operator at Buriganga Filling Station in Bosila on July 19.

The victim's brother Ainal Haque filed the case with a Dhaka court which asked the Mohammadpur Police OC to register it as an FIR.

Quader, Asaduzzaman, former AL lawmakers Ali Arafat and Jahangir Kabir Nanak, former inspector general of police Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, former DB chief Harun Or Rashid and former DMP commissioner Habibur Rahman are among the accused in the case.

Khorshed Alam brother of Miraz Hossain, who was killed on August 5, filed another case against Hasina and 91 others with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Belal Hossain.

The magistrate recorded his statement and asked the Demra Police OC to register it as an FIR.

Hasina and 40 others were sued for the killing of 21-year-old Nahidul Islam at Mirpur-10 on July 19.

The victim's brother Md Sabuj filed the case with a Dhaka court, which asked Mirpur Police OC to register it as an FIR.

Hasina' sister Sheikh Rehana and son Sajeeb Wazed Joy are among the accused.

In Rajshahi, SM Salahuddin Ahmmed Shamim Sarkar, convenor of Bagha upazila Chhatra Dal, filed a case against Hasina, former state minister for foreign affairs Shahriar Alam, and 52 others on charges of abduction and torture, said Bagha Police OC Abu Siddque.

According to the case statement, under the direct instruction of Hasina and the other accused, Salahuddin was picked up in front of the Bagha New Bus Stand on May 21, 2023.

He was tortured and shot in the leg before being handed over to the police, who later framed him in a false case, Salahuddin mentioned in the case.

The rest of the accused are leaders and activists of the Awami League and its affiliate organisations.

According to the case statement, under the leadership of Hasan Mahmud, the accused razed hills in the area for real estate companies in the port city.

The accused had been selling soil collected from the hills in Chattogram and other places through a syndicate. However, due to fear, no one dared to speak out against them at the time, the statement added.

On December 30, 2017, a landslide in the Rajanagar area under Rangunia killed three people, including a child.

The statement states that the landslide occurred as a result of the accused's indiscriminate hill-cutting as the forest department and local administration were unable to take action against them.

Dilruba Akter, wife of victim Muslim Uddin Milon, filed a complaint with the court of Rangpur Metropolitan Magistrate Raju Ahmed Babu, yesterday, said lawyers Palash Kanti Nag and Mofazzal Hossain Bakul.

The magistrate asked Rangpur Kotwali Police Station to record the complaint as a case.

Besides, many unnamed people were accused in the case.

According to the case statement, on July 19, a clash broke out between students and Awami League leaders and activists during a quota protest in the City Bazaar area. The incident escalated when police opened fire indiscriminately under the orders of the accused.

Milon was hit by a bullet at that time and taken to Rangpur Medical College and Hospital, where doctors declared him dead.

Under pressure from the accused, the body was hurriedly buried without an autopsy, the plaintiff alleged in the case statement.

Nepal stand between Bangladesh and elusive trophy

SPORTS REPORTER

The Bangladesh team management will be hoping to field a fully fit squad in the final of SAFF U-20 Championship when the men in red and green take on hosts Nepal at the ANFA complex with a target of winning the elusive title of regional youth championship.

Having beaten three-time champions India in the semifinals on Monday, the charges of Maruful Haque have apparently struggled to recover owing to a lack of facilities in Nepal. However, the head coach is expecting that the players will be fully fit before facing Nepal, who won the title in 2015 and 2017.

Bangladesh have never won the trophy in five previous attempts, despite making the final three times previously. They have not even been able to beat Nepal in four meetings.

"From Day 1 till now, the boys have been on the right track as we have come to this stage following ups and downs. If the boys remain fit and play according to game plan, we can return home with the trophy. I hope the boys will be fully fit before the final," Maruful said at the pre-final press conference yesterday.

The veteran coach fears Nepal could come stronger than the group stage match, where they beat Bangladesh 2-1 even though he believes his charges are ready to take more challenge this time.

"If they [Nepal] gave 80 percent in the group stage match against us, they will come stronger with 100 percent effort in the final. They may also change tactics compared to that match," Maruful said. "However, losing to Nepal once doesn't mean we will not be able to beat them in the final. If the boys can give their 100 percent and play according to game plan, it is possible for us to win."

Nepal will have the advantage on playing on their home turf, which is an artificial one, and in front of their home crowd and under familiar weather. Some of the Nepal players are also much quicker than their Bangladeshi counterparts while playing on the artificial turf, which is why Maruful is planning to change his strategy.

Bangladesh will be missing out on the services of experienced goalkeeper Mehedi Hasan Srabon, who returned to Dhaka on Tuesday following an injury in the semifinal, and experienced defender Kamacai Marma Aky, who was given marching order against India just a minute before the final whistle.

"After winning against India, the mental condition of the players is very strong but that match is now past. It is a new day and new opponents, who are a talented side with some quick wingers. I think we have to take more challenge in the final," said the UEFA A-licenced coach.

Nepal coach Urjan Sheshtha, however, is rating Bangladesh as a top team. "We see Bangladesh as the top team, who played a very good match against India. I think the final is going to be an interesting game where we will do our level best," said Shreshtha.

No bar on Shakib to continue playing
Bangladesh Cricket Board's (BCB) president Faruque Ahmed said that star all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan can continue to represent the country as long as he is not proven guilty of any misdeeds. "There are a lot of legal procedures left to prove someone guilty. At this moment there is no bar on Shakib to continue playing," Faruque said.

Jay Shah elected Independent Chair of ICC
Jay Shah, the current honorary secretary of the BCCI, has been elected unopposed as the Independent Chair of the ICC, and will assume his position on 1 December, 2024. On August 20, it was announced that current ICC Chair Greg Barclay would not seek a third term and would step down at the end of his tenure in November.

BCB scratching its head to solve the BPL problem

SAMSUL AREFIN KHAN

The newly-elected Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) president Faruque Ahmed has called a board of directors' meeting on Thursday where among several key issues, holding the upcoming Bangladesh Premier League (BPL) in scheduled time is likely to be discussed.

Faruque has inherited a BCB that has been in limbo ever since the fall of the Awami League government on August 5 in the face of a student-led people's movement. Many BCB directors, who had links with the previous government, have gone into hiding since, leaving various standing committees at a standstill.

Resuming activities of those standing committees with changes in personnel will be a key agenda in the meeting, as will be the forthcoming BPL, which is facing a plethora of challenges at the moment.

The biggest challenge is the uncertain status of several franchises whose owners had strong ties with Awami League and are on the run after the recent political developments in the country.

Comilla Victorians, the most successful team in BPL history with four titles, was run by Nafisa Kamal, daughter of Awami League lawmaker and former finance minister AHM Mustafa Kamal. Teams like Durdanto Dhaka, Fortune Barishal and Khulna Tigers are also known to have political ties.

The remaining three teams of the seven-team tournament – Sylhet Strikers, Chattogram Challengers and Rangpur Riders – are expected to continue but they are also facing financial challenges.

"The Awami League backed teams are not in the scene at the moment. Apart from that, the market situation is not good at all. There were sponsor issues in the previous editions and now the challenges will exacerbate," a franchise official told The Daily Star yesterday, wishing to remain anonymous.

"Previously, we would have to spend around Tk 15-16 crore each season and would hardly get Tk 3-5 crore from sponsors. Getting that same amount from sponsors is also unlikely for the next edition," he added.

Before the start of the last ICC T20 World Cup in the USA and West Indies, the BCB had reached out to the franchises, seeking their participation confirmation and some teams had responded positively.

However, since the change in government and Faruque taking over as BCB president, replacing Nazmul Hassan Papon who was an Awami League lawmaker, they are yet to establish any formal communication with those franchises.

Previously, the BCB had planned to hold the players' draft for the upcoming BPL in the first week of September as the tournament is scheduled between January 1 and February 11 next year. But after the recent changes in the board, holding the draft in the scheduled time seems highly unlikely.

"In these extraordinary circumstances, there is a big question whether the teams would play or not. The board is yet to receive confirmation from them as well. We have to see which teams are in a position to participate. We are currently working on that," a BCB official told the Daily Star, requesting anonymity.

"We are trying to stick to the legal framework. If the franchises do not respond, the board will then decide whether or not to terminate the contract. Whatever we do, we have to maintain the legal framework.

"We are closely monitoring the situation. We are also considering what the impact would be like if the number of participating teams went down to five from seven."

Another huge challenge for Faruque, who has been a staunch critic of BPL's financial issues over the years, would be to introduce a new structure for the tournament, which has been thrown into controversy many times due to mismanagement since its inception in 2012.

The BCB would also need to address the issue of some teams still not having cleared players' payments from the previous edition.

Amidst all the challenges, there is one silver lining as it was learnt that some interested companies have already met the newly-elected BCB president, showing interest to buy new franchises in the BPL, and the board is still holding out hope of going through with the event.

"We are very optimistic to hold the tournament in time. We believe we can make it happen," concluded the board official.

Offloading players Chelsea's main target: Maresca

REUTERS

Chelsea's main aim in the transfer window is to offload players from their squad so the club can balance its books, manager Enzo Maresca said on Tuesday.

Chelsea have been busy in the market since American owner Todd Boehly took over two years ago.

The West London club have spent over 160 million pounds ($211.50 million) on 11 new signings for this season, including winger Pedro Neto, forward Joao Felix, midfielder Kiernan Dewsbury-Hall, and goalkeeper Filip Jorgensen.

Chelsea sold Conor Gallagher to Atletico Madrid and defender Ian Maatsen joined Aston Villa, but they still have over 40 senior players registered are at risk of falling foul of the Premier League's profit and sustainability rules.

"The target is to solve the economic problem in terms of selling players," Maresca told the club website. "From there, we try to do our best and see where we arrive."

Chelsea's struggles to offload players are well documented, with England internationals Ben Chilwell and Raheem Sterling among a group of about 15 high earners frozen out by the manager and not training with the first team.

"For us, the target in this moment is to improve players. No one from the club asked me to compete for the Premier League, or compete for a Champions League spot," the Italian Maresca added.

"I want to see my team play the way we want to play, and compete every game. I want to see on the ball a clear idea of what they want, and off the ball, a very aggressive team. The most important thing is to be better game after game."

Djokovic 'avenges brothers' to kick off record bid

REUTERS, New York

Novak Djokovic's bid for a record 25th Grand Slam title kicked off on Monday with a rusty 6-2, 6-2, 6-4 win over qualifier Radu Albot in the US Open first round as the defending champion returned to the court after his Olympic triumph and managed to 'avenge' his brothers.

Three weeks after winning the singles title at the Paris Games, Djokovic toted his rackets and gear in a pair of gold-coloured bags onto centre court where the Arthur Ashe Stadium crowd gave him a hero's welcome.

But the Serb's golden touch was decidedly lacking in the late night match as he struggled with serve and racked up nearly twice as many unforced errors as winners.

For all that, he had more than enough weapons to handle Moldovan Albot in their first tour clash and claim a record 78th win at Arthur Ashe under a closed roof.

"I was not aware of it, to be honest with you," Djokovic said of the centre-court milestone.

"It's definitely the loudest stadium we have in the history of our sport. The night sessions are the best in the world here."

While having never played Albot before, Djokovic said he had done his homework on the 34-year-old who beat both his younger brothers Marko and Djordje during their playing days.

"They both lost to him so hopefully I can avenge my brothers tonight," he told ESPN commentator Brad Gilbert with a laugh before taking the court.

Djokovic duly avenged the family name in three clunky sets but he will hope for better from his game as he looks to move past Margaret Court on the all-time Grand Slam winners' list.

With 10 double-faults, his serve was wild by his usual standards, and he winced throughout the night as 40 unforced errors piled up.

His coach Nenad Zimonjic was an animated presence, barking instructions in Serbian at the wayward champion, who could convert only six out of 16 break points.

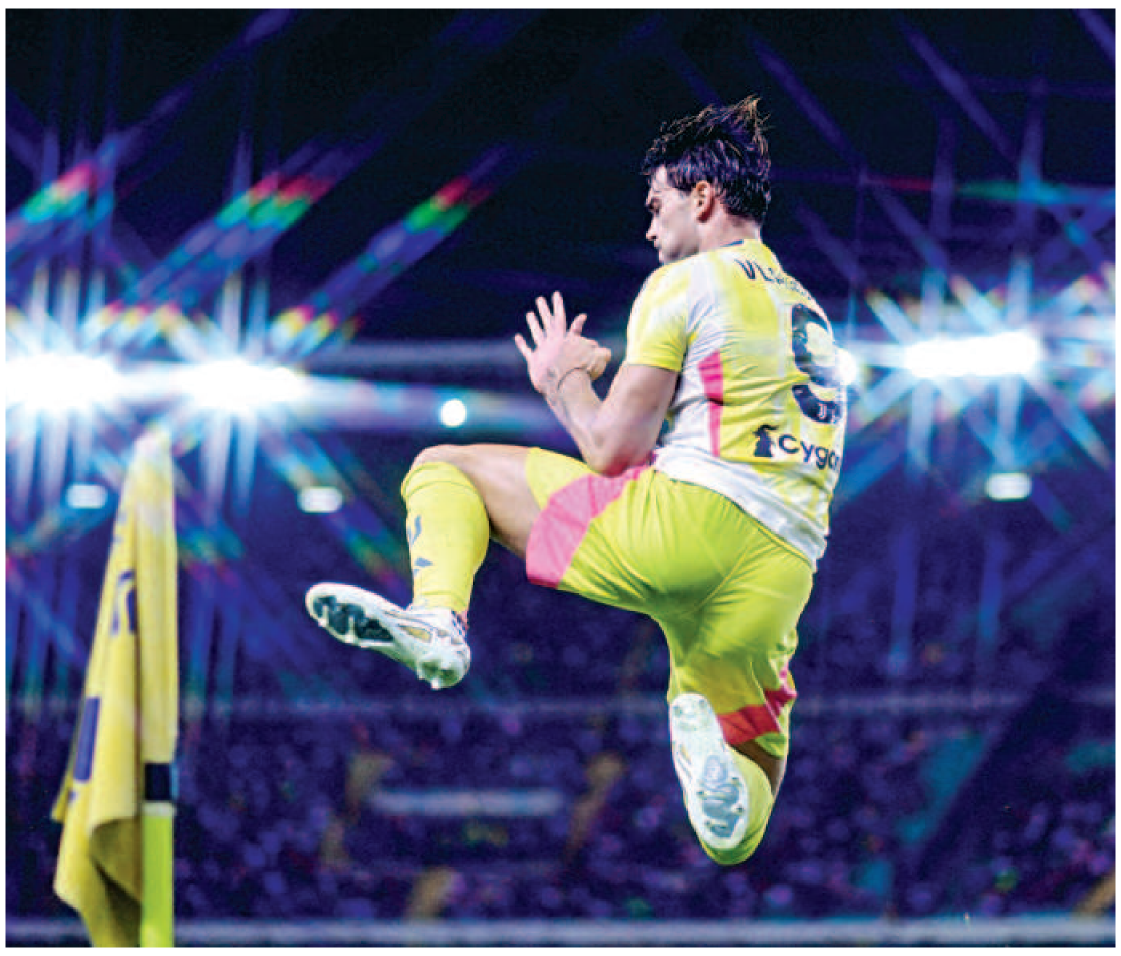
Though Djokovic was well off his best, Albot was unable to make the world number two pay.

After bright starts in the first two sets, he crumbled on serve in each of them before making a better game of the third.

In the twilight of a record-smashing career, Djokovic is eyeing several milestones in New York, including a fifth title at Flushing Meadows to match the professional era record held by Pete Sampras, Jimmy Connors, and Roger Federer.

He also hopes to become the first back-to-back winner in the men's singles since Federer's run of five successive titles from 2004-08.

Serbia's Djokovic will face fellow countryman Laslo Djere in the second round today.



Dusan Vlahovic netted a brace as Juventus continued their flying start under new manager Thiago Motta with a comfortable 3-0 victory at Hellas Verona in Serie A on Monday. Juventus, who look to reclaim the Serie A title after four years, are the only side to have kept their points tally at a maximum over the opening two match days of the Italian top flight and lead the standings with six points. GAZI TYRE FACTORY FIRE

Excessive heat, risky structure delay rescue op

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narayanganj

After a 32-hour battle, firefighters put out the massive blaze at Gazi Auto Tyres Factory in Narayanganj's Rupganj early yesterday.

They, however, could not enter the six-storey building due to extreme heat and the precarious state of the fire-ravaged structure.

They were uncertain about the start of the rescue operation as small fires continued to flare up since yesterday afternoon due to intense heat. Parts of the ceiling and walls of the building collapsed.

Meanwhile, a group of students visited the factory site in Rupshi area yesterday and compiled a list of 126 people reported missing by their families since Sunday night when the factory, owned by former Awami League minister Golam Dastagir Gazi, was set on fire by arsonists.

Md Alauddin, deputy assistant director of the Fire Service and Civil Defence, said they doused the blaze around 5:00am yesterday, but small fires flared up at some places due to intense heat.

"We are still trying to extinguish the

Reject writ petition for banning AL

Attorney general requests HC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Attorney General Md Asaduzzaman yesterday implored the High Court to reject the writ petition that sought its order on the government to ban Bangladesh Awami League as a political party and cancel its registration.

"The current interim government believes in the freedom of association that's enshrined in the constitution of Bangladesh and does not intend to ban any political parties.

"People involved in the previous authoritarian regime who are guilty of wrongdoings can be tried in court, but it's not right to ban any political party based on the actions of its members," AG Asadizzaman said.

He went on to say that the Awami League still has many good leaders and workers who believe in and practice party ideology.

The attorney general presented his arguments before the HC bench of Justices AKM Asaduzzaman and Muhammad Mahbub Ul

RAKHINE STATE

Dhaka should engage with Arakan Army

Suggests Int'l Crisis Group

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

As the Arakan Army is on the verge of expelling the Myanmar military in the Rakhine State, Bangladesh needs to expand the scope of its engagement with the rebel group, said the International Crisis Group (ICG) yesterday.

"After restarting its fight for Rakhine State in late 2023, the Arakan Army is in the process of carving out a proto-state of over a million people on the Myanmar-Bangladesh border," said the Brussels-based global think tank in a report.

Although the Myanmar military has countered with indiscriminate attacks and a blockade that is causing huge economic distress, the AA has pushed on, reaching northern townships where it is alleged to have attacked Muslim Rohingya civilians, it added.

Formed in the borderlands of China, the AA is responsible for some of the military junta's most decisive battleground losses over the past year.

The victories are rallying other ethnic armed groups and pro-democracy fighters to dislodge the military regime, which took control of the country by a coup against the National League of Democracy in February 2021.

The NLD leaders formed the National Unity Government (NUG) with the armed group Peoples' Democratic Force (PDF). Along with dozens of other ethnic armed groups, they have been fighting the military and now control large swathes of Myanmar.

Bangladesh's relationship with Myanmar remains sore because of the Rohingyas who fled to Bangladesh in

SCRAPPING OF CARETAKER GOVT

Petition filed for reviewing SC verdict

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A petition was filed with the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday seeking review of its verdict that scrapped the nonparty caretaker government system in May 2011.

Lawyers Sharif Bhuiyan and Tanim Hussain Shawon submitted the review petition on behalf of five eminent citizens, including Badiul Alam Majumdar, secretary of Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik, citing some 14 grounds for reconsideration of the apex court's judgement.

"We have submitted the review petition against the Appellate Division verdict that revoked the constitution's 13th amendment. We will present the petition before a full bench of this court once it reconvenes after the annual vacation," lawyer Sharif told The Daily Star yesterday.

The Appellate and High Court divisions of the SC is scheduled to go into an annual vacation on September 6. They will reopen on October 20.

Citing the review petition, Sharif said the caretaker government

No place for displaced as fighting rages

Israeli strikes kill 22; Israeli hostage rescued after 10 months

AGENCIES

Palestinians displaced by fighting in the Gaza Strip crowded onto the seashore as Israeli forces continued to battle Hamas fighters in central and southern areas, with health officials reporting at least 22 people killed in strikes yesterday.

Ceasefire talks were continuing in Cairo with little sign of a concrete breakthrough over key issues separating the sides, including future control over two corridors in the Gaza Strip once fighting ends.

Meanwhile, the Israeli military yesterday said it rescued an Israeli hostage in Gaza.

Kaid Farhan Alkadi, a 52-year-old Israeli Bedouin, was among the 251 people abducted by Hamas on October 7 last year.

"Alkadi was rescued... in a complex operation in the southern Gaza Strip," the statement said, adding that he was in a stable condition and being transferred to a hospital for a medical check-up.

Hostage rescues are rare, but Israeli forces have so far rescued alive eight captives since the ground military campaign in Gaza began on October 27. Seven hostages have been freed since a week-long truce ended in November.

Seek resolution at UNHRC session to set up mechanism

HRW urges interim govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Human Rights Watch has called on the interim government to seek a resolution at the upcoming session of UNHRC to establish an independent mechanism to investigate and pursue accountability for recent grave abuses in Bangladesh.

The 57th session of the United Nations Human Rights Council is set to begin on September 9, 2024.

In a letter to Chief Adviser Muhammad Yunus and other interim government officials, HRW emphasised the need for ensuring ongoing monitoring of Bangladesh's human rights situation by the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and for regular reporting to the council.

The interim government should also work with OHCHR and relevant UN experts to set up an independent domestic inquiry into enforced disappearances, torture, and extrajudicial killings during former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's 15-year administration, Human Rights Watch said in the letter released on Monday.

This domestic mechanism should operate with UN support and oversight to ensure its independence and adherence to international human rights standards.

"Following Sheikh Hasina's resignation amid mass protests, Bangladesh's interim government has the heavy

The most striking aspect of UCB is that it has redefined the landscape of higher education in Bangladesh by offering top university programmes from leading Australian and UK partner institutions right here at home.

MIFTAHUL JANNAT and MUJIB RAHMAN

Pursuing an international degree can be overwhelming and expensive. From navigating the admissions process to securing a visa and relocating to a new country, each step demands a significant amount of time and effort. Universal College Bangladesh (UCB) helps you transcend geographical boundaries by allowing you to prepare for, pursue, or even complete your long-dreamt foreign degree right here in Dhaka. Whether you come from a Bangla or English medium background, UCB's internationally accredited curriculum and classrooms will connect you directly to educational powerhouses in the UK, Australia, and beyond.

Overview of UCB

There are very few institutions like Universal College Bangladesh (UCB), located in the heart of Dhaka's elite district, that offer world-class educational services to Bangladeshi students. UCB, as the first-ever international higher education provider approved by the Ministry of Education in Bangladesh, has partnerships with some of the world's leading universities. It is a great privilege to be a part of the UCB family, especially as a student.

With the ever-growing opportunities for global exposure, it has become increasingly common for young Bangladeshis to seek better educational opportunities abroad. The most striking aspect of UCB is that it has redefined the landscape of higher education in Bangladesh by offering top university programmes from leading Australian and UK partner institutions right here at home.

As expected, all of UCB's programmes are taught by highly qualified faculty who creatively utilise small group teaching and provide personalised attention to every student. The teachers are equally committed to guiding students in all aspects of life, including extracurricular activities and other support services.

It's important to note that while studying abroad often requires students to live away from their families, UCB offers a wide array of world-class programmes close to home, with lower tuition fees compared to other international universities. This allows students to receive a top-tier education while staying within reach of their families, saving money, and maintaining a close connection with home. For students interested in pursuing studies abroad, UCB also provides support in test preparation, college applications, visa processing, and financial aid counselling.

Being a UCB student offers the opportunity for a successful career, particularly through placement opportunities with esteemed local and international multinational corporations. To this end, UCB has established partnerships with leading companies such as Singer, LankaBangla, and Berger.

UCB is also planning to develop a 15-acre fully integrated learning and living centre, equipped with world-class facilities for over 10,000 students. Additionally, UCB is in discussions with top-ranked universities globally and has already made significant strides in introducing new programmes in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics (STEM), as well as in soft sciences such as design, fashion, logistics, hospitality, and many other disciplines that will contribute to the economic development and success of Bangladesh.

SECUREACAREERFOR the next 40 years without leaving the country

In conversation with Professor Hew Gill,
President & Provost,
Universal College Bangladesh

The Daily Star (TDS): Universal College Bangladesh (UCB) has garnered a reputation for itself over the years. What are your organisational missions, and how would you describe the institution?

Hew Gill (HG): We are the first institution in Bangladesh to be given permission by the government to offer international higher education qualifications. At the moment, we offer qualifications from Australia and the UK, and we'll be expanding the number of qualifications from different countries over the next year. Our mission is to give Bangladeshi students the opportunity to access world-class international programmes right here in Bangladesh, in a way that is much more competitive. This approach alleviates concerns about visa, travel, and living expenses, allowing students to complete everything right here in Dhaka while receiving the same quality education as they would in Australia or the UK. Additionally, our programmes particularly enable HSC students to obtain the necessary qualifications to either enter universities directly or complete their international degrees right here in Bangladesh. This is a unique offer; no one else is providing this kind of opportunity here.

> Our international curriculum ensures that Bangladeshi students are studying the very latest in their chosen field of study. At the end of it, they receive a qualification recognised worldwide, without question. Everything we do is directly aligned with our partners, applying the same policies, procedures, teaching techniques, exams, and marking standards, all of which are checked by our partners.

TDS: Kindly give us a brief overview of the different courses offered by UCB. What makes them different from the courses available at other universities in Bangladesh?

HG: We offer four degrees from the University of London, provided under the academic direction of the London School of Economics. These degrees are in Business & Management, Accounting & Finance, Economics, and Finance. Bangladeshi students can complete all three years of these degrees right here in Bangladesh. By special agreement with the University of London and the London School of Economics, we also offer a programme called CHESS (Certificate of Higher Education in Social Sciences), which enables HSC students to join directly. Provided they pass CHESS, they can gain direct entry to the second year of the degree. CHESS is essentially a pathway programme, but at the same time, it covers the content of the first year. Normally, HSC students would need to complete some kind of foundation to gain direct admission into world-ranked universities. However, with the CHESS programme, they can complete this in the same time as the first year and then move directly into the second year, making it a total of three years after HSC.

What's unique about us? Our international curriculum ensures that Bangladeshi students are studying the very latest in their chosen field of study. At the end of it, they receive a qualification recognised worldwide, without question. A college education from the London School of Economics or Monash will open doors to any university for a Master's and also provide a competitive edge in terms of employability. Moreover, everything we do is directly aligned with our partners, applying the same policies, procedures, teaching techniques, exams, and marking standards, all of which are checked by our partners.

TDS: How do your students perform compared to students doing the same courses overseas? How do Bangladeshi students find studying an international curriculum?

HG: Bangladeshi students are performing exceptionally well. I had the privilege of attending our last Monash convocation and proudly reported to representatives from Monash and the Australian High Commissioner that our students are performing better than students in Australia. Our foundation programme has a 97% pass rate, with over 60% of our students achieving top grades. In our Monash continuation degree pathway programme, we have a 100% pass rate. We are extremely proud of this, and it demonstrates the remarkable capabilities of Bangladeshi students—they are among the best in the world. More importantly, we conduct student surveys, which reveal that our students are overwhelmingly satisfied, with ratings of 4.8 out of 5.

TDS: How do your courses prepare students for further study and employment? What difference do international qualifications make in the Bangladeshi job market?

PHG: Most young Bangladeshis do not realise how valuable they are in Bangladesh with an international education. They often believe that their value lies in going overseas. However, if you go to places like London, Sydney, or Melbourne, you become just another English speaker. Staying in Bangladesh with an international education allows you to communicate with multinational companies on equal terms while understanding the local culture, language, and business landscape—qualities that foreign businesses increasingly need. As a former international entrepreneur and banker, I found individuals with global knowledge to be invaluable. These skills not only secure top salaries now but will also be essential as Bangladeshi businesses expand internationally in the future. Our programmes equip students with critical thinking, language proficiency, and an understanding of global business structures, making them highly employable and valuable in both local and international markets. So, if you're a student today, you'll be extremely valuable to foreign businesses for the next 20 years and to Bangladeshi businesses looking to expand overseas in the following 20 years. Thus, your entire career over the next 40 years, with an international education, is likely to be very successful.

TDS: In your opinion, how much have you been able to achieve your organisational aspirations since inception? Can you also share a bit about the future plans for UCB?

PHG: We have achieved quite a lot in the last year. We doubled our student numbers, launched four new University of London degree programmes, and are preparing to offer more in collaboration with the University of Central Lancashire, who sent a team here in July for an inspection. We have already passed the accreditation validation and received 11 commendations for excellence—the highest number ever awarded to any institution, including their partners in the UK. We have also improved our academic performance. Next year, we plan to expand into areas such as Fashion Design, Psychology, and Communications, and we're also developing STS Knowledge City, a 10,000-seat campus offering a broad range of international programmes.

"We offer globally sought-after Bachelor's and MASTER'S PROGRAMMES"

In conversation with Chan Joe Jim, Provost, UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus

The Daily Star (TDS): What sets your university apart from others? What would you consider your key strengths?

Chan Joe Jim (CJJ): UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus takes pride in being the first foreign university branch campus in Bangladesh, approved by both the Ministry of Education in Bangladesh and Malaysia. We have launched our educational programmes at a state-of-the-art 15-storey campus located in Banani, Dhaka.

Our students also benefit from career and employment counselling provided by experienced local and international faculty. Furthermore, Main Campus' Student Affairs and Alumni (SAA) Department supports in paving the way for employment opportunities abroad for our students.

Our university is ranked 265th globally in the QS World University Rankings 2025. Additionally, we are ranked 61st in Asia and 14th in Southeast Asia, leading the way among universities in Bangladesh.

We are the first institution in Bangladesh to offer international degrees in diverse fields such as Hotel Management, Fashion Design, and Mass Communication (with specialisations in Marketing, Journalism, Film, and Television). This initiative creates significant opportunities for women in Bangladesh to pursue internationally recognised higher education degrees.

Furthermore, we offer globally sought-after Bachelor's and Master's programmes, including Financial Economics, Supply Chain Operations Management, Hospitality Administration, Psychology, and Business Information Systems.

TDS: How does UCSI University's global ranking and reputation benefit local students studying at the Bangladesh branch campus?

CJJ: The global ranking and reputation of UCSI University are invaluable assets that directly benefit local students at our Bangladesh branch campus. Our students can take pride in being associated with a university that has a strong global presence. This recognition significantly enhances their credibility and competitiveness on a global scale, making them attractive candidates for further studies and job opportunities both locally and internationally.

Additionally, our extensive global network and partnerships with renowned institutions provide our students with exposure to diverse cultures, perspectives, and experiences. This enrichment prepares them for success in an increasingly globalised world.

TDS: Tell us about some of the exclusive facilities your university offers to students.

CJJ: UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus is strategically located in Banani, at the heart of Dhaka city. Our campus is equipped with modern classrooms and specialised facilities, including a Computer Lab, Fashion Design Lab, Graphics and Multimedia Lab, Electronics Engineering Lab, and a well-stocked Library.

Our students also benefit from career and employment counselling provided by experienced local and international faculty. Furthermore, the Main Campus's Student Affairs and Alumni (SAA) Department supports our students in finding employment opportunities abroad.

TDS: What opportunities does your university provide to meritorious students?

CJJ: At UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus, we offer scholarships ranging from 20% to 100% for meritorious students. These scholarships are awarded based on the students' previous academic results and admission test performance. Each year, our university grants scholarships worth Tk 5 crore to outstanding students.

TDS: What steps are you taking to assist students as they enter their careers after graduation?

CJJ: Our experienced faculty members regularly emphasise the importance of research programmes to equip students with up-to-date education, helping them stay ahead in the modern workplace. Additionally, we organise seminars and workshops related to higher education and research on our campus to further support our students' career development.

TDS: What kind of careers are your students most likely to pursue?

CJJ: Since the UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus is a recent addition to Bangladesh, I can share that students from UCSI University Malaysia have excelled in careers across various sectors, including Communication Technology, International Quality Hotels, Fashion Design Institutes, Insurance Companies, and Government, Private, and Multinational Companies. They are successfully employed in numerous multinational companies around the world, such as Accenture, Citibank, Deloitte, DHL, Ernst & Young, Hewlett-Packard, HSBC, Nestlé, Samsung, Standard Chartered, and many more.

TDS: How much emphasis do you place on helping students develop their co-curricular skills?

CJJ: We place a strong emphasis on developing students' co-curricular skills, recognising their vital role in shaping well-rounded individuals. Our university has introduced a variety of clubs, including the Business Club, Adventure Club, Cultural Club, Debate Club, Photography Club, Football Club, and more, to nurture the diverse interests of our students.

These clubs offer opportunities for students to explore their passions, develop leadership and social skills, and actively engage with their peers. Our aim is for students to graduate with not only academic knowledge but also the practical skills and experiences necessary for success in their future endeavours.

TDS: What is the vision for the future of UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus to improve educational opportunities and learning experiences for local students?

CJJ: Moving forward, we have several strategic plans for the university's growth and development. One of our primary goals is to build a permanent campus in Bangladesh, modelled after our main campus in Malaysia. Additionally, we are continuously working on various initiatives to ensure our students have access to the latest facilities, making their learning experience truly innovative.

Our academic leadership includes a Malaysian Vice-Chancellor, Pro-Vice-Chancellor, and Provost, along with prominent local and international faculty members. We have established various clubs under Student Affairs & Alumni that engage students in workshops, seminars, events, industrial visits, domestic and international tours, and humanitarian activities, helping them develop leadership, social, and human qualities.

PAVING THE WAY TO WORLD-CLASS Education for Bangladeshi Students

SAUDIA AFRIN

Pursuing higher education is a pivotal moment in a student's life, marked by decisions that can shape their future. While local universities remain popular, an increasing number of Bangladeshi students are looking beyond borders, drawn by the wealth of opportunities that studying abroad offers. Securing a place at prestigious international universities, however, requires expert guidance and access to the latest information. Recognising this need, MH Global Group's sister concerns, AHZ and MIE Pathways, have positioned themselves as trusted mentors, dedicated to guiding Bangladeshi students through every step of their journey to global education.

"At AHZ and MIE Pathways, we pride ourselves on shaping academic journeys and go out of our way to ensure that our students have the best possible experience," said Golam Mortuza, Chief Executive Officer of MH Global Group.

Two international students from Bangladesh began the journey of AHZ in 2012 in London, recognising the opportunity to support their fellow countrymen and women in leveraging a UK education.

AHZ – When UK is the Destination

According to the latest UNESCO data, 52,799 Bangladeshi students studied abroad in 2023, with 6,586 choosing the UK, making it the second most popular destination after the US. The UK consistently remains a top choice for Bangladeshi students pursuing higher education.

Two international students from Bangladesh began the journey of AHZ in 2012 in London, recognising the opportunity to support their fellow countrymen and women in leveraging a UK education. Their aspirations were not only to advance their own lives but also to uplift the communities around them. Their commitment to improving the world remains evident at AHZ to this day. Since its inception, the platform has assisted more than 25,000 students in enrolling at UK institutions.

"We support Bangladeshi students by providing them with a free platform to connect with UK institutions that are looking to recruit international students," said Mortuza.

As AHZ focuses exclusively on supporting students who wish to study at UK universities, it partners with over 130 universities and centres across the UK. The platform operates nine offices in Bangladesh and 50 more globally, offering a range of essential services for students planning to study abroad. To reach as many students as possible, AHZ, which has been shortlisted for the PIEoneer Awards, is continuously expanding its global presence by establishing new offices to better cater to students' needs.

Mahfuz Islam, currently pursuing an MSc in Infection and Immunity at the University of Chester as a January 2024 intake student, shared: "It was a sudden decision. Last August, I reached out to AHZ, and they provided me with a list of available options within a very short timeframe. The counsellor also helped me find a programme closely aligned with my current academic background and future plans." Mahfuz also expressed his gratitude for the assistance he received in securing an annual scholarship of £2,500. He noted: "They are efficient, qualified, and know exactly what they are doing."

Counselling is perhaps one of the most crucial services offered by AHZ. Mortuza explained that these sessions provide a comprehensive overview of studying in the UK, including information on costs, available part-time jobs, career opportunities post-study, the climate, and, importantly, popular Bangladeshi food options.

"Most of our counselling team are UK graduates. They provide first-hand insight into their lives as students in the UK. Our counsellors play a crucial role in shaping study journeys. Our counselling services are designed to provide personalised guidance and support, ensuring that students make informed decisions and successfully navigate the complex process of applying to UK institutions," said Mortuza.

In addition to students from English medium backgrounds, those from the National Curriculum and Textbook Board (NCTB) also apply to UK-based universities. Mortuza highlighted that over the past few years, more UK university entry requirements now align with Bangladeshi national school and university qualifications. "This means that even more Bangladeshi students will have the chance to realise their dream of studying in the UK," he added.

"We offer students an UNPARALLELEDRANGE OF SERVICES"

In conversation with Golam Mortuza, Chief Executive Officer, MH Global Group

The Daily Star (TDS): Can you provide an overview of AHZ?

Golam Mortuza (GM): AHZ is the largest UK-exclusive university representative. We provide comprehensive guidance and support at every step of an applicant's journey, ensuring a smooth transition to their desired university. AHZ started in London in 2012, and since then, we've supported more than 25,000 students to enrol in UK institutions.

> One of the biggest benefits of working with AHZ is that we work exclusively with UK universities, meaning that our teams are not only experts in UK study but also have strong relationships with many prestigious institutions.

Since 2012, we have always operated on a no-fee basis, meaning that the students we support can dedicate all their time and resources to funding their studies in the UK. We always seek to employ locally and support local economies and communities through the DMH Foundation. Most of our counselling team are UK graduates, and we currently have around 750 colleagues globally.

AHZ is wholly owned and operated by two international students from Bangladesh who saw an opportunity to support their fellow countrymen and women in using a UK education to not only better themselves but also to improve the communities around them. Their drive to make the world a better place continues to shine through at AHZ to this day.

TDS: How does AHZ support Bangladeshi students pursuing higher education in the UK?

GM: We support Bangladeshi students by providing a free platform to connect with UK institutions that are looking to recruit international students. AHZ does this through a number of helpful services. Arguably the most important is counselling. All our students are counselled by one of our trusted British Council-certified advisors, most of whom are UK graduates. During the counselling sessions, we provide an overview of what studying in the UK is like, the costs involved, available part-time jobs during their studies, career opportunities post-study, the weather, and, most importantly, where our students can get the best.

We have nine offices in Bangladesh and 50 more globally. We have been expanding our presence worldwide to ensure we can reach as many students as possible in an environment that best suits their needs.

TDS: How can students avail themselves of the facilities offered by the platform?

GM: The best way to get started with AHZ is to book an appointment to meet one of our counsellors, either face-to-face or online. You can do that by visiting our website, www.ahzassociates.co.uk, and filling out the contact details form. A member of our team will get back to you within 24 hours, or you can visit one of our offices.

TDS: What makes AHZ stand out compared to other similar platforms?

GM: AHZ stands out from our competitors because we offer students an unparalleled range of services; we support them with everything from applications to scholarships, and we can have offers turned around in as little as a few hours to the next day! One of the biggest benefits of working with AHZ is that we work exclusively with UK universities, meaning that our teams are not only experts in UK study but also have strong relationships with many prestigious institutions. As a result, we can offer the most up-to-date information and the quickest turnaround time possible.

We are a people-first, technology-second business. We aim to help students engage with their studies and support them throughout their entire journey.

TDS: What is AHZ's vision for the future?

GM: Our vision is to ensure that as many Bangladeshi students as possible get the opportunity to study in the UK. We want to see communities and families within Bangladesh grow and develop as a result of this incredible opportunity. We see education becoming more accessible in the coming years and want to be at the forefront of that. With entry requirements matched to Bangladeshi school and university qualifications, even more Bangladeshi students will have the chance to realise their dream of UK study.

TDS: Lastly, do you have any advice for students who are considering studying abroad?

GM: The best advice I can give is twofold. First, do your research and make sure that the institution, location, fees, and career outcomes align with where you want to be in the future. Second, act now—don't hesitate! The earlier you apply, the more likely you are to be accepted, and the sooner you can start your educational journey to the UK.

THANK YOU!

New postgraduate programmes are also on the horizon.

Next, we will explore the state-of-the-art collaborations between UCB and its partner institutions, including the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE), Monash University, and the University of Central Lancashire (UCLan).

London School of Economics (LSE)

UCB has successfully partnered with the prestigious University of London. This partnership allows UCB to offer its students a full Bachelor of Science Honours degree under the academic supervision of the London School of Economics (LSE). This collaboration provides UCB students with a remarkable opportunity to pursue LSE curricula for three-year degrees in Accounting and Finance, Business and Management, Economics, and Finance.

In addition, UCB has introduced a unique course called the Certificate of Higher Education in Social Science (CHESS). This programme is specifically designed to integrate students who have completed their HSC in Bengali or English versions. Upon successfully completing CHESS, students can transition directly into the University of London degree programme and complete it in three years without the need for any additional qualifications.

Choosing to study under the London School of Economics (LSE) curriculum at UCB offers numerous advantages. Students can earn a University of London degree while benefiting from the academic rigour and prestige of LSE. Upon completion of their studies, they have the opportunity to attend the convocation ceremony in London, celebrating their achievements on a global stage. The programme also provides a seamless pathway to pursue a Master's degree at LSE or other top-tier universities, further enhancing their academic and career prospects.

Exceptionally high-performing students may have the opportunity to transfer to LSE, allowing them to experience the vibrant academic environment of one of the world's leading institutions. Additionally, students can participate in the LSE Summer School, a three-week programme that offers intensive courses and the opportunity to network with peers and professionals from around the world.

UCB students also gain access to valuable internship opportunities, helping them gain industry exposure and practical experience with top corporations. This hands-on experience, combined with the quality of education, positions graduates for successful career placement in leading companies in Bangladesh and multinational corporations, ensuring they are well-prepared to excel in their chosen fields.

UCB launched its University of London degree programme with the gracious presence of Dr. James Abdey from LSE, and the first batch of UCB students began their international education in Gulshan last October. It is expected that this cohort will complete their international degrees by May 2026.

University of Central Lancashire (UCLan)

UCB launched its programme not long ago, and within a short period, it has shown remarkable progress in student recruitment. According to a UCB official, the number of students has doubled compared to the previous year in existing programmes. Inspired by this recent success, UCB plans to upgrade and expand its offerings by establishing new partnerships with globally recognised universities. A recent Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) with the University of Central Lancashire (UCLan) is a prime example.

UCB is already preparing to launch UCLan academic programmes, aiming to blend academic excellence with cultural diversity. Through this partnership, UCB is committed to producing a new generation of leaders and innovators, equipping Bangladeshi students with a global perspective and industry-relevant skills.

UCLan sent a team to inspect UCB last July. "I've already received the official confirmation, and what I can tell you is that we've passed the accreditation validation and received 11 commendations for excellence—the highest number they've ever awarded to any institution, including their UK partners. So, they rated us better than their British partners, which I'm very pleased about. In the first year, the degree programmes will be in Business & Management and Software Engineering. The good news is these will also be direct entry programmes for HSC students, allowing them to complete a full three-year honours degree from the UK right here," said Prof. Hew Gill, President & Provost of UCB.

With training at UCB, students will be well-equipped to tackle challenges both globally and locally, thanks to their exposure to world-class education. UCB students can also easily secure placements and opportunities, such as joining the summer school at UCLan, where they can engage with real-world problems and industry challenges. In terms of access to online academic resources, UCB students will be able to take a virtual tour of UCLan, further enhancing their academic experience.

While UCLan programmes at UCB offer a globally consistent curriculum, this does not mean that the education is ahistorical or non-contextual with reference to Bangladesh. Instead, it will be aligned with local sensibilities and context-specific resources.

The assessment process will be uniform across all locations. UCB students can easily transfer between institutions if they wish, spending a year at UCB and then seamlessly continuing their studies in the UK.

Monash University
UCB's exclusive partnership with Monash University enables it to offer the Monash University Foundation Year (MUFY) and Monash College Diploma (MCD) programmes in Bangladesh. With these programmes, students benefit from a curriculum designed to meet international standards, preparing them for seamless entry into one of the world's leading universities. Additionally, studying at UCB offers a cost-effective alternative while maintaining the same academic rigour and support available at Monash University.

Monash University Foundation Year (MUFY)
MUFY is a pre-university comprehensive programme that provides students with a solid foundation, allowing for a smooth transition to their bachelor's degree. It qualifies students to enter all 10 Monash faculties with a wide range of subject choices, including business, engineering, architecture, law, medicine, and information technology. Successful completion of MUFY allows students guaranteed entry into the first year of their chosen undergraduate degree at Monash University in Australia or Malaysia.

The foundation programme has three intake sessions in January, July, and August. It has a duration of 10 months and is taught over two semesters. Each semester consists of at least four units, and completing the programme requires passing a minimum of eight units. However, students can also choose to complete bonus units each semester to increase their final score. This university pathway programme enables HSC, O, AS, or A level students to gear up and step into their guaranteed first-year entry at Monash University.

Monash MCD Programmes
The Monash College Diploma (MCD) is equivalent to the first year of a degree programme at Monash University in Australia and Malaysia, providing students with direct entry into the second year of degrees in data science, business, IT, and engineering. Monash College fully oversees and directs everything related to the annual teaching plan, semester structure, learning objectives, curriculum, testing, and evaluation process for UCB's MCD programmes. "Everything that we do under Monash is exactly similar to them and is marked by Monash. So, the marks we're getting, the exams we're taking, the way we're teaching students are identical to what students would get if they went directly to Melbourne," remarked Professor Hew Gill, Provost & President at UCB.

The MCD programmes are offered in three fields of study: business, engineering, and IT, and they are divided into two parts. The first part teaches students basic maths and science theories, while the second part covers the same subjects offered in the first year at Monash University, helping students gain specialised knowledge in engineering, IT, or business. The MCD in Business is a 9-month long programme, and students are free to choose from two main streams. The business stream is for students who want to pursue a business degree majoring in banking, finance, marketing, or accounting. Students can also opt for a specialised degree, such as a Bachelor of International Business, where they will develop the expertise to operate in global business environments and acquire the skills necessary to conduct business across various countries and settings. The commerce stream is for those looking to major in economics, finance, actuarial studies, or accounting and requires a higher level of mathematics.

The MCD in Engineering requires 12 months, while the IT programme requires 9 months to complete. After completing the Engineering MCD, students are eligible to transfer to the second year of various engineering degrees, including software engineering, robotics, aerospace, chemical, and biomedical engineering. Conversely, the IT MCD equips students to pursue a range of majors, from computer science to cybersecurity to game design or IT for business. Both of these programmes help students enter the most competitive and high-demand subjects in the world. Additionally, UCB students are eligible for special fee waivers when they enrol at Monash University.

One significant advantage of the MCD programmes is that they make world-class Monash degrees affordable by reducing the cost of the first year. If students were to pursue the first year in Australia, it would require at least 60 to 70 lakh BDT, whereas the amount would be around 35 to 40 lakh BDT if they completed the first year at the Monash Malaysia campus. However, S M Risalat Rahman, Assistant Manager at UCB, highlights that with the MCD programmes, students can complete the same first year for 8 to 9 lakh BDT, which makes a substantial difference to the overall spending for the Monash degree.

Unlock global opportunities with UIFY
UCB's International Foundation Year (UIFY) programme can give students a head start if they intend to pursue a degree with global prestige. The Level 3 UCB International Foundation Year (UIFY) for Higher Education Studies offers a unique opportunity for students to follow their desired career paths in more than 70 universities in the UK, USA, Canada, Australia, or Ireland. It is a one-year pre-university qualification exclusively crafted to enhance students' English language skills and provide a practical introduction to their chosen field of study, while also honing their research and study skills. Completing the foundation year gives Bangladeshi students, especially those from HSC backgrounds, the edge to excel in their undergraduate studies abroad.

Students can choose from fields such as business, engineering, computing, chemical engineering, higher finance, and health sciences through the UIFY programme. Eight universities in the UK, Australia, and Ireland offer guaranteed access to graduates of the NCC Educational Level 3 International Foundation Programme for Higher Studies. To gain entry into the UIFY programme, students must have completed either their GCSE/IGCSE 'O' levels or HSC with at least a GPA of 3.0 or above. HSC students are required to achieve an average of 50% with passes in four or more subjects, including Maths and English. Alternatively, they can gain admission with a valid score of 4.5 or above in the IELTS or by taking the free NCC Education Standard English Placement Test.

UCB is not all about studies. They offer a wide range of facilities, including a library and various clubs, and each week is packed with different social and co-curricular activities. UCB's President shared that last month they successfully completed a Chess Championship and are also planning to celebrate World Photography Day and World Online Learning Day. Their highly equipped labs are accessible to non-STEM students as well, provided they are members of the science club. There are also regular online sessions and physical visits from partner universities, offering students opportunities to engage directly and build connections that enhance their academic experience.

UCB offers a unique blend of opportunities for growth both academically and personally while ensuring a bright future in terms of employability and further higher education. Obtaining an international qualification from the comfort of your home country not only makes international education affordable but also increases the chances of securing scholarships for fully funded Master's or PhD programmes in the future. "I'd say now is a very exciting time for Bangladesh for many reasons. What Bangladesh needs now is a lot of bright, internationally educated people to take the country's economy to the next stage. So, don't think about going abroad; now is the time to serve the nation, and we can give you that international experience without having to go abroad," shared Professor Gill.

Paving the Way to World-Class Education for Bangladeshi Students

As AHZ focuses exclusively on supporting students who wish to study at UK universities, it partners with over 130 universities and centres across the UK. The platform operates nine offices in Bangladesh and 50 more globally, offering a range of essential services for students planning to study abroad.

FROM PAGE J3

When asked about special considerations, he further explained: "If an applicant falls short of the requirements, we offer academic foundation courses through our partner NCUK. This allows us to support students who want to proceed to UK institutions but haven't met the requirements. We also work with all the major UK-based foundation providers. These courses have lower entry requirements but provide students with the opportunity to upgrade their NCTB qualifications."

MIE Pathways – Connecting the Dots

Due to variations in educational systems, cultural orientation, or language, many students fall short in certain areas when applying to international universities. To fill these gaps, students may require certifications such as the International Foundation Year or International Year One. Through MIE Pathways' partnership with NCUK—a global pathway provider that collaborates with universities in major study destinations like the UK, US, Australia, New Zealand, and Malaysia—students gain access to a wide range of educational opportunities worldwide.

MIE Pathways, home to the NCUK Bangladesh centre, currently offers three courses designed to provide aspiring students with pathways to leading universities. "NCUK qualifications are designed to prepare international students for university study with guaranteed entry to universities worldwide. This means students can start a qualification in Bangladesh and progress to 50+ leading universities globally," mentioned Mortuza.

NCUK International Foundation Year

Imagine a Bangladeshi student who has never been outside the country and is now facing the challenge of managing everything on their own. The concerns about adapting to a new culture and language, along with maintaining a strong academic profile, are equally daunting for both the student and their parents. The NCUK International Foundation Year equips students to enter undergraduate degree programmes at over fifty institutions. It offers students the opportunity to study in small classes, build their confidence, adapt to the culture of their chosen destination, enhance their English proficiency, and strengthen their academic profile—all within Bangladesh before advancing to a guaranteed university placement.

NCUK International Year One

The International Year One programme enables students to complete the first year of an undergraduate degree at the MIE Pathways Centre in Bangladesh and then directly advance to Year 2 at a partner university. Students can choose from five subject routes, with progression options available to over 300 degree programmes at 26 prestigious universities in the UK, Australia, New Zealand, and Malaysia.

NCUK Master's Preparation

The NCUK Master's Preparation programme offers students the opportunity to focus on specific areas of improvement without completing a full qualification that may not be necessary. The Master's Pre-Sessional, delivered over 10 weeks, is designed for international students aiming to enhance their English language and academic study skills to ensure they are well-prepared for a master's degree.

In addition to improving English language skills and academic study abilities, the Master's Preparation course provides students with the opportunity to complete a 5,000-word dissertation. This practice dissertation helps students understand the requirements of academic research and writing, offering valuable experience before starting their master's programme. Depending on their English language proficiency, students can choose between the standard 20-week Master's Preparation course or the 30-week Master's Preparation (Enhanced) programme.

AHZ and MIE Pathways – Connecting Students to Opportunities

AHZ and MIE Pathways organise various events throughout the year to raise awareness among students. During large-scale exhibitions, partner universities participate to showcase their offerings, while smaller events provide students with the opportunity to meet AHZ and MIE Pathways staff, university academics, and representatives.

Earlier this year, MH Global Group organised the International Career and Education Expo and Emerging Leaders Award 2024 event in Dhaka, providing support for higher education, career development, networking, recognition, and more.

MH Global Group was established in response to the increasing demand for services beyond placing students into UK universities. In line with this, MH's other initiative, MIE English Academy, offers English coaching and testing through IELTS centres, further expanding the range of services available to Bangladeshi students.

AHZ and MIE Pathways Services at a Glance:

Personalised Counselling: Ensuring that all students are matched with their specific requirements, whether it's course, location, or budget.

University and Course Selection: Our counsellors have extensive knowledge of available university courses. We offer information on rankings, faculty expertise, campus facilities, and student life to help students make informed decisions.

Application Guidance: Our counsellors provide step-by-step assistance throughout the application process, including filling out forms, writing personal statements, and gathering required documents.

Test Preparation: Through our MIE English team, we support students with coaching and testing at IELTS centres.

Funding and Scholarships: Our counsellors provide up-to-date information on scholarship opportunities and ensure that students meet the funding requirements of their chosen institutions.

Visa Support: Our counsellors and compliance teams assist students in preparing their student visa applications.

Pre-Departure: Once students receive their visas, we organise a pre-departure briefing covering accommodation, travel, cultural adaptation, and campus life expectations.

UCSI's Journey of Educational Excellence

> The UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus is committed to delivering top-notch teaching and learning facilities that meet international standards. The university is dedicated to investing in academic resources and services to enhance the student experience.

PRIYAM PAUL

UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus, the first foreign university campus in Bangladesh, has its origins in Malaysia, where it was established in 1986. As one of Malaysia's top-ranked and largest private universities, UCSI has made notable strides by opening its inaugural branch in Bangladesh.

This campus provides significant advantages to Bangladeshi students, offering them the opportunity to pursue higher education at a globally recognised institution. Approved by the Ministries of Education in both Bangladesh and Malaysia, UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus has been operational since 2023, serving as a gateway to world-class education.

As a leading destination for higher education worldwide, UCSI's presence in Bangladesh is strategically designed to cater to the needs of Bangladeshi students. Students benefit from the flexibility of credit transfer options to the main Malaysian campus and other top global universities, facilitating their academic pursuits.

Located in Banani, Dhaka, the branch campus boasts excellent connectivity to all parts of the city via both public and private transportation.

The UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus is committed to delivering top-notch teaching and learning facilities that meet international standards. The university is dedicated to investing in academic resources and services to enhance the student experience.

UCSI Bangladesh places a strong emphasis on fostering an enriching and supportive educational environment. Its faculty members are highly qualified, comprising a blend of internationally and nationally acclaimed academics dedicated to nurturing students' academic growth and success.

"Our global reputation ensures that our students receive a high-quality education aligned with international standards. Our curriculum, teaching methodologies, and faculty expertise are all benchmarked against global best practices, providing an education that is not only of high quality but also competitive on an international scale," says Chan Joe Jim, Provost of UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus.

Ranking

UCSI University boasts an impressive ranking that reflects its rigorous academic standards and continuous efforts towards excellence. In the QS Asia University Rankings 2024, UCSI climbed 11 spots to secure the 61st position in Asia and 14th in Southeast Asia. The university has consistently improved its standing over the past seven years in this competitive annual ranking of Asia's top universities. Globally, UCSI is ranked 265th in the QS World University Rankings 2025, placing it in the top 1% of universities worldwide for the second consecutive year.

Additionally, UCSI ranks among the top 100 globally in Hospitality and Leisure Management and Arts and Design, within the top 350 in Business & Management Studies and the School of Graduate Studies, and within the top 550 in Social Sciences & Management. The university maintains solid foreign academic leadership, with a globally recognised standard upheld by its Pro-Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, Pro Vice-Chancellor, and Provost in Bangladesh Branch Campus. This leadership ensures that students are well-supported and encouraged to reach their full potential from the start of their academic journey.

Key Features of UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus

The Bangladesh Branch Campus of UCSI University operates under the stringent regulation and approval of the Malaysian Qualifications Agency (MQA). All academic programmes and curricula are delivered by UCSI University, Malaysia, and implemented at the Bangladesh branch to ensure it upholds a centre of excellence.

The undergraduate exchange programmes are designed to include approximately two years of study in Bangladesh and two years in Malaysia. This structure enables students to gain both national and international learning experiences, aligning with their broader educational objectives.

"In addition to the on-campus facilities, our students have access to the online library and laboratories of our main campus in Malaysia. Our teaching staff comprises highly qualified educators with both local and international experience. Moreover, students have the opportunity to transfer credits to the Malaysian main campus or other leading universities globally," explains Chan Joe Jim, Provost of UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus.

The campus maintains international standards with cutting-edge logistical equipment, state-of-the-art laboratory facilities, a comprehensive library, and extensive educational resources. It provides excellent job opportunities with multinational companies worldwide and offers international pathways to countries such as Canada, Australia, the UK, and New Zealand. Importantly, degrees are awarded by UCSI University's main campus in Malaysia, ensuring global recognition.

Academic Programmes

UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus offers a diverse range of highly sought-after undergraduate and master's programmes, tailored to meet the evolving demands of the global job market and provide students with a solid educational foundation. These programmes are carefully crafted across various faculties and schools, enabling students to customise their educational paths according to their future aspirations. Graduates benefit from well-structured courses and a comprehensive learning experience, which enhances their prospects for securing employment both nationally and internationally.

"We have introduced exclusive Fast Track Master's Programmes this year in specialised fields such as Business Analytics, Sustainable Business, Logistics & Supply Chain Management, International Hospitality Management, and Technopreneurship. These programmes are designed to deepen the expertise of Master's degree holders in their respective areas. Students who meet certain prerequisites can complete their Fast Track Master's degree in just one year," explains Chan Joe Jim.

Tuition Fees & Scholarships for the Bangladesh Branch Campus

UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus offers internationally recognised degrees at a local cost, significantly reducing foreign currency expenses and helping to retain talent within Bangladesh. Scholarships, ranging from 20% to 100%, are awarded based on merit, which is assessed through placement tests and previous academic performance.

By studying at UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus, students can cut foreign currency expenses by approximately 50%, as they complete their courses both in Dhaka and Malaysia. This arrangement results in a 50% reduction in tuition fees compared to studying entirely abroad. Additionally, the university provides scholarships amounting to Taka 5 crore annually, which not only promotes academic excellence but also enhances Bangladesh's reputation as an international study hub and a proponent of "edu-tourism."

Student Affairs & Alumni

UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus offers a vibrant array of student activities and recreational opportunities that enrich campus life. The university provides guidance for Extracurricular Learning Experience courses, encouraging students to engage in activities beyond the classroom. It also features a dynamic sports culture that caters to both dedicated athletes and casual players.

Chan Joe Jim elaborates on the role of Student Affairs & Alumni (SAA), stating, "The Student Affairs & Alumni (SAA) team represents students, ensuring a fulfilling and enjoyable campus experience. SAA supports students in their career pursuits, facilitating international job placements. Through the SAA department at the UCSI Main Campus, our students gain access to numerous job opportunities abroad. Additionally, our graduates receive preferential consideration for employment with Malaysian-invested companies in Bangladesh and enjoy priority for jobs in ASEAN countries."

The mission of Student Affairs & Alumni (SAA) is to advocate for students' rights, expand their opportunities, and enhance their overall experience. SAA is committed to fostering a welcoming and supportive environment where every student can excel and succeed.

Consequently, UCSI University Bangladesh Branch Campus stands out as an excellent choice for students seeking a globally recognised institution that delivers high educational standards abroad at an affordable price.

BUDGET SUPPORT

Govt hunts for $8b from IMF, other lenders

Bangladesh seeks to shore up reserves, repay liabilities

REJAUL KARIM BYRON

The government is seeking as much as $8 billion in budget support by December from the development partners, including the International Monetary Fund (IMF), to pay back foreign liabilities and boost foreign exchange reserves.

It is also working to get immediate funds from the Asian Development Bank (ADB) and the World Bank for rehabilitation programmes in areas recently devastated by floods.

Based on a primary assumption of loss and damage, the government has already sent a letter to the ADB, requesting $300 million for flood rehabilitation. It will seek a bigger amount from the World Bank, but a formal request has not been made yet.

Of the budget support, $3 billion is expected to come from the IMF on top of the global lender's existing $4.7 billion loan programme.

The government will seek as much as $5 billion from other development partners like the World Bank, ADB, Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) and the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB), said officials of the finance ministry and the Bangladesh Bank.

Recently, Bangladesh Bank Governor Ahsan H Mansur told foreign media that they would seek $3 billion from the IMF. A finance ministry official said they have already started talks with the IMF for the funds.

The official said an IMF staff mission is likely to visit Bangladesh to discuss the loan towards the end of next month. After the visit, Bangladesh will formally send a letter to the IMF, seeking the additional loan.

- Govt to seek $3b from IMF
- Another $5b from other lenders
- IMF staff mission due next month
- $300m sought from ADB for flood-hit areas

IMF officials informed the finance ministry and the central bank that it was assessing how much it could lend Bangladesh, going beyond the existing quota for the country.

The officials said a meeting on the loan arrangement could be held on the sidelines of the World Bank-IMF Annual Meetings in Washington in October. Finance Adviser Salehuddin Ahmed and the central bank governor are likely to take part in the meeting.

The IMF has so far released $2.3 billion under the $4.7 billion loan programme since its approval in January last year.

After the interim government took charge, the World Bank and the ADB held separate meetings with the finance adviser, the energy adviser and the central bank governor. Bangladesh sought more budget support from them during the meetings but did not specify any amount.

The energy adviser during meetings with the World Bank and the ADB sought $1 billion as immediate budget support, according to officials familiar with the development.

Officials at the Economic Relations Division said they could get funds from the World Bank under three arrangements -- a policy-based loan, diverted regional funds or from slow-moving projects.

Besides, Bangladesh could quickly get $1 billion to $1.5 billion from the ADB under two arrangements -- a policy-based loan or countercyclical support. Both JICA and AIIB could join the ADB arrangement, according to officials.

The interim government took charge amid pressure of high inflation and bleeding of foreign currency reserves which have been prevalent for almost two years.

The long, dark past of UCB

Before Saifuzzaman, his father took control of the bank at gunpoint in 1999

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA and
MD MEHEDI HASAN

The central bank has just reconstituted the board of United Commercial Bank (UCB) for financial wrongdoings, but it has a darker past – a takeover at gunpoint by a politically influential family over a quarter of a century ago.

The saga of former land minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury Javed's family that controlled the private bank's assets by force goes back to 1993 when Humayun Zahir, a director of the bank, was shot dead at his residence in Dhaka's Dhanmondi.

This dark chapter in the banking industry involved Akhtaruzzaman Chowdhury Babu, the late father of Saifuzzaman. Akhtaruzzaman and his son have a long history of involvement in the Awami League politics and were blessed by former prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

TIB proposes a raft of reforms

Suggests two-term limit for PM

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Transparency International Bangladesh yesterday proposed a host of reform measures that would create a conducive state structure and the environment to build a transparent, accountable, corruption-free and discrimination-free "New Bangladesh".

"We are making these recommendations to assist the government. The authoritarian regime fell at the cost of unprecedented bloodshed and sacrifice through the movement of students and the people. One authoritarian regime should not be replaced by another," said TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman at a press conference.

Chief among the recommendations is adding a provision in the constitution that would bar an individual from serving as the prime minister for more than two terms, a practice followed in the US.

IMMEDIATE PRIORITIES

Govt lifts ban on Jamaat, Shibir

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Jamaat-e-Islami yesterday regained its right to do politics as the interim government revoked the executive order issued by the ousted Awami League government banning the Islamist party and its student wing Islami Chhatra Shibir.

The home ministry issued a gazette in this regard.

Jamaat, Shibir and all of Jamaat's front organisations were banned on August 1 as political parties and entities under the Anti-Terrorism Act-2009.

The home ministry on that day issued a gazette banning those outfits following the law ministry's approval. The AL government had taken the decision as per Section 18 (1) of the Anti-Terrorism Act-2009.

"The government has enough evidence that Bangladesh Jamaat-e-Islami and Islami Chhatra Shibir were involved in recent killings and destructive and terrorist activities directly and through incitement," read the gazette.

Following a writ petition, the High Court in August 2013 declared Jamaat's registration with the Election Commission illegal. The Supreme Court later upheld the HC verdict, it added.

Forward Mirajul Islam starred with a brilliant brace and an assist to power Bangladesh to a 4-1 victory over hosts Nepal in the title-decider of the SAFF U-20 Championship at the ANFA Complex in Lalitpur yesterday.

Rabby Hossain Rahul and Piash Ahmed Nova also netted home in an enthralling final where the two-time champions Nepal dominated much of the play. However, it was Bangladesh who rose to the challenge, lifting a trophy that had eluded them since the competition's inception in 2015.

Prior to the tournament, Bangladesh had finished runners-up three times in the previous five editions, during which they had failed to defeat Nepal in their last four encounters -- including a 2-1 loss in the group stage -- and, despite only having two

'Hold talks with political parties on your tenure'

Fakhrul urges interim govt, says BNP hasn't forgotten 1/11

The public and business community want a democratically elected government in the country, said BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir.

Speaking at a press conference at the BNP chairperson's Gulshan office, he once again urged the interim government to engage in discussions with political parties on its tenure to prevent any misunderstandings.

"People want democracy and elections. We must keep that in mind," the BNP leader said.

"The major businesspersons in Bangladesh believe an elected government is essential for their businesses, industrial development, and the smooth functioning of the economy. They're clearly saying the sooner this happens, the better," he said.

"This is the reality. You [journalists] can verify this by speaking with the businesspeople and their leaders," he added.

Process on to bring back laundered money

Says chief adviser's office

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The interim government has started the process to bring back the money laundered abroad and acquire local assets of the people who embezzled money from banks.

The information was shared by the office of the chief adviser of the interim government through a press release issued yesterday.

Bangladesh Bank's financial intelligence unit, criminal investigation department of police, and anti-corruption commission have started recovering the embezzled and laundered money, according to the press release.

The government has already contacted various foreign organisations seeking their assistance regarding the repatriation of the money.

"Some unscrupulous businessmen and other influential persons have in recent years embezzled huge sums of money anonymously and laundered it abroad through rampant corruption and fraud in the banking sector," it said.

The government is also working to determine the exact amount of money and assets laundered and embezzled from the banking sector, it also said, adding that the amount of embezzled money is believed to be over Tk 1 lakh crore.

It said reforms are already underway in banks and financial institutions associated with such corruption.

Besides, initiatives have been taken and the boards of Islami Bank, Social Islami Bank, National Bank, United Commercial Bank, Global Islami Bank, and Union Bank have been reconstituted.

It said reforms will also be initiated in the remaining banks and financial institutions.

The actual information of the embezzled money will be collected through the new management authority and the audit process will start to determine the actual amount of money embezzled from the banks.

Hasina made accused in 4 more cases

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina has been sued in four more cases over the killings of three people and the attempted murder of another person during the student-led mass uprising.

Three of the cases were filed with Dhaka courts yesterday while another murder case was filed in Bogura two days ago.

Several former ministers, including Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader, Asaduzzaman Khan, top police officers and at least three journalists, were among the accused.

With these, Hasina is now facing 75 cases related to the protests, including 63 on murder charges, seven on allegations of crimes against humanity and genocide, three on charges of abduction, and two for other charges.

Hasina and 30 others were sued over the death of grocery shop owner Mizanur Rahman during the quota reform movement in the capital's Banasree on July 19. His father Kamal Hossain filed the murder case with the court of Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate Md Tofazzal Hossain who movement for the restoration of democracy, Fakhrul said that elections are necessary for establishing democracy. "That's why we talk about elections; it is our right."

Fakhrul said they should not forget the depoliticisation efforts of the 1/11 regime. "During that time, there were attempts to abolish and eliminate our party. We cannot forget those things."

In response to a question about whether he sees any signs of 1/11 repeating, he said, "No, I do not see such signs. ... Some faces scare us. You have seen it too. We haven't seen them before... suddenly they're coming to the front page of the media... you (media) are propagating their theories and statements. I don't want to name anyone. I think this is not good for a healthy democratic process.

He, however, said BNP is willing to accept a reasonable time and offer full cooperation to the interim government. "We'll continue to do so as long as we believe the government is on the right track."

When asked to explain a logical time for the interim government, the BNP leader stated that it was a matter of discussion.

When his attention was drawn to the lifting of the ban on Jamaat-e-Islami, Fakhrul said, "We're not in favour of banning any political party, regardless of which party it is."

He said that the right to form organisations, which the constitution guarantees for every citizen, should be upheld.

However, the BNP leader said a party which doesn't believe in the independence of Bangladesh should not be supported.

However, the BNP leader said a party which doesn't believe in the independence of Bangladesh should not be supported.

Noting that many cases are now being filed randomly, Fakhrul requested the law enforcement agencies to conduct primary verification first before accepting these.

"I think this practice needs to be stopped completely. The way cases are being lodged will not consolidate this mass upsurge," he said, urging his party leaders and activists not to file any case that lack merit.

About the minority issue, Fakhrul said many campaigns are being carried out from abroad, especially from India, in a bid to undermine the mass upsurge in Bangladesh. "They want to make some political issues as communal ones, which is unacceptable," he said.

He also said the campaigns are being conducted targeting BNP, which is quite unfair.

"We're observing that some criminals in certain areas are indulging in offences such as occupying and establishing control, and efforts are being made to shift the blame onto the BNP. We would like to make it clear our leaders, activists are not involved in criminal activities," he said.

The BNP leader expressed surprise that leading and renowned newspapers are also reporting news involving the BNP in criminal acts. "I don't think it's justified. One or two individuals may commit misdeeds personally... ."

TIB proposes a raft of reforms

The same person should not hold the positions of the prime minister (head of government), the chief of a political party and the leader of parliament simultaneously.

TIB's recommendations for necessary reforms in the state structure to prevent corruption, and establish democracy, good governance and integrity are categorised into two groups: immediate and strategic areas.

The immediate priorities include ensuring discipline, public safety and administrative normalcy; conducting UN-led investigations into past human rights violations; ensuring proper legal procedures such that the judicial process remains unquestionable; and restoring normal economic activities.

A task force must be formed comprising the Anti-Corruption Commission, the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU), the National Board of Revenue (NBR), the Criminal Investigation Department (CID) and the Attorney General's Office to set an exemplary standard of effective accountability for high-level corruption and money laundering.

TIB demanded revealing the true picture of the banking sector following an independent and neutral investigation, and the formation of an "independent bank commission" with skilled specialists for the revival of the banking sector.

Strategic reforms include the introduction of proportional representation in the parliamentary system to ensure the true reflection of the people's verdict in the national parliament.

Additionally, an election-time interim government system should be introduced to ensure free, fair, neutral, and participatory parliamentary polls.

The Speaker should be free from party influence, avoid conflicts of interest and act as the guardian of parliament. They must conduct all parliamentary activities impartially.

The deputy speaker should be elected from the opposition in parliament.

In the absence of both the Speaker and the deputy speaker, members of the opposition parties included in the presidium should be allowed to perform the duties of the Speaker.

TIB also recommended amending Article 70 of the constitution to allow MPs the freedom to criticise their party and vote against it on different matters, including legislation, except for no-confidence motions and the budget.

Among the recommendations for democratic practices, TIB emphasised the need to abolish the monopoly and dynastic rule of a party chief and to determine party leadership through fair elections at all levels.

In the category of the rule of law and human rights, TIB called for immediate separation of the judiciary and specific policies and laws in consultation with the Supreme Court for the appointment of judges to the High Court.

IMMEDIATE PRIORITIES

- Same person cannot be PM, party chief and leader of parliament at once
- Election-time interim government system
- Speaker to be free from party influence
- Deputy Speaker should be elected from the opposition in parliament
- MPs should be allowed the freedom to criticise their party

TIB also recommended repealing the 16th amendment to the constitution, which gave power to the Jatiya Sangsad to remove judges if allegations of incapability or misconduct against them are proved.

The other recommendations include ensuring accountability and exemplary punishment for multidimensional and unprecedented human rights violations through nationally and internationally acceptable, impartial and independent investigations.

The National Human Rights Commission must be granted the jurisdiction and capacity to investigate all allegations of human rights violations such as extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances by security forces and law enforcement agencies, and to repeal all laws that violate human rights, including the Special Powers Act.

To prevent irregularities, corruption and money laundering, TIB called for ensuring the independence and capacity of the ACC and amending the Civil Service Act of 2018, the Money Laundering Prevention Act of 2012 and the Income Tax Act of 2023.

The agencies responsible for curbing and preventing corruption such as the ACC, the BFIU, the NBR, the Office of the Comptroller and Auditor General, the Attorney General's Office, the CID and other institutions concerned must develop professional skills free from party influence.

TIB recommended that no political appointments be made to institutions such as the Election Commission, ACC, Information Commission, NHRC, Office of the Comptroller and Auditor General and Public Service Commission.

An independent working environment must be ensured in these institutions.

The Official Secrecy Act of 1923 and the Cyber Security Act of 2023 must be repealed and measures must be put in place to ensure personal information protection.

Additionally, TIB called for the necessary amendments to the constitution and relevant laws to make the local government system independent, strengthened and effective.

In the electricity, energy, and environment category, TIB proposed a short-, medium-, and long-term time-bound plan to gradually phase out the use of fossil fuels and promote renewable energy.

Supportive policies must be created to increase local and international investment in the renewable energy sector.

Moreover, TIB demanded the abolishment of the "Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply (Special Provisions) Act 2010", the removal of capacity charges and the cancellation of all ongoing development projects that are harmful to the environment and biodiversity.

"It is not possible to say how long it will take for the interim government to implement the recommendations made today [yesterday]. That decision lies with them. This government should be given the time it needs to meet the expectations of the people," Iftekharuzzaman said.

The government has been in office for only 20 days and it would not be fair to evaluate them so soon.

"They must fulfil the aspirations of the masses, even as they work amid the ruins," he added.

Govt lifts ban on Jamaat, Shibir

In yesterday's gazette notification, the home ministry said the government has cancelled the previous circular that banned Jamaat, Shibir and its front organisations as there is no specific evidence on their involvement in terrorist activities, and the government believes that these organisations are not involved in terrorist activities.

The decision will come into effect immediately, the notification said.

'AL BANNED JAMAAT TO CONTINUE REPRESSION'

Law Adviser Asif Nazrul yesterday said the AL did not ban Jamaat from its policy position, rather this was done to term the mass uprising "terrorist activity".

Speaking to reporters at his office at the Secretariat, he said some sections of the society had been demanding ban on Jamaat for many years, but the AL did not do it during its 15-year rule.

"They [Awami League] did it when the student movement was going on. They termed the mass uprising an act of the Jamaat-BNP terrorists and tried to brutally suppress the movement. You have got proof of this," Asif said.

The adviser said the interim government cannot be a part of the AL's narrative that the mass uprising spearheaded by students was a terrorist act.

In August 2013, the High Court declared Jamaat's registration illegal following a writ petition filed in 2009 by Bangladesh Tariqat Federation Secretary General Rezaul Haque Chandpuri and 24 others.

Jamaat was first banned in independent Bangladesh in 1972 over their anti-liberation role under a new constitutional provision that banned politics based on religion.

The ban, however, was lifted three years later when BNP founder Ziaur Rahman came to power and amended the constitution through martial law proclamation.

JAMAAT LIKELY TO MOVE SC

Jamaat is likely to file an application to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court on Sunday seeking restoration of its appeal challenging a High Court verdict that scrapped its registration with the Election Commission as a political party, Mohammad Shishir Manir, a counsel for Jamaat, told The Daily Star yesterday.

On November 19 last year, a five-member bench of the Appellate Division, headed by then chief justice Obaidul Hassan, dismissed Jamaat's appeal for "default" as its counsels did not appear before the court that day.

Jamaat had filed the appeal against the HC verdict that on August 1, 2013, scrapped its registration.

Govt hunts for $8b from IMF, other lenders

The reserves stood at $20.5 billion on August 21 in line with the IMF's BPM-6 after the new government headed by Nobel laureate Professor Muhammad Yunus had taken charge earlier this month following the downfall of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's government through a student-led mass uprising.

Inflation remained high last month, with the consumer price index rising by 1.94 basis points to 11.66 percent from the previous month. Food inflation crossed 14 percent in July for the first time in 13 years.

When Hasina fled the country, the Awami League government left $156 billion in local and foreign loans for the country to carry. These included $88 billion from domestic sources and the remaining $68.33 billion was external debt.

The country is also struggling to deal with a fragile banking sector hit by scams and defaults caused by people with direct or indirect links to the previous government.

The interim government has taken some quick and drastic measures to tackle the situation surrounding finances while bringing reforms to all the sectors as promised by Yunus.

Policy rates against both local and foreign currencies have been increased, while strict measures have been taken for the banking sector which are longtime suggestions from the development partners for providing budget support.

Finance ministry officials said because of the reform measures taken by the interim government, development patterners are ready to provide more support.

The long, dark past of UCB

industry, Akhtaruzzaman, then the chairman of UCB, was arrested in the case but he fled the country after securing bail. He came back to Bangladesh in 1996 when the AL returned to power after 21 years in the political wilderness.

In 1999, members of this influential family along with armed men stormed the bank's headquarters where a board meeting was underway. The directors were abused verbally, assaulted and forced to sign their resignations. Bangladesh Bank then dissolved the entire board. Akhtaruzzaman returned to the bank's board of directors in 2010, a year after the AL was voted to power for the second time.

People familiar with those incidents say the takeover at gunpoint was one of the darkest chapters in Bangladesh's banking industry. It all started in 1991 after Bangladesh Bank removed Akhtaruzzaman from UCB board because of his failure to repay Tk 250 crore in loans that he took in favour of his own company.

Humayun Zahir, a director of the bank, protested when Akhtaruzzaman was reluctant to repay the loan despite being the chairman of the board. This is one of the oldest instances of defaulted loans in Bangladesh, said Sharif Zahir, son of Humayun Zahir.

"When my father protested and asked Babu [Akhtaruzzaman Chowdhury] to return the loan, he targeted my father," said Sharif, currently the managing director of Ananta, a leading garment exporter and business group.

Sharif alleged that the bank was taken over by Akhtaruzzaman along with his nephew and S Alam Group owner Mohammed Saiful Alam, who is also known for banking scandals on his own right.

Sharif was a large shareholder of the bank in 1993, 1995, 2008, 2009, 2010 and 2018, he said without mentioning the exact amount of his family shares with the bank. He also served UCB as the vice-chairman between 2013 and 2015.

However, in 2018, the first-generation private bank was taken over by force again, this time by Saifuzzaman, Sharif said.

The former land minister's family lost its grip on UCB on Tuesday as BB dissolved the lender's 18-member board.

The dissolved board was heavily dominated by Saifuzzaman's family members, including his sister Roxana Zaman Chaudhury and relatives Anisuzzaman Chowdhury and Asifuzzaman Chowdhury.

Saifuzzaman's wife, Rukhmila Zaman, had been serving as chairman of the bank until August 16, when the bank reconstituted the board on its own accord in an attempt to keep a portion of Saifuzzaman's family onboard, industry insiders say.

Sharif, who is now staying abroad, said he is coming back to Bangladesh in a day or two and plans to hold a meeting with the newly appointed directors to form a board to run the bank.

UCB was established in 1984 mainly by a group of Chattogram-based businesspersons, and was one of the high performing banks in Bangladesh.

Things started to change after the takeover by Saifuzzaman's family, as loan scandals became a norm rather than an exception.

The bank's defaulted loans rose to Tk 2,500 crore in 2023 from Tk 1,792 crore in 2016, although industry insiders say the actual figure is much higher.

In these seven years, the amount of written off loans more than doubled to Tk 2,471 crore from Tk 1,069 crore.

Meanwhile in the UK, Saifuzzaman acquired at least 260 properties, paying at least 134.76 million British pounds or Tk 1,888 crore, according to The Daily Star's calculation based on company filings that are publicly available on UK government websites.

The three-time AL lawmaker also has at least 537 mortgages against properties in the UK, a majority of which are in London.

The Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit found that Saifuzzaman and Rukhmila have also amassed huge fortunes in the US and Dubai.

A group of shareholders of the bank recently sent a letter to the central bank, alleging that although Rukhmila was the chairperson of the bank, it was Saifuzzaman who pulled the strings behind it all.

'We want a sustainable embankment'

Say residents of 13 villages in Khulna's Paikgachha

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

After the flood-protection embankment was breached and 13 villages in Deluti union under Khulna's Paikgachha upazila were flooded last Thursday, around 7-8 thousand people had to leave their homes and take shelter on higher grounds, including other parts of the dyke, roadsides, and different educational institutions.

Kalpana Mandal and Chanchala Mandal of Kalinagar were among 300 families who have sheltered at Kalinagar College since then.

Many organisations are providing them with relief, including dry food, biscuits, or cooked food.

Although villagers repaired the dam last Tuesday, water has yet to recede from Kalpana's home.

"Our two mud houses were damaged in the flood. I managed to bring our three goats with us, but I couldn't manage much food for them yet. I am worried," said Kalpana.

She said they had to face the same ordeal in May after Cyclone Remal.

"We had 11 cattle, which we had to sell since there was no way to feed those. Now we have only these three goats left, and there is hardly any food for them either," she said.

She wanted a permanent solution to the repeated breach of the dam.

Music with a mission

Young musicians unite to raise funds for flood victims in Moulvibazar

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

With this month's flood ravaging communities, sweeping away homes and leaving people and livestock amid acute shortage of food and drinking water, a grim scenario now prevails across Moulvibazar.

In an effort to come forward and support the flood-hit people, young musicians have hit the streets, singing their soulful melodies to raise funds for relief campaign.

Every day, young singers from the town are performing at Choumohana Chatwar in Moulvibazar Sadar upazila and at Shaheed Minar premises and Bhabaniganj Bazar in Juri upazila to collect contributions for flood relief.

"The funds raised will directly reach flood-affected areas for relief effort. I am personally coordinating it," said Oishi Chakladar, a young singer.

Subrata Sutradhar, who brought his two daughters to join the effort, said, "My daughters want to contribute and stand beside the flood-hit people by singing songs."

Locals have praised the initiative saying such efforts will engage the community in addressing the crisis and provide valuable assistance to those affected by the flood.

Mir Yusuf Ali, an organiser of the initiative, said, "I posted on my Facebook on last Saturday about our initiative and received overwhelming response. About 50 artists and their families have joined us."

In Juri upazila, similar street performances by a group of cultural activists took place on Tuesday.

The musicians performed numerous songs, including "Manush dhoro manush bhojo", "Manush manusher jonno" and "Ami manab dharme manab karme sapinu e pran-mon", among others.

The event attracted people from all walks of life, with many seen to sing alongside.

Contempt petition filed against seven ex-SC judges

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Supreme Court lawyer yesterday filed a contempt of court petition with the High Court against three former chief justices and four former judges of the Appellate Division for punishing him in a case in October, 2020.

The accused former chief justices are Syed Mahmud Hossain, Hasan Foez Siddique and Obaidul Hassan and four former apex court judges are M Imman Ali, Mirza Hussain Haider, Abu Bakar Siddiquee and Md Nuruzzaman.

Advocate Md Eunus Ali Akond submitted the petition against the former judges, saying that they had punished the lawyers abusing their powers and in violation of the law.

In the petition, he prayed to the HC to issue a contempt of court rule against them.

Eunus Ali told The Daily Star that a hearing of the contempt of court petition may be held next Sunday.

An Appellate Division bench of the accused seven judges, when they were sitting judges, on October 12, 2020, barred Eunus Ali from practicing law --

A promising life cut short

Newly-wed software engineer killed by muggers

RAFIUL ISLAM

Just four months ago, Zarraf Ahmed, a young and promising software engineer, married Saima Rahman Labannya, dreaming of a shared future filled with possibilities.

To bring those dreams closer to reality, Labannya had travelled to Australia to pursue higher studies.

But in a cruel twist of fate, those dreams were shattered on Tuesday when Zarraf was stabbed to death by alleged muggers in Dhaka's Darussalam area.

The families are now left in utter shock and devastation, struggling to comprehend the heartbreaking loss.

"The loss of Zarraf has shattered dreams of his family and left a void that can never be filled. We want justice for the killing through a proper investigation," Ahsanul Haque Zahid, a childhood friend of the victim, told The Daily Star.

Ahsanul said Zarraf's wife went to Australia to purse her dream of higher study and Zarraf, a senior software engineer of Newroz Technologies Limited, was striving to make his mark in the country by founding his own enterprise.

"But everything is finished now due to the mindless act by the muggers," he said.

Labannya is now travelling back to Dhaka to say a final goodbye to her husband.

Hearing the news of Zarraf's death, his elderly parents with the help of other family members started for Dhaka in a private car from their village home in Naogaon in the afternoon.

But they were taken back to Naogaon after reaching Bogura as the couple fell ill and lost consciousness on numerous occasions on the journey, family members said.

Zarraf's cousin Kaniz Sharmin filed a murder case with Darussalam Police Station early yesterday.

Kaniz said Zarraf started for Dhaka around 10:00pm on Monday after visiting his parents in Naogaon.

After getting down from the bus, he took a rickshaw to reach his house.

As he reached Darussalam around 5:00am on Tuesday, two muggers intercepted the rickshaw. When he tried to resist them, the muggers stabbed him and took away his mobile phone, laptop and cash, she said quoting pedestrians who took him to Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital.

Hospital authorities could not identify his body and he was kept there for several hours.

POLICE REFORM

Home adviser seeks UK assistance

STAR REPORT

Home Adviser Lt Gen (retd) Jahangir Alam Chowdhury yesterday said the government has initiated steps to reform the police force, aiming to create a more efficient, neutral, and people-friendly law enforcement agency.

To support this effort, the adviser has requested training and ancillary assistance from the UK.

Jahangir made this appeal during a meeting with the British High Commissioner to Bangladesh Sarah Cooke at the Secretariat.

The meeting covered a range of topics, including inter-state cooperation in combating terrorism, tackling illegal immigration, support for police reform, flood rehabilitation, and aid for the Rohingya community, according to a statement from the Ministry of Home Affairs.

In response, Sarah Cooke confirmed that a UK expert team is scheduled to visit Bangladesh in September, offering the necessary cooperation for the police reform initiative.

Jahangir also informed the high commissioner

Mahfuz Alam special asst to chief adviser

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Mahfuz Alam has been appointed as special assistant to the Chief Adviser to the interim government Prof Muhammad Yunus, with the status of a secretary, on a contractual basis.

The public administration ministry, in a gazette notification issued yesterday, said Mahfuz will remain in office for the duration of the chief adviser's term or subject to his satisfaction and on condition of renouncing working relations with other institutions and organisations.

Mahfuz, a student of Dhaka University's Law Department for 2015-16 academic session, is the coordinator of the liaison committee of Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

The gazette notification said his appointment will be effective from the date of his joining.

We want a sustainable

"Our ordeals keep recurring time and again. All our shrimp and fish in two enclosures were washed away this time. The river eroded away 35 bighas of my father-in-law's land over the years. Only seven bighas are left, which are at risk of being devoured by the river. We need a sustainable solution," Kalpana added.

Chanchala Mandal shared similar plights. "We have become destitute and have to live by asking others for food. I was cultivating watermelons; all of those have been washed away."

Sukriti Mohan Sarkar, a local school teacher, said students, government, private institutions, and voluntary organisations have stood beside the affected people, providing them with dry and cooked food, saline, polythene sheets, clothes, etc.

"However, many people in remote areas are yet to receive any help," he added.

Mohitosh Mandal of Harinkhola village said he incurred a loss of Tk 4 lakh as all prawns and lobsters of his three enclosures were washed away in flood.

Deluti union Chairman Ripon Kumar said while locals repaired the dam's breached part, it is uncertain how long it can hold Bhadra's water.

"Numerous houses were damaged, vast stretches of crop fields submerged, fish enclosures washed away, and hundreds of people were living in shelters and higher grounds after being displaced due to the flood. Without significant government assistance, there is hardly any scope to turn around from the situation," he said.

He too called for a sustainable embankment.

Saikat Mallik, senior fisheries officer of Paikgachha upazila, said 305 tonnes of fish and 194 tonnes of prawns and shrimps from more than 600 farms and enclosures have been washed away, causing damage worth around Tk 28.83 crore.

Abdul Karim, district disaster and rehabilitation officer in Khulna, said at least 2,466 families from 13 villages have been affected. "So far, about 4,500 people are in shelters and on the embankment."

the fruits of the student-led revolution, said Prof Yunus.

Under the previous government, the Election Commission was turned into an "election manipulation commission," he also said.

Prof Yunus also sought UNDP support to carry out vital reforms in wide-ranging areas such as the judiciary, police, election commission, and tax administration.

He told UNDP Resident Representative Stefan Liller that Bangladesh immediately needs far-reaching digitalisation efforts in tax and land administration so that a citizen can pay taxes or register their land and property sale without any hassles.

Bangladesh also needs vital reforms "to build a modern police force" and ensure a rule of law in the country, Dr Yunus added.

Liller offered the UN agency's full support for the wide-ranging reforms.

French Ambassador Marie Masdupuy said France is ready to support the interim government in their efforts to rebuild the country and expressed eagerness to extend expertise to fight corruption, human trafficking, forensic cybercrime, port and airport security, and financial crime.

The interim government's agenda to fight corruption would be a "key enabler" to further enhance trade and investments in Bangladesh, she said.

French firms were interested in setting up three solar parks in Bangladesh and installing "lightning arresters" in 15 districts, she added.

The envoy also said French President Emmanuel Macron has invited him to visit France at a convenient time.

Meanwhile, Prof Yunus urged Canada to invest in Bangladesh to help rebuild the country when Canadian High Commissioner Lilly Nichols called on him.

"We need big investments," he said, noting that the economy is in a total mess with a huge amount of debt.

Nichols said Bangladesh must ensure labour rights in factories to continue to enjoy trade preferences from Canada.

Prof Yunus said his government would uphold labour rights "as per the ILO standards".

The chief adviser also sought Malaysia's support for Bangladesh to become a member of ASEAN as Malaysian High Commissioner Haznah Md Hashim paid him a courtesy visit. Bangladesh can be a bridge between ASEAN and Saarc, Prof Yunus told Haznah.

Haznah raised tax issues being faced by Robi Axiata and other Malaysian companies, saying some 50 percent of Robi's revenue is paid as taxes.

She said a second Malaysian car manufacturer has signed an agreement with a Chittagong-based company for distributing and assembling cars.

On August 5, he spoke to his mother over phone and told her that he would visit them again soon after the situation becomes normal. He also asked everyone to stay safe.

Later, he went to Mawna Bridge area at noon for some work, only to find himself in the middle of a clash between protesters and police. Amid the clash, Masum was hit by bullets in his chest twice. Locals rushed him to Bhaluka Upazila Health Complex in Mymensingh where doctors declared him dead.

On information, his family members came to the hospital and took his body to his village, where he was buried at the family graveyard on August 6, said his aunt Sabina Khatun.

"Masum was my only son among six children. As I am no longer capable of working, he took the responsibility of our five-member family on his own shoulder. His death has left us in dire straits. How are we going to survive now?" lamented his father.

His mother Morshida Khatun said, "Our son helped his four sisters get married. With him no more, our lives have become very uncertain now. Who will now look after us? We are at a loss."

The family members demanded proper investigation into Masum's killing to bring the perpetrators to book.

officials will be reassigned to field positions, while qualified and efficient field-level officers will be appointed to key roles at the head office.

The adviser criticised the recent deviations from the Foundation's core activities, vision, and mission, attributing these issues to political interference. He said the Foundation would be kept above political influence moving forward.Additionally, Hossain announced that intelligence agencies will assist in assessing the increase in wealth among Islamic Foundation officials and employees over the past 15 years.

He said legal action will be taken if any irregularities or corruption are found.

for the flood-affected people, I decided to contribute."

Shadekul Alam, an expatriate, said, "It's an inspiring effort. It gives me hope that people will come together to support one another."

Milon Das, a battery run auto-rickshaw driver, said, "I have also contributed to help those in need."

Mridul Ghosh, a student and cultural activist who is the key organiser of the initiative, said, "We organised the event to raise funds for the flood-hit people, and the response has been encouraging."

"All the collected money will be used to provide relief to flood victims," he added.

about the formation of a five-member neutral inquiry commission, led by a retired judge of the High Court Division, to investigate enforced disappearances that occurred during the previous Awami League-led government's tenure.

Sarah Cooke stressed the importance of delivering a fair trial for the violence and human rights violations that took place from June 5 to August 5.

"Those involved in these incidents must be brought under the law and justice quickly," she urged the adviser.

The adviser also updated the high commissioner on the visit of the United Nations fact-finding mission to Bangladesh, which is involved in investigating these human rights violations.

The British high commissioner expressed the UK's readiness to provide all necessary support and cooperation to the interim government, highlighting that the UK has been actively collaborating with Bangladesh for several years in combating terrorism.

Regarding the issue of Bangladeshi nationals living illegally in the UK, Sarah Cooke sought the adviser's cooperation, mentioning that standard operational procedures (SOP) would be followed in this regard.

Additionally, the adviser requested UK support in the rehabilitation and repatriation of the Rohingya refugees. In response, the high commissioner said the UK is working with the UN Security Council to keep the Rohingya issue at the forefront of the international community's attention.

The adviser also sought the UK's assistance in supporting the victims of recent floods.

Family members said they had assumed that he had fallen asleep after reaching home, and had switched off his phone. It was only when Labannya had called from Australia and told them that she was unable to reach Zarraf for a long time that they suspected something was wrong.

They started making calls to various hospitals and police stations, and around evening their worst fears were confirmed.

Rakibul Hasan, officer-in-charge of Darussalam Police Station, said they are trying to arrest the culprits.

Zarraf's body will be taken to Naogaon after an autopsy and he will be buried today after Labannya reaches home.

He was just a boy

His father, Majnu Miah, had recently taken loans and gone abroad to work, all in the hope of securing a better life for his family. He dreamt of his son completing his education and bringing pride to the family. But those dreams were shattered that fateful afternoon.

As Maruf joined a celebratory procession in Tangail town, the event spiraled into chaos near Tangail Sadar Police Station. Police opened fire, and the 10th grader was critically injured. He was rushed to a nearby hospital, where doctors declared him dead upon arrival.

"My son was only a school-goer. He just went out to join a peaceful procession. Why did they have to shoot him to death?" Maruf's mother, Morsheda Akter, wept as she recalled the tragic day.

"We had high hopes for our son. It's all shattered now," she said.

Criminal proceedings have already begun in connection with Maruf's death. Local coordinators of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement demanded that a local road be named in Maruf's honour -- a request the administration promised to fulfill.

around 5:00pm for his workplace in Mohammadpur.

On the way, he fell in the line of fire when a clash was going on between student protesters and law enforcers.

Some students rushed him to a hospital in Mohakhali, where he was later admitted to the Intensive Care Unit on July 21.

He was put on life support the next day as he fell into a coma. Eventually, Jasim did not regain consciousness and passed away after fighting for his life for 11 days.

Jasim's body was taken to his village home and buried at the family graveyard on August 1.

Since then, Jasim's elder daughter Riya Moni, 11, has yet to stop her tears.

Jasim's wife Ruma Begum said, "We don't know how we will survive now. All our hope is lost. I demand justice for my husband's murder."

Sekender Ali Mridha, Jasim's father-in-law, said, "Jasim was shot without any reason. My daughter has now become a widow, her three children became orphans. How are they going to live?" said .

He called upon the government to provide support to Jasim's family.

Shomaji new Dhaka public prosecutor

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has appointed senior lawyer Ehsanul Haque Shomaji as Dhaka Metropolitan public prosecutor.

A gazette notification was issued yesterday by the Ministry of Law, Justice and Parliamentary Affairs in this regard.

He has replaced public prosecutor Abdullah Abu, appointed by the previous Awami League government.

before both its Appellate and High Court divisions -- for three months over contempt of court by posting three derogatory comments about the judiciary on his Facebook.

The court also fined him Tk 25,000 and directed that he will have to serve 15 days of imprisonment if he fails to pay the fine.

Education system needs reform

Prof Salimullah tells event

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The education system should be reformed, where basic education should be extended up to class 12, said Prof Salimullah Khan yesterday.

"All students must read all subjects of science, history, mathematics, and others till 12th class, which would be free of cost. After that, they should have opportunities to select subjects for their higher education," he said.

He was speaking at a discussion titled "What Kind of Education System We Want" at Dhaka University's RC Majumdar Arts Auditorium, organised by Amader Pathshala -- an initiative for deprived children.

Terming the current system of universities "sick," Prof Salimullah said there is no higher education system here at all. "We need to focus on technical education first. After completing the basic education, most students need to go for technical education to learn the basic skills of earning," he said.

Local universities could never truly become universities and couldn't achieve the international standard, he said, adding that college and professional education must be separated.

Regarding reforming the primary schools, he said the schools need to be turned into creative schools, where children will feel the happiness of invention.

Besides, investment will be required for the primary school teachers, he added.

"The teachers should get higher pay scales and get more respect and financial support. With these, the whole system can be reformed within the next 10 years," he added.

At the event, Prof Samina Luthfa of Sociology at Dhaka University said students have earned the power to hold teachers accountable about their duties following the July upsurge. "Now it's time to handle this power with responsibilities. You have the responsibility to become a proper human being. When you [students] get people's support and confidence, your responsibilities increase at the same time," she said.

"If you think you have liberated Bangladesh for the second time, so you have the rights to do anything you want; you can hit anyone anytime... This cannot happen," she added.

More than just NUMBERS

A 24-year-old mason fatally shot in the chest in Gazipur. A 16-year-old student gunned down by cops in Tangail. A 37-year-old driver shot dead in Dhaka. At least 400 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, parents, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

'How will we survive without him?'

Laments father of Masum who was shot dead on Aug 5

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Masum Billah, 24, started working as a mason a few years back as he could not continue his studies after passing SSC examination.

Hailing from Naluapara village in Netrakona's Durgapur upazila, he was working as a mason in Mawna area of Gazipur.

With his earning, he was taking care of his five-member family single-handedly, as his father Saidur Rahman, a marginal farmer, could hardly work any more due to old age.

On July 28, Masum visited his family and returned on the same night due to a call from workplace.

'He was just a boy, why did police shoot him?'

Says mother of Maruf who was killed in Tangail

MIRZA SHAKIL, Tangail

"We are finally free" is what 16-year-old Maruf thought when he came to know about Sheikh Hasina's resignation on August 5.

He thought the worst days were behind him, and his friends won't be killed again for demanding what is right.

After weeks, he finally felt safe.

So he joined the celebrations in a "free" country, only to be gunned down by cops in Tangail just hours after Hasina's fall.

'All our hope is gone'

Says wife of Jasim who was shot in Dhaka

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Jasim Uddin Howladar, 37, from Patuakhali's Dumki upazila, used to work as a driver for a Dhaka-based non-government organisation.

He was the lone earning member for his family comprising his elderly in-laws, wife and three children, who live in Pangashia villager under the upazila.

A bullet put an end to Jasim's life, and left his family facing days of uncertainty.

On July 19, Jasim left his house in Dhaka's Adabor area

'Rebuild Shidhu-Kanu sculpture within 15 days'

Demand indigenous communities

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

People from indigenous communities in Kaharol upazila of Dinajpur yesterday demonstrated protesting the vandalism of Shidhu-Kanu sculpture at Kantanagar (Tevaga Intersection) on August 5.

They also blocked a road in front of Dinajpur Press Club for an hour as part of their agitation.

Speakers at the event demanded that the authorities concerned take prompt steps to rebuild the sculpture within next 15 days, and warned of greater movement, if their demand is not met.

They handed over a memorandum addressed to the chief adviser, to Shakil Ahmed, the deputy commissioner of Dinajpur, with 9-point demand including forming separate land commission for indigenous people, punishment for those who vandalised the Shidhu-Kanu sculpture, and punishment of those who vandalised, torched and looted houses of people belonging to indigenous communities across the country since August 5.

Around 2,000 people from the communities, alongside representatives of Adivasi Chhatra Janata, Jatiya Adivasi Parishad, and Adivasi Mukti Morcha, and students of different public universities and colleges joined the agitation.

My conscience drove me:

JEETU AHSAN

"I was deeply disturbed by a photo circulating on social media—a bloodied female student from Dhaka University. The image hit me hard, especially because I have a daughter."

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Actor Jeetu Ahsan, renowned for his powerful performances in film and television, found himself in the midst of protests during the recent anti-discrimination student movement. On August 4, Jeetu joined the student protesters at Shaheed Minar, standing in solidarity with those fighting against the violence and injustice gripping the country.

In an exclusive interview with The Daily Star, Jeetu shared the profound impact recent events had on him, compelling him to take a stand.

"I was deeply disturbed by a photo circulating on social media—a bloodied female student from Dhaka University. The image hit me hard, especially because I have a daughter. I couldn't help but think, what if that had been her? The thought of such violence against women was unbearable," he recalled.

This sense of outrage prompted Jeetu to voice his concerns on social media. "Shortly after, I learned that Abu Sayed from Rangpur was shot dead during the protests. His death, captured on video, spread rapidly online. No sane person can accept what had happened. I kept wondering why people were being shot when these issues could be resolved through dialogue," he said.

Jeetu's frustration grew when he heard about students being attacked while receiving treatment at hospitals, including Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH). "It was sheer madness," he remarked. "Students, already critically injured, were being assaulted in a place meant for healing. How could that be acceptable? My conscience wouldn't let me stay silent."

Despite his family's advice to remain cautious, Jeetu felt a moral obligation to act. "There was a clash at Dhanmondi 27, where a student from Residential Model College lost his life. His birthday was the same as mine, September 12. I couldn't help but think about how many dreams he and his parents must have had, now all shattered," he reflected.

Driven by his conscience, Jeetu visited the scene at Dhanmondi 27 and later shared his thoughts on Facebook. "Everything I've done has been guided by my conscience. No one pressured me, and I wasn't afraid. Some friends warned me that speaking out could cause problems, but I did it anyway," he said.

Jeetu also spoke about the tragic incident involving Mugdho, a young student whose video distributing water during the protests went viral. "That video haunted me. I couldn't sleep that night. I just couldn't shake the scenes from my mind. After that, we faced an internet shutdown, and social media became inaccessible," he recalled.

Jeetu was one of the artistes who gathered in front of the Abahani Field on Sat Masjid Road, defying the downpour on August 2 to protest under the banner Artistes Against Genocide and Oppression. He voiced his concerns to the media, condemning the oppression carried out by the former AL-led government. The following day, he participated in protests at Shaheed Minar, driven not by a desire for heroism but by a deep sense of responsibility. "Thousands of students and citizens were out there, and I stood with them," he shared.

It's been a few weeks since the interim government assumed leadership of the country's administration. Regarding this, Jeetu shared, "I want to see a beautiful Bangladesh, one that is free from discrimination. I understand that change won't happen overnight. It will take time, but the effort must begin now."

He further emphasised, "The country, our motherland, must always come first. If we prioritise patriotism, our nation will progress and become more beautiful."

He also expressed concern for those affected by the severe floods in several districts, where millions are stranded. "It's heartbreaking to witness the suffering of the flood victims. These people are enduring immense pain, and while this is a natural disaster, it doesn't lessen their hardship. I sincerely hope the water recedes quickly."

Reflecting on his career, Jeetu noted that he has been acting for over two decades, having made significant contributions to television dramas during his career. His work has been widely praised, following in the footsteps of his father, the esteemed actor Syed Ahsan Ali Sydney.

Jeetu remains active in the industry, performing in dramas, on OTT platforms, and in films. His portrayal of Hanif Sikdar in the film Gohin Baluchor, directed by Badrul Anam Saud, received widespread acclaim and left a lasting impression on audiences.

When asked about his natural acting style, Jeetu replied, "I have a deep love for acting. This love is intertwined with my craft. I simply put in the effort; the rest is the audience's love. It's the quality work that stays in their hearts."

Badhan calls for midnight women's march against rape and violence

Azmeri Haque Badhan has been a vocal advocate against injustice since the start of the anti-discrimination student movement.

Now, she is organising a protest against rape and violence against women, calling for justice for the victims. Badhan urges all women to join the Shekol Bhangar Padayatra (March to Break the Chains) for women's rights, set to begin on Friday (August 30) at 11:59pm from Shahbagh to the National Parliament.

She emphasised, "I'm going. I urge everyone to join. The more people that come, the stronger this movement will become."

'Dushtu Kokil' hits 200m views, sets benchmark for Bengali cinema

Toofan, starring Shakib Khan, Mimi Chakraborty, and Nabila, quickly gained attention after its Eid-ul-Azha release.

Directed by Raihan Rafi, the film sparked interest, especially after the song Dushtu Kokil launched on June 26 on two major YouTube channels.

The song has set a new record for Bengali movie songs, surpassing 200 million views in just two months. Dushtu Kokil garnered over 138 million views on Chorki's YouTube channel and over 67 million on SVF, totaling over 205 million views.

Journalist's body found floating

Rahanuma, daughter of Bakhtiar Shikdar of Noakhali's Sonaimuri upazila, was staying in a rented flat in Kalyanpur area.

Her husband Sayed Shuvro told Prothom Alo that they got married seven years ago without informing their families.

Rahanuma went to her office on Tuesday and did not return home, but sent the flat rent with a person at night.

"Later, I called her and asked why she sent money by someone else instead of coming home. She replied that she was busy and hung up. Later, around 3:00am, we got news that she had jumped into the Hatirjheel lake," Shuvro said.

He went to DMCH and saw her body there, he added.

"We never had any major fights, but for some time, Rahanuma wanted to live separately. We even went to the marriage registrar's office for our divorce, but it didn't happen due to the current situation in the country."

At 10:54pm on Tuesday, Rahanuma in a Facebook post, said, "It is better to die than to live a life akin to death."

Soon after, she posted another status at 11:06pm tagging one Fahim Faisal and sharing some photos at Dhaka University. The post read, "Good to have a friend like you. God bless you. I hope all your dreams come true soon. We had a lot of plans. Sorry, I can't fulfill the plans. May God bless you ..."

A few hours later, Fahim wrote on his Facebook page that read, "My friend is no more. Last [Tuesday] night, she spoke to me for the last time. If I had known it was our last conversation, I would have never let her go."

Speaking to reporters, Rahanuma's elder sister Rabita Sabah, an assistant professor at Jagannath University, said a girl like Rahanuma, who was involved in various voluntary organisations, was unlikely to die by suicide.

Rabita said she did not know what led to her sister's death and that police would investigate it.

She claimed that her sister was frustrated with her job and salaries.

Two days ago, Rahanuma wrote on her Facebook page, "Every day, we cover so many protests, but general journalists don't even have the time to fight for their own rights and dues, like salaries and benefits! Our job is just to cover news, even if it means going hungry."

After her death, several of her friends on their Facebook pages wrote that she was looking for a new job.

Asked, Sharif Niazi, inspector (investigation) of Hatirjheel Police Station, told The Daily Star that they were looking into all related issues. An unnatural death case was filed, he added.

asked Khilgaon Police Station to register it as a first information report (FIR).

The court asked the OC of the same police station to register an FIR over the death of 14-year-old Ashiqul Islam on the same day. Hasina and 26 others were accused in the case filed by Ashiqul's mother Arisha Afroz.

The third case was filed against Hasina and 50 others on charges related to the attempted murder of a lawyer of the Dhaka Bar Association during the students' quota reform protest on July 18.

Advocate Abdul Baset Shamim filed the case with the court of Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate Md Tofazzal Hossain. The magistrate asked Mugda Police Station's OC to register the complainant's statement as an FIR.

In Bogura, Hasina, three local journalists and 130 others were sued in a murder case over the death of Md Shaheed, 35, who was shot dead on August 4, a day before Hasina's fall.

Shimu Begum, 34, the wife of the deceased, filed the case on Tuesday, said Bogura Sadar Police Station OC Saihan Olliullah.

weeks of pre-tournament preparation, the charges of coach Maruful Haque flipped the script in commanding fashion,.

UEFA A-licenced coach Maruful, concerned about his players' fitness following their gruelling 4-3 penalty shootout win over India in the semi-final, made three changes to the starting lineup: defenders Rajib Hossain and Iftiar Hossain, as well as semifinal hero in goalkeeper Mohammad Asif.

From the outset, the home side applied relentless pressure, coming close to breaking the deadlock several times, but solid defending and Asif's brilliant goalkeeping kept Bangladesh in the hunt.

After surviving three scares, Bangladesh nearly took the lead in the 24th minute when Rostom Islam headed wide from a perfect free-kick by Rahul. Nepal continued to test Bangladesh from distance, only to be denied by the 17-year-old keeper.

Bangladesh eventually went in front against the run of play in first-half stoppage time, with Mirajul earning a free-kick after being fouled by defender Niraj Karka before expertly curling it into the top-left corner.

Seeking an equaliser, Nepal came out aggressively after the break, while Bangladesh went on to capitalise on counterattacks, striking twice in the span of 16 minutes.

First, it was Mirajul who doubled the cushion in the 55th minute with a close-range header following a flick on from Asadul Molla. Rahul then joined the party in the 71st minute with a precise finish inside the box after being set up by Mirajul, which led to frustrated home fans throwing water bottles towards the Bangladesh players.

Nepal did pull one back in the 81st minute with a header from Samir Tamang, providing the hosts a glimmer of hope, but Nova struck his side's fourth goal in the sixth minute of added time to cap off a memorable win.

'Don't buy any properties of S Alam Group'

The overall situation will improve after five to six months."

On Islami Bank, Mansur said he has asked the new board to make an action plan within a week. "We will provide all kinds of support to them. If they do not play a supportive role, the board will be changed again."

Asked what Bangladesh Bank will do if S Alam Group tries to sell properties that have not been mortgaged, Mansur said, "It has to be done through legal process. We will ask the government to take action."

On scams involving S Alam, he said S Alam may be the first person in history to rob banks with such meticulous planning. "I have never heard of such a well-planned bank looting using state machinery ... on such a wide scale."

The governor said the scams involving other people will also be investigated and action will be taken. "No one will be spared."

On forming a Banking Commission, Mansur said the commission will be formed within a month, but its exact modus operandi has not been finalised yet.

He said the commission will not act like the previous one. "It will have to be reconstituted brick by brick. It will be a different type of work. We will get assistance from foreign experts who have the expertise on dealing with the banking crisis in other countries. We will also learn from how Sri Lanka has dealt with the issues."

Responding to a query on inflation, Mansur said steps have been taken to control inflation. "We can reduce interest rate, if we can reduce the inflation rate in next six to seven months. However, the recent flood has caused a bit of concern."

On foreign currency reserves, he said there is no possibility of reduction in reserve. "It will increase in the future. The government's demand for dollar is being met from the interbank market."

He added that if the dollar price remained stable, there would be no reason for the import bill to increase. Oil price is stable in the global market and the prices of other products, including wheat and soybean, have dropped.

Regarding his predecessors, he said there was a lack of good governance. "The central bank also needs to be reformed. Because it also cannot avoid responsibility."

It won't be prudent to ban AL

AL, he said the Attorney General's Office was against it when the High Court's order to ban the AL was sought.

As per the constitution, people have the right to associate.

The AL led the struggle for Bangladesh's independence and it contributed to movements for democracy, he said.

"What they have done in the last 15 years is not in line with their tradition. It does not go with the spirit of the Liberation War. They established the most barbaric fascism in the history of Bangladesh," he added.

When a reporter told him that the Election Commission said its constitutional obligation was to hold an election within 90 days of dissolution of parliament, Prof Asif said, "The Election Commission should understand what their constitutional obligation was. Was holding a sham election its constitutional obligation too?"

The chief election commissioner in a recent article termed the previous government autocratic, he said.

"There is no reason for us to be guided by the [chief election commissioner's] words. We have enough legal experts."

He then said assaulting people on court premises was not acceptable under any circumstance, but added that Mahmudur Rahman, a senior journalist, was assaulted on court premises and many journalists were humiliated in many other ways over the last 15 years.

"There are many angry people out there: those who did not have a job for 15 years, people who were on the run fearing for their lives. There are families of people who were murdered and the victims of enforced disappearances. That anger was expressed. But I don't support this. We are thinking about ways to reduce the crowding [on court premises]."

Asked whether too many cases were being filed against key individuals in the previous government, he said, "If a family member of a deceased person files a case, the state has no right to stop them. We will try to ensure the proper process of investigation and prosecution."

Rescue op yet to begin

On Tuesday, the eight-member probe body was formed to investigate the fire incident at the factory, owned by former Awami League minister Golam Dastagir Gazi.

Families of many other missing people gathered in front of the factory over the last three days.

Holding a photo of her father, Raisa Akter Mim, 10, was waiting in front of the factory last night.

Mohammad Mamun, the father of the third-grader, has been missing since Sunday night when the factory was set ablaze.

Speaking to The Daily Star, Raisa said, "We have been waiting here for two days."

Mamun's brother-in-law Mohammad Rana said they looked for Mamun at many hospitals and morgues in Dhaka and Narayanganj, but did not find him. "We believe the bodies of many people, including Mamun, are inside the factory building."

Among those missing is Aman Ullah, 21, a worker at a local battery factory.

Rashida said her son told them over the phone around 10:00pm on Sunday that he got trapped inside the building. He requested the family members to rescue him.

"No one is giving us any information about my son. Please, give us his body at least," said Rashida.

The factory had been closed since August 5 after it came under a mob attack.

India floods kill 15 after heavy rains

AFP, New Delhi

Torrential rains in India caused heavy flooding that killed at least 15 people, local media reported yesterday.

Rivers across the coastal western state of Gujarat have broken their banks and more than 23,000 people have been evacuated from their homes, according to the reports.

The Business Standard newspaper said 15 people had been killed since Monday across eight of the state's districts.

Fishermen have been advised not to venture into the sea, chief minister Bhupendra Patel said in a social media post.

Monsoon rains cause widespread destruction every year, but experts say climate change is shifting weather patterns and increasing the number of extreme weather events.

Israeli soldiers operate during a raid in the Nur Shams camp for Palestinian refugees near the city of Tulkarem in the Israeli-occupied West Bank yesterday. At least 9 Palestinians were killed in Israeli raids and strikes in several towns in the north of the occupied West Bank, a spokesman for the Red Crescent said.

Russian attacks kill six in east Ukraine

AFP, Kyiv

Russian bombardments on the eastern Ukraine region of Donetsk killed six people yesterday, the governor of the region said, as Moscow announced it had taken another village in the area.

The industrial region has suffered the worst fighting of Russia's invasion. The Kremlin claimed to have annexed it alongside three other territories in 2022.

"In the morning the Russians killed four people and destroyed a house in Izmailivka," the regional official Vadym Filashkin said on social media.

He added that two more people were killed in separate attacks near Chasiv Yar that damaged more than a dozen homes.

Russia's defence ministry announced on Wednesday that Russian forces had taken another settlement, some 20 kilometres (12 miles) from the logistics hub of Pokrovsk.

Regional authorities have recently ordered large-scale mandatory evacuations with Russian forces advancing towards Pokrovsk, once home to around 60,000 people.

Filashkin said that 2,718 people, including 392 children, had been evacuated from frontline areas on Tuesday.

He later said on state media that some 30,000 people remained in Pokrovsk and surrounding villages and that banks would shutter in the town by Sunday.

India rape protests spiral into political street clashes

AFP, Kolkata

Thousands of protesters clashed in India's eastern city of Kolkata yesterday, where demonstrations seeking justice for a murdered doctor spiralled into violent street skirmishes between political rivals.

The discovery of the 31-year-old doctor's bloodied body at a state-run hospital in Kolkata on August 9 stoked nationwide anger at the chronic issue of violence against women.

That sparked strikes by medics and rallies backed by thousands of ordinary citizens across India, although many doctors have since returned to work.

But repeated protests in West Bengal state capital Kolkata have transformed into clashes between the state's ruling All India Trinamool Congress (AITMC) and the opposition Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP).

The Hindu-nationalist BJP is the party of Prime Minister Narendra Modi and holds power nationally, but sits in opposition in West Bengal.

"We want justice", BJP supporters chanted, referring to the murdered doctor, then demanding the resignation of AITMC leader Mamata Banerjee, the chief minister.

"Go back! Go back!" AITMC supporters shouted in return.

Banerjee accused the BJP of "dirty politics" and exploiting the doctor's death, speaking at a rally of party loyalists.

On Tuesday, police clashed with protesters, firing tear gas canisters and water cannons, and arresting at least 245 people.

US, China accuse each other of stoking regional tensions

AFP, Beijing

Top US and Chinese officials exchanged warnings against stoking regional tensions during a meeting in Beijing yesterday after China became embroiled in security rows with American allies Japan and the Philippines.

US National Security Advisor Jake Sullivan, making the first such trip by someone in his role since 2016, and Chinese top diplomat Wang Yi met in Beijing for talks that were meant to smooth over relations.

But after their meeting, state media reported that Wang cautioned Washington against supporting the Philippines in the disputed South China Sea.

"The United States must not use bilateral treaties as an excuse to undermine China's sovereignty and territorial integrity, nor should it support or condone the Philippines' actions of infringement," Wang told Sullivan, according to state broadcaster CCTV.

Sullivan, who is US President Joe Biden's most senior security aide, doubled down on Washington's pledges to defend its regional partners.

"Mr Sullivan reaffirmed the United States' commitment to defending its Indo-Pacific allies," the White House said in a readout of their meeting.

Sullivan also "expressed concern about the PRC's destabilizing actions against lawful Philippine maritime operations in the South China Sea", it said, using an acronym for the People's Republic of China.

Trump, Harris TV debate on Sept 10!

AFP, Washington

Donald Trump said Tuesday he had "reached an agreement" for a September 10 debate with Kamala Harris, two days after he threatened to pull out -- although there was no confirmation from the US vice president that a deal had been struck.

Trump posted on his Truth Social platform that the rivals had agreed that the ABC showdown would run under the same rules as CNN's June 27 debate, with no studio audience and each candidate's microphone muted when the other is speaking.

Calling ABC "by far the nastiest and most unfair newscaster in the business," Trump said the network had given him assurances that the debate in Philadelphia would be "fair."

But the Harris campaign responded by accusing Trump of moving the goalposts and was coy about whether it was accepting the terms.

Trump has previously balked at taking part in the debate, which comes on the heels of Harris's lightning rise as the Democratic White House nominee after Biden stepped aside.

operational so that the students' and teachers' opinions are taken into account. "However, we will know how long it will take to do that after discussions with the stakeholders."

Freedom of expression of students and teachers is mentioned in the Dhaka University Order, 1973, he said. "Those who founded the university formed the structures keeping these elements in mind."

The DU will prioritise rebuilding within a week the administrative structure required to resume academic activities.

"We are not waiting for a 100 percent perfect situation. We will resume [the activities] as much as we can. Such a situation is unprecedented in recent memory."

"My team hopes to start full-scale activities within a week. After taking office, we have been constantly talking to the stakeholders. We are trying to start the university's operations based on understanding with all. So, resuming the academic activities and reopening the dormitories is our first goal."

"The students have long been facing hurdles to an education-friendly environment. They have some reasonable suggestions, including those related to the student-teacher relationship and some others to infrastructural limitations. We will prioritise the issues that everyone is talking about in general," he added.

The next priority, Prof Niaz said, will be to cooperate with the outstanding researchers of the university. "It is a place of great interest to me. Our previous administration also took some initiatives to improve the university's rankings. Their good steps will be continued."

He said it would be a great challenge to make the students adapt to the changed situation.

"It has both physical and mental aspects. Maximum support will be given to get them out of trauma. I am committed to continuing to try to solve the problems of Dhaka University with everyone's advice."

Regarding the teachers' appointment on political considerations, the VC said such practices go against the spirit of the anti-discrimination movement, but his administration will first try to deal with the immediate crisis.

"It would be difficult for me to work on this agenda if the stakeholders do not agree with me or support me."

Prof Niaz called for opinions from the stakeholders. "My door is open for any suggestion and advice."

"If I don't accept the suggestion, I will disclose the reasons. At this critical time, it is very important to continue dialogue with everyone irrespective of party affiliation."

Attacks on businesses must be prevented

These incidents have a serious impact on the economy

We are deeply concerned about the severe and still-unrelenting disruptions faced by business establishments after the fall of the Awami League government. Business leaders have also expressed deep concerns about the impact of these disruptions caused mostly by incidents of arson, looting, and vandalism but also rising extortion, logistical bottlenecks, etc. It is only reasonable to think that if these challenges persist and business leaders are not given the support they need to weather this crisis, it may significantly hurt their operational capabilities and also the prospects of our export-driven economy. Even mass layoffs and factory closures cannot be ruled out.

Our top priority, then, should be restoring law and order and protecting all industrial establishments from harm, regardless of the identity of their owners. A recent report by this daily highlighted the extensive damage caused by politically motivated attacks on businesses from August 4 to 27, saying that nearly three dozen industrial units were targeted during this period. Most of them were owned or controlled by individuals with ties to Awami League. These attacks, invariably followed by looting and vandalism, have led to significant financial losses. Among the hardest hit was the Gazi Group, owned by former textile and jute minister Golam Dastagir Gazi. Two of its factories in Narayanganj—Gazi Pipe and Gazi Auto Tyres—have been left in ruins following repeated attacks, with the latter estimating a loss of Tk 1,000 crore alone. About 2,650 officers and employees of this unit have also become unemployed.

The Bengal Group of Industries also suffered heavy losses, with several of its factories in Gazipur being damaged by arson, vandalism, and looting. Its estimated losses amounted to around Tk 462 crore. Among other well-known factories affected were those of the Beximco Group, owned by Salman F Rahman, and the Ha-Meem Group. Such examples reportedly abound, taking place across various industries and even in warehouses, although we are yet to know the full extent of such attacks or the damages caused. One thing is clear, however. The unprecedented scale of industrial attacks will have a debilitating impact not just on the workers and officers employed by factories but also their respective markets, resulting in a crisis that may shoot up domestic prices of relevant products.

Against this backdrop, increasing security is paramount. That may be a challenging task considering the recent turmoil witnessed in some security forces, but for the country to move ahead and businesses to flourish again, there is no alternative to taking strict actions. And we hope the law enforcement authorities will do just that. Going ahead, business leaders also need help to recoup their losses which they have already detailed, including favourable import terms, continuation of the export development fund, removal of existing barriers in consignment release and transportation, etc. The BGMEA, which represents garments manufacturers, also requested a soft loan of Tk 1,800-1,900 crore to pay one month's wages for the workers, which too deserves consideration. These financial, logistical and policy supports are essential to boost business confidence again.

Coordination vital in aid distribution

The authorities must streamline all flood relief efforts

It was very heartening to see the spontaneous response from people to help those affected by the recent floods in eastern districts—one of the worst in living memory. But one lingering problem that somewhat marred this response is the insufficient logistics in relief distribution in many of the affected areas. According to a report in this daily, local administrations are struggling to reach remote areas because of logistical issues. The lack of coordination among the groups involved is causing a problem as well. We believe an urgent plan is necessary to expand and streamline all such efforts to ensure smooth delivery of relief goods.

According to the report, even though the flood situation has started to improve, there are areas where people are still trapped by water, with no modes of transport and communication available. Local administrations and volunteers are facing difficulties in reaching these areas as they don't have enough boats, particularly in Feni, Cumilla, Lakshmipur and Noakhali districts. In Feni, teams of armed forces have been trying their best to reach as many people as possible; they have air-dropped food packets in some remote areas. But some places remain inaccessible. Volunteer groups are working on their own; locals and some volunteers told Prothom Alo that their aid efforts in Feni Sadar are mostly limited to places close to the Dhaka-Chattogram highway. In Cumilla, more than 1.1 million people in 14 upazilas are still marooned, and they haven't received any aid yet, Samakal reported.

There is another aspect that needs attention. As the floodwater recedes, the extent of damage is coming to view. Homesteads have been severely damaged; livestock, poultry and fish farms have been washed away, affecting people's livelihoods. In many areas, people are falling sick and there is no access to first aid and basic medications. The risks of various water-borne diseases breaking out also remain a considerable cause for concern.

Given the situation, the government needs to adopt a two-pronged approach. The first is to coordinate distribution of food and medicine especially for remote areas. The disaster management and relief ministry has already directed the DCs of flood-affected districts to coordinate with volunteers, armed forces, fire service, medical teams and others. The ministry should take the lead in this regard and guide these groups, providing necessary logistical support with the help of local government offices. The second is to plan for the post-flood scenario. People are going to need help to rebuild their lives; they will need support to make a living and survive any potential health crisis. The government must be prepared for that as well, and mobilise resources to provide the required support in the coming days.

DU must lead by example in abolishing partisan politics

A note to the new vice-chancellor

Saad Hammadi
is a fellow at the Balsillie School of International Affairs in Canada. His X handle is @saadhammadi.

SAAD HAMMADI

As the tide of reform sweeps across institutions with changes taking place in the leadership positions, the interim government and university authorities must ensure that teachers and students are no longer dragged into party-based politics in academic institutions. The present political affiliation of teachers and students is counterproductive for academic excellence.

The brand of student politics that has been prevalent in Bangladesh's universities since the 1990s is nothing short of running criminal rackets in academic institutions. From controlling access to student accommodations, to assaulting and even killing students critical of the party in power and interference in every other institutional decision, student politics in the academic institutions earned the reputation of notoriety, serving the dictatorial aspirations of mainstream political parties.

This environment has undermined institutional autonomy, discipline, and integrity. I hope that Dhaka University, under the leadership of the new Vice-Chancellor Professor Niaz Ahmed Khan, who was also my teacher, will lead by example the abolition of party-based politics in all academic institutions.

Thuggery in the name of student politics

We must not forget the brutality that so-called student leaders of the mainstream political parties have waged against regular students. In October 2019, 21-year-old Abrar Fahad, a student at the Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology (BUET), was killed inside the university's student dormitory by a group of students belonging to Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL), the student wing of the Bangladesh Awami League. He was tortured inside the student dormitory for several hours before he died from internal injuries. Abrar's life was cut short because of his criticism on Facebook against the previous government's deals with India.

The brutality against Abrar is not the first of the hallmarks of terrorism and violence that the present brand of student politics has unleashed in academic institutions. This has been the culture inside public universities since the 1990s.

The private universities have for the longest time strictly prevented activities of mainstream political parties in their institutions. However, in the last couple of years, student committees representing the BCL have been formed in some of these universities as well. Teachers have resorted to self-censorship in academic discussions about political periods and actions due to fear of reprisals. Most recently, general students have been attacked by BCL members at some of these universities for participating in protests against discrimination. A teacher at a private university shared with me her frustration about how the BCL leaders enjoyed preferential treatment inside the campus, which undermined institutional integrity.

The brutality against Abrar Fahad is not the first of the hallmarks of terrorism and violence that the present brand of student politics has unleashed in academic institutions.

Another teacher at a public university recently shared with me her fears about the repression being carried out against teachers, who are being forced to resign by students due to their political affiliation with the previous ruling Awami League party.

Universities are also grappled by a wave of ultra conservative demands of some student bodies that have time and again risen to breach the privacy and freedom of others. This includes denying religious freedom and dictating how female teachers and students should carry themselves. Bangladesh is only free from oppression and discrimination when the minority in the country can truly enjoy the same freedom as the majority.

Institutions must promote civil and political rights

Student politics have played significant role globally at shaping discourses and ushering in social and political changes, whether it was the civil rights movement in the US in the 1950s and 60s that prohibited racial discrimination in voting, education and employment, the 1952 Language Movement to recognise Bangla as the state language in East Pakistan, the Fridays for Future movement initiated by Greta Thunberg in 2018 against human-induced effects on climate, or the most recent student-led anti-discrimination movement that resulted in the fall of a tyrannical rule in Bangladesh.

The civil and political rights are a set of internationally recognised human rights that have paved the way for people to come together and organise for genuine causes in public interest. Students and the youth have led by example many of these movements for political change.

The right to freedom of expression, assembly, and association is fluid and entitled to everyone under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights as well as the Constitution of Bangladesh. They do not draw any distinction between race, age, gender, religion, ethnicity, economic, social, or political values.

This must not be confused with the thuggery that student wings of the mainstream political parties have brandished across academic institutions. To advance the political agenda of the parties in power, they have suppressed intellectual debates, academic and fundamental freedoms in institutions. This cannot be allowed to continue.

Institutional integrity critical for reform

A young teacher at Dhaka University, whom I spoke to recently, shared that she joined the university at a time when everyone endorsed the blue panel to be in the good books of the administration. The blue panel is the platform of teachers belonging to the Awami League camp. There is also a pink panel composed of left-leaning teachers and a white panel comprising supporters of the right-wing Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP) and Jamaat-e-Islami. The panel that belongs to the party in government traditionally decides the recruitment and promotions in the university. Political orientation of candidates predominates merit and performance.

Prof Niaz Ahmed Khan is an expert in monitoring and evaluation. It is important that the existing political nexus of students, teachers and political parties do not determine the fate of teachers and functions of academic institutions. Instead, transparent and accountable systems should be in place to determine the recruitment and promotions of academics.

The university, as a matter of priority, should abandon all party-based politics through a policy and define the scope of student politics that strictly upholds the right to practice academic, intellectual, civil, political, social, cultural and religious freedom, and diversity.

The necessity for substantive police reform

Muhammad Nurul Huda
is former IGP of Bangladesh Police.

MUHAMMAD NURUL HUDA

For police reform to be substantive, the first order of business should be the enactment of a new Police Act to replace the present archaic legislation enacted in 1861. The act is weak in almost all the parameters needed to govern democratic police legislation.

The act makes it easier for others to abuse and misuse the police organisation because it gives the government the authority to exercise superintendence over the police, without defining the word superintendence or prescribing some guidelines to ensure that the use of power will be legitimate. It also does not establish any institutional and other arrangements to insulate the police from undesirable and illegitimate outside control, pressures and influences.

Besides, this law does not necessitate outlining objectives and performance standards, nor does it set up independent mechanisms to monitor and inspect police performance. The law is antiquated in its charter of duties, which is narrow and limited, and does not mandate the police to function as a professional and service-oriented organisation.

Another criticism is its dissonance with the requirements of democratic policing, which requires a police force to be publicly accountable and subject to the rule of law, rather than the whims of the party in power. In democratic policing, the force can intervene in the lives of citizens only under limited and controlled circumstances.

The principal characteristics of police organisation produced by the Police Act 1861 are: (i) preservation of status quo; and (ii) maintenance of order and avoidance of breach of peace. The law overemphasises the constabulary functions of the police as against the professional aspect of crime control. Except in the preamble, the act does not mention crime control. In fact, the duties of a police officer laid down in the law include obeying and executing all orders and warrants lawfully issued to him by any competent authority; collecting and communicating intelligence affecting the public peace; preventing the commission of offences and public nuisances; and detecting and bringing offenders to justice.

The duties also require police to apprehend all persons to whom he is legally authorised to apprehend; take charge of unclaimed property and furnish an inventory thereof to the district magistrate; keep order on the public roads and in the public streets, thoroughfares, and ghats and landing places and on all other places of public resort; and prevent obstructions on occasions of assemblies and processions on the public streets.

The principal objective was to administer a static, immobile and backward rural society living in villages and small towns. It envisages the exercise of authority without local accountability. It presupposes a society without any constitution, basic and fundamental rights, organised public opinion, mass media that projects and agitates public interest.

Police accountability is a crucial issue today. The advanced coercive, scientific, and technical tools available to police necessitate stricter accountability measures. The current system is not only ineffective but also lacks public trust. Therefore, it is essential to replace it with statutory bodies like the Independent Office for Police Conduct (IOPC) in England and Wales or the National Public Safety Commission in Japan. The IOPC is composed of civil society members, who investigate serious complaints against the police. Meanwhile, the commission in Japan ensures that police operations remain free from political influence. These apolitical commissions oversee police administration to protect it from daily political pressures both at national and prefectural levels.

Corruption arises from a combination of interconnected issues, such as inadequate salaries for police officers, extensive discretionary powers, outdated performance evaluation systems, substandard working conditions, ineffective internal oversight by superiors, and extremely weak external accountability mechanisms, including those through the judiciary, media, and parliament. If police officers feared job loss, they would have fewer reasons to engage in corruption. However, accepting bribes becomes a rational decision if the risk of losing their job is minimal compared to the financial gains from corruption.

Ensuring gender-sensitive policing is a critical element of ongoing police reform efforts in South Asia. Programmes and strategies aimed at changing police attitudes towards women involve the proactive induction of substantially large proportions of women into police forces of the region. A gender-sensitive training strategy for police personnel on how to handle the growing number of cases of domestic violence, harassment at workplaces and sexual assaults is also integral to the police reform agenda.

The three areas that need urgent attention if police were to be credibly transformed into a public-friendly, service-delivery organisation are corruption, inefficiency, and misbehaviour with the public. Policies and strategies seeking to reduce corruption in the police is needed although enhancing police efficiency through true professionalism and transforming public-frightening police into a public-friendly outfit have not been very successful in South Asia.

Any police reform strategy will have to consider several other key variables such as the structure of the government, the role of the judiciary, and political parties in administrative affairs of the country. The question is one of mandate of the police force and how serious the attempt to shift the basis of legitimacy of the police from an adversarial to a consensus or a community model is.

For too long the basic functioning of police has remained unchanged. Improving the quality of law enforcement needs to be a permanent and integral part of the national agenda, regardless of which party is in power.

Transitions, coins, and lenses

KNOT SO TRUE

Dr Rubana Huq
is vice-chancellor of Asian University for Women.

RUBANA HUQ

I am glad I left my glasses at home today. For many years, I thought that I would not be able to live without them. Today, after almost 20 years, I am reading and writing without having to resort to my lenses. True, my vision is blurred; true I cannot read and write without comfort. But I do know that I now can exist without my lenses.

Working through a lens is probably good for our sight, but learning to survive without them is probably more rewarding for the spirit. So, point is, who do I love more? My soul or my sight?

I would rather be blind than soulless.

Hence the rant below....

Filter less and lens free transitions are often uncomfortable but necessary. Transitions also give many constituencies the opportunity to speculate, confuse and divert the conversation considering that any transition is a grey area that does not come without a blur.

Once upon a time, the state was super powerful. There was a time when the developing world operated through interventionist state model. If there were successful economic transformation, state took the credit as state was then capable of dominating social groups, including business. Gradually, in place of the states, significant trends of privileging the private sector were noticed to be on the rise along with a substantial increase in business power resulting in ultra-invigorated business associations.

When private sector became powerful in Bangladesh, the morals of the business sector came crashing down like a house of cards. The formula was easy. Being seen with "power" was important. A picture was necessary. A Facebook post was essential. Getting in and out of the "office" of power mattered the most. Very quickly, instead of addressing issues related to business, the prime consideration was always to flaunt the proximity to power.

Globally, businesses yielding significant influence in governments is not unusual. In the US alone, according to Center for Responsive Politics, businesses donated over $7 billion to candidates and committees in the 2022 election. University of Chicago published a study in 2023 where the school spotted that companies with political ties experienced a 15 percent average decline in stock prices as a result of corruption scandal. Ethical lapses surfaced and the companies lost confidence. American consumers, too, have become sceptical about investing in companies that compromise public interest and serve the interests of the politicians and donors.

In Bangladesh, we have gone the other way. When private sector became powerful in Bangladesh, the morals of the business sector came crashing down like a house of cards. The formula was easy. Being seen with "power" was important. A picture was necessary. A Facebook post was essential. Getting in and out of the "office" of power mattered the most. Very quickly, instead of addressing issues related to business, the prime consideration was always to flaunt the proximity to power.

In association elections, the positioning of political leaders on the stage became critical for victory. In most cases, the faces of the business leaders became the faces of the government. Most leaders after having served in the business associations moved to join the parliament. Parliament started to look like a tiered corporate sector, where wealth would be produced on a daily basis. One word from the leader of the parliament would rescue a sinking ship; one glance or a smile would salvage any ruin.

Thus, we rolled on. For years, faces popped up in the royal court to sing praises. For years, the court jesters routinely changed masks to adapt to the needs of the times and the business leaders shamelessly changed faces.

Elections in multiple business associations in the past have been controlled by the centre of power. During most of the association elections, rigging has been a standard practice. One association doesn't even have an accurate voter list. Non-manufacturers are voters. In spite of many attempts, this hasn't changed as it gives the contenders a chance to use the "sick" factory votes and reward them in one way or another. Instead of focusing on what's really needed for the sector, instead of policy directives, what has gagged the sector's growth is lack of focus on key areas and excessive stress on political alignment. Pictures with political leaders and advertisements on newspapers have been the focal point of any trade discourse.

"Onar shathey link bhalo", "onake PM pochonodo koren na"... were the only discussions that were mostly heard. Presidents have also been seen falling on their knees on airplanes and addressing the ex-PM for reducing source tax. Yours truly bears witness to one of those occasions.

In all honesty, the business associations have been subjected to an endless game of masquerade where garlands, pictures and faces changed with the direction of the political wind. The fact that this country is not ready for LDC graduation, the fact that sector diversification is needed, the fact that in terms of economic complexity, Bangladesh is lagging behind—these issues have never made it to the trade headlines. To be seen with the "centre" had always been the priority. To be travelling with the centre was key. To be delivering eulogies was essential. And...this has gone on...

Doing business while in politics is a risky proposition. While potential benefits exist, the potential for reputational damage, loss of trust, and legal challenges are significant. For most, the risks likely outweigh the rewards. Let's remind ourselves that we ought to weigh the potential benefits and drawbacks carefully before embarking on this path. Let us also not forget that there are demands on transparency and ethical conduct from both business leaders and politicians. Let us also not forget that prioritising good governance and acting in the public interest both MUST be key while navigating this demanding intersection.

What can we do to separate business from politics? Maybe build a few goals and acknowledge that "transparency" matters, that there must be an ethical compass and that there needs to be a clear wall between business and political activities. Maybe have independent watchdogs to ensure all of the above?

And yes, the road where we stand today is one of uncertainty. But let there not be a single coin to mar our journey. A democracy needs a full field filled with players ready to jump into a fair game. The game need not be dominated by a toss of a coin, where both sides look the same, and come with the same baggage and consequences. Let the change that's sweeping the country today not be a sole discourse on power, rather on the rewarding journey of self-correction.

We must be bold with health sector reforms

Ahmed Mushtaque Raza Chowdhury
is convener at Bangladesh Health Watch, and professor of population and family health at Columbia University, New York.

AHMED MUSHTAQUE RAZA CHOWDHURY

The health sector holds an important place in a nation's development. The past few decades have witnessed some remarkable strides in Bangladesh's health sector. However, this has largely stalled since 2010. Between 1990 and 2010, Bangladesh reduced its maternal mortality ratio from 600 per 100,000 live births to 194, an astonishing achievement. After almost a decade, however, there has been little improvement. Such stagnation was similarly observed in several other indicators of a nation's development.

It is said that we harvested the "low-hanging fruits" well. Bangladesh is committed to reducing the maternal mortality ratio to 70 by 2030, but given the current situation, this seems like an unachievable target. To attain progress, we need to focus on the more difficult, "high-hanging fruits." Civil society activists and health experts repeatedly highlighted this challenge to the previous government, but sadly, serious efforts were not made. Instead, a sense of complacency prevailed. The result was that any idea suggesting reform faced resistance.

The anti-discrimination movement has inspired the nation and sparked hope among the masses. It has given us a chance to rethink our future. In the health sector, we now have an opportunity for comprehensive reform. If we want to move forward in line with the times, we must be ready to tackle some difficult tasks.

We know, for instance, that good governance is a major issue for development in Bangladesh. Poor governance leads to many problems, and the health sector is no exception. The absence of doctors in health centres is a perennial issue. The corruption that surfaced during the Covid pandemic is still fresh in our memory. We know these issues arise due to the lack of accountability and poor management. The private healthcare sector has become a behemoth without any control whatsoever, harbouring severe inequalities. In 1982, an ordinance was passed giving special priority to the private sector, but it has not been updated since. There is no clear regulatory provisions to control them, leading them to get away with unethical and illegal practices. Despite the presence of the Bangladesh Medical and Dental Council which was established decades ago to monitor the professional behaviour of doctors, many still engage in unethical practices without facing any consequences.

Another significant drawback in our healthcare system is poor investment. Currently, the government's spendings on healthcare is one of the lowest globally: only 0.7 percent of the GDP. With such meagre investment, it is impossible to imagine modern healthcare. We have seen to our dismay that two of the important pillars of human development, health and education, were among the lowest priorities for the previous government. Our neighbour Sri Lanka, which is far ahead of us in most indicators, spends nearly four times more on health than we do in Bangladesh. Even the small funding that the health sector gets is not fully utilised, with the utilisation rates remaining below 80 percent. One of the main reasons for this is the lack of adequate capacity in the ministry of health, whose inefficiency in drafting a proper budget, planning, and utilising funds is very well-known. The lack of vision is yet another reason. A "poverty of vision" seems to have gripped the ministry. If we want to emerge as a prosperous nation, our health planners must have a clear vision befitting the health system of a developing country, and our budgets should be framed accordingly.

One of the benchmarks for countries that have made significant progress in health is their investment in primary healthcare. Bangladesh's primary healthcare system extends from upazilas to unions and community clinics. Ignoring the primary level and focusing on urban-based big hospitals is an action equivalent to nurturing social inequality. Increased investment in primary healthcare with an effective referral system would significantly reduce the pressure on urban hospitals.

Ignoring the primary level and focusing on urban-based big hospitals is an action equivalent to nurturing social inequality. Increased investment in primary healthcare with an effective referral system would significantly reduce the pressure on urban hospitals.

In addition, another significant issue plaguing Bangladesh's healthcare system is its human resources. Doctors, nurses, and midwives are in severely short supply. To address this crisis, the previous governments licensed new institutions in both the public and private sectors which contributed in alleviating the crisis to some extent. However, there is no effective mechanism in place to ensure the quality of these institutions. Similarly, we need to focus on research. Recently, Bangladesh Health Watch published an extensive research-based book documenting Bangladesh's first 50 years, which shows how Bangladesh has surpassed its neighbours in various health indicators. One of the findings revealed that in recent years, Pakistan has been able to overtake Bangladesh in health research.

The previous government had expressed its commitment to achieve Universal Health Coverage (UHC). Unfortunately, it never felt the need to explain in detail how this would be done or where the additional funds would come from.

The recent uprising is a massive achievement, with tremendous sacrifices made by students and common citizens. We know that every crisis also presents an opportunity. After World War II, the European countries built their health systems on the ruins of war, ensuring free healthcare for all citizens. In the 1990s, after a horrific genocide, Rwanda launched its UHC programme. As I see it, the student revolution has similarly given us a golden opportunity to overhaul our broken health system. Experts have agreed on what needs to be done. This can be broadly divided into five actions: i) establish a high-powered permanent national health commission to create and monitor a roadmap for implementing UHC nationwide; ii) establish a national health security office to ensure accountability in the health system by separating the ministry of health's roles as a "purchaser" and "provider"; iii) ensure good governance and proper management; iv) increase healthcare investment to two percent of GDP, with increased priority for primary healthcare; and v) enhance the quality, efficiency, and oversight of institutions involved in professional health education and research.

I believe that if we follow this path, we will confidently move towards achieving our national goals. While we have made significant achievements, complacency cannot be allowed and must be kept at bay. To bring about a real and lasting change, there is no alternative to reform. This is something the student leaders have repeatedly emphasised. The interim government must take a bold stance and move towards reforms in the health sector that lead to the public being served.

Process on to bring back laundered money

Says chief adviser's office

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The interim government has started the process to bring back the money laundered abroad and acquire local assets of the people who embezzled money from banks.

The information was shared by the office of the chief adviser of the interim government through a press release issued yesterday.

Bangladesh Bank's financial intelligence unit, criminal investigation department of police, and anti-corruption commission have started recovering the embezzled and laundered money, according to the press release.

The government has already contacted various foreign organisations seeking their assistance regarding the repatriation of the money.

"Some unscrupulous businessmen and other influential persons have in recent years embezzled huge sums of money anonymously and laundered it abroad through rampant corruption and fraud in the banking sector," it said.

The government is also working to determine the exact amount of money and assets laundered and embezzled from the banking sector, it also said, adding that the amount of embezzled money is believed to be over Tk 1 lakh crore.

It said reforms are already underway in banks and financial institutions associated with such corruption.

Besides, initiatives have been taken and the boards of Islami Bank, Social Islami Bank, National Bank, United Commercial Bank, Global Islami Bank, and Union Bank have been reconstituted.

It said reforms will also be initiated in the remaining banks and financial institutions.

The actual information of the embezzled money will be collected through the new management authority and the audit process will start to determine the actual amount of money embezzled from the banks.

Hasina made accused in 4 more cases

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina has been sued in four more cases over the killings of three people and the attempted murder of another person during the student-led mass uprising.

Three of the cases were filed with Dhaka courts yesterday while another murder case was filed in Bogura two days ago.

Several former ministers, including Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader, Asaduzzaman Khan, top police officers and at least three journalists, were among the accused.

With these, Hasina is now facing 75 cases related to the protests, including 63 on murder charges, seven on allegations of crimes against humanity and genocide, three on charges of abduction, and two for other charges.

Hasina and 30 others were sued over the death of grocery shop owner Mizanur Rahman during the quota reform movement in the capital's Banasree on July 19. His father Kamal Hossain filed the murder case with the court of Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate Md Tofazzal Hossain who movement for the restoration of democracy, Fakhrul said that elections are necessary for establishing democracy. "That's why we talk about elections; it is our right."

Fakhrul said they should not forget the depoliticisation efforts of the 1/11 regime. "During that time, there were attempts to abolish and eliminate our party. We cannot forget those things."

In response to a question about whether he sees any signs of 1/11 repeating, he said, "No, I do not see such signs. ... Some faces scare us. You have seen it too. We haven't seen them before... suddenly they're coming to the front page of the media... you (media) are propagating their theories and statements. I don't want to name anyone. I think this is not good for a healthy democratic process.

He, however, said BNP is willing to accept a reasonable time and offer full cooperation to the interim government. "We'll continue to do so as long as we believe the government is on the right track."

When asked to explain a logical time for the interim government, the BNP leader stated that it was a matter of discussion.

When his attention was drawn to the lifting of the ban on Jamaat-e-Islami, Fakhrul said, "We're not in favour of banning any political party, regardless of which party it is."

He said that the right to form organisations, which the constitution guarantees for every citizen, should be upheld.

However, the BNP leader said a party which doesn't believe in the independence of Bangladesh should not be supported.

However, the BNP leader said a party which doesn't believe in the independence of Bangladesh should not be supported.

Noting that many cases are now being filed randomly, Fakhrul requested the law enforcement agencies to conduct primary verification first before accepting these.

"I think this practice needs to be stopped completely. The way cases are being lodged will not consolidate this mass upsurge," he said, urging his party leaders and activists not to file any case that lack merit.

About the minority issue, Fakhrul said many campaigns are being carried out from abroad, especially from India, in a bid to undermine the mass upsurge in Bangladesh. "They want to make some political issues as communal ones, which is unacceptable," he said.

He also said the campaigns are being conducted targeting BNP, which is quite unfair.

"We're observing that some criminals in certain areas are indulging in offences such as occupying and establishing control, and efforts are being made to shift the blame onto the BNP. We would like to make it clear our leaders, activists are not involved in criminal activities," he said.

The BNP leader expressed surprise that leading and renowned newspapers are also reporting news involving the BNP in criminal acts. "I don't think it's justified. One or two individuals may commit misdeeds personally... ."

TIB proposes a raft of reforms

The same person should not hold the positions of the prime minister (head of government), the chief of a political party and the leader of parliament simultaneously.

TIB's recommendations for necessary reforms in the state structure to prevent corruption, and establish democracy, good governance and integrity are categorised into two groups: immediate and strategic areas.

The immediate priorities include ensuring discipline, public safety and administrative normalcy; conducting UN-led investigations into past human rights violations; ensuring proper legal procedures such that the judicial process remains unquestionable; and restoring normal economic activities.

A task force must be formed comprising the Anti-Corruption Commission, the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU), the National Board of Revenue (NBR), the Criminal Investigation Department (CID) and the Attorney General's Office to set an exemplary standard of effective accountability for high-level corruption and money laundering.

TIB demanded revealing the true picture of the banking sector following an independent and neutral investigation, and the formation of an "independent bank commission" with skilled specialists for the revival of the banking sector.

Strategic reforms include the introduction of proportional representation in the parliamentary system to ensure the true reflection of the people's verdict in the national parliament.

Additionally, an election-time interim government system should be introduced to ensure free, fair, neutral, and participatory parliamentary polls.

The Speaker should be free from party influence, avoid conflicts of interest and act as the guardian of parliament. They must conduct all parliamentary activities impartially.

The deputy speaker should be elected from the opposition in parliament.

In the absence of both the Speaker and the deputy speaker, members of the opposition parties included in the presidium should be allowed to perform the duties of the Speaker.

TIB also recommended amending Article 70 of the constitution to allow MPs the freedom to criticise their party and vote against it on different matters, including legislation, except for no-confidence motions and the budget.

Among the recommendations for democratic practices, TIB emphasised the need to abolish the monopoly and dynastic rule of a party chief and to determine party leadership through fair elections at all levels.

In the category of the rule of law and human rights, TIB called for immediate separation of the judiciary and specific policies and laws in consultation with the Supreme Court for the appointment of judges to the High Court.

IMMEDIATE PRIORITIES

- Same person cannot be PM, party chief and leader of parliament at once
- Election-time interim government system
- Speaker to be free from party influence
- Deputy Speaker should be elected from the opposition in parliament
- MPs should be allowed the freedom to criticise their party

TIB also recommended repealing the 16th amendment to the constitution, which gave power to the Jatiya Sangsad to remove judges if allegations of incapability or misconduct against them are proved.

The other recommendations include ensuring accountability and exemplary punishment for multidimensional and unprecedented human rights violations through nationally and internationally acceptable, impartial and independent investigations.

The National Human Rights Commission must be granted the jurisdiction and capacity to investigate all allegations of human rights violations such as extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances by security forces and law enforcement agencies, and to repeal all laws that violate human rights, including the Special Powers Act.

To prevent irregularities, corruption and money laundering, TIB called for ensuring the independence and capacity of the ACC and amending the Civil Service Act of 2018, the Money Laundering Prevention Act of 2012 and the Income Tax Act of 2023.

The agencies responsible for curbing and preventing corruption such as the ACC, the BFIU, the NBR, the Office of the Comptroller and Auditor General, the Attorney General's Office, the CID and other institutions concerned must develop professional skills free from party influence.

TIB recommended that no political appointments be made to institutions such as the Election Commission, ACC, Information Commission, NHRC, Office of the Comptroller and Auditor General and Public Service Commission.

An independent working environment must be ensured in these institutions.

The Official Secrecy Act of 1923 and the Cyber Security Act of 2023 must be repealed and measures must be put in place to ensure personal information protection.

Additionally, TIB called for the necessary amendments to the constitution and relevant laws to make the local government system independent, strengthened and effective.

In the electricity, energy, and environment category, TIB proposed a short-, medium-, and long-term time-bound plan to gradually phase out the use of fossil fuels and promote renewable energy.

Supportive policies must be created to increase local and international investment in the renewable energy sector.

Moreover, TIB demanded the abolishment of the "Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply (Special Provisions) Act 2010", the removal of capacity charges and the cancellation of all ongoing development projects that are harmful to the environment and biodiversity.

"It is not possible to say how long it will take for the interim government to implement the recommendations made today [yesterday]. That decision lies with them. This government should be given the time it needs to meet the expectations of the people," Iftekharuzzaman said.

The government has been in office for only 20 days and it would not be fair to evaluate them so soon.

"They must fulfil the aspirations of the masses, even as they work amid the ruins," he added.

Govt lifts ban on Jamaat, Shibir

In yesterday's gazette notification, the home ministry said the government has cancelled the previous circular that banned Jamaat, Shibir and its front organisations as there is no specific evidence on their involvement in terrorist activities, and the government believes that these organisations are not involved in terrorist activities.

The decision will come into effect immediately, the notification said.

'AL BANNED JAMAAT TO CONTINUE REPRESSION'

Law Adviser Asif Nazrul yesterday said the AL did not ban Jamaat from its policy position, rather this was done to term the mass uprising "terrorist activity".

Speaking to reporters at his office at the Secretariat, he said some sections of the society had been demanding ban on Jamaat for many years, but the AL did not do it during its 15-year rule.

"They [Awami League] did it when the student movement was going on. They termed the mass uprising an act of the Jamaat-BNP terrorists and tried to brutally suppress the movement. You have got proof of this," Asif said.

The adviser said the interim government cannot be a part of the AL's narrative that the mass uprising spearheaded by students was a terrorist act.

In August 2013, the High Court declared Jamaat's registration illegal following a writ petition filed in 2009 by Bangladesh Tariqat Federation Secretary General Rezaul Haque Chandpuri and 24 others.

Jamaat was first banned in independent Bangladesh in 1972 over their anti-liberation role under a new constitutional provision that banned politics based on religion.

The ban, however, was lifted three years later when BNP founder Ziaur Rahman came to power and amended the constitution through martial law proclamation.

JAMAAT LIKELY TO MOVE SC

Jamaat is likely to file an application to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court on Sunday seeking restoration of its appeal challenging a High Court verdict that scrapped its registration with the Election Commission as a political party, Mohammad Shishir Manir, a counsel for Jamaat, told The Daily Star yesterday.

On November 19 last year, a five-member bench of the Appellate Division, headed by then chief justice Obaidul Hassan, dismissed Jamaat's appeal for "default" as its counsels did not appear before the court that day.

Jamaat had filed the appeal against the HC verdict that on August 1, 2013, scrapped its registration.

Govt hunts for $8b from IMF, other lenders

The reserves stood at $20.5 billion on August 21 in line with the IMF's BPM-6 after the new government headed by Nobel laureate Professor Muhammad Yunus had taken charge earlier this month following the downfall of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's government through a student-led mass uprising.

Inflation remained high last month, with the consumer price index rising by 1.94 basis points to 11.66 percent from the previous month. Food inflation crossed 14 percent in July for the first time in 13 years.

When Hasina fled the country, the Awami League government left $156 billion in local and foreign loans for the country to carry. These included $88 billion from domestic sources and the remaining $68.33 billion was external debt.

The country is also struggling to deal with a fragile banking sector hit by scams and defaults caused by people with direct or indirect links to the previous government.

The interim government has taken some quick and drastic measures to tackle the situation surrounding finances while bringing reforms to all the sectors as promised by Yunus.

Policy rates against both local and foreign currencies have been increased, while strict measures have been taken for the banking sector which are longtime suggestions from the development partners for providing budget support.

Finance ministry officials said because of the reform measures taken by the interim government, development patterners are ready to provide more support.

The long, dark past of UCB

industry, Akhtaruzzaman, then the chairman of UCB, was arrested in the case but he fled the country after securing bail. He came back to Bangladesh in 1996 when the AL returned to power after 21 years in the political wilderness.

In 1999, members of this influential family along with armed men stormed the bank's headquarters where a board meeting was underway. The directors were abused verbally, assaulted and forced to sign their resignations. Bangladesh Bank then dissolved the entire board. Akhtaruzzaman returned to the bank's board of directors in 2010, a year after the AL was voted to power for the second time.

People familiar with those incidents say the takeover at gunpoint was one of the darkest chapters in Bangladesh's banking industry. It all started in 1991 after Bangladesh Bank removed Akhtaruzzaman from UCB board because of his failure to repay Tk 250 crore in loans that he took in favour of his own company.

Humayun Zahir, a director of the bank, protested when Akhtaruzzaman was reluctant to repay the loan despite being the chairman of the board. This is one of the oldest instances of defaulted loans in Bangladesh, said Sharif Zahir, son of Humayun Zahir.

"When my father protested and asked Babu [Akhtaruzzaman Chowdhury] to return the loan, he targeted my father," said Sharif, currently the managing director of Ananta, a leading garment exporter and business group.

Sharif alleged that the bank was taken over by Akhtaruzzaman along with his nephew and S Alam Group owner Mohammed Saiful Alam, who is also known for banking scandals on his own right.

Sharif was a large shareholder of the bank in 1993, 1995, 2008, 2009, 2010 and 2018, he said without mentioning the exact amount of his family shares with the bank. He also served UCB as the vice-chairman between 2013 and 2015.

However, in 2018, the first-generation private bank was taken over by force again, this time by Saifuzzaman, Sharif said.

The former land minister's family lost its grip on UCB on Tuesday as BB dissolved the lender's 18-member board.

The dissolved board was heavily dominated by Saifuzzaman's family members, including his sister Roxana Zaman Chaudhury and relatives Anisuzzaman Chowdhury and Asifuzzaman Chowdhury.

Saifuzzaman's wife, Rukhmila Zaman, had been serving as chairman of the bank until August 16, when the bank reconstituted the board on its own accord in an attempt to keep a portion of Saifuzzaman's family onboard, industry insiders say.

Sharif, who is now staying abroad, said he is coming back to Bangladesh in a day or two and plans to hold a meeting with the newly appointed directors to form a board to run the bank.

UCB was established in 1984 mainly by a group of Chattogram-based businesspersons, and was one of the high performing banks in Bangladesh.

Things started to change after the takeover by Saifuzzaman's family, as loan scandals became a norm rather than an exception.

The bank's defaulted loans rose to Tk 2,500 crore in 2023 from Tk 1,792 crore in 2016, although industry insiders say the actual figure is much higher.

In these seven years, the amount of written off loans more than doubled to Tk 2,471 crore from Tk 1,069 crore.

Meanwhile in the UK, Saifuzzaman acquired at least 260 properties, paying at least 134.76 million British pounds or Tk 1,888 crore, according to The Daily Star's calculation based on company filings that are publicly available on UK government websites.

The three-time AL lawmaker also has at least 537 mortgages against properties in the UK, a majority of which are in London.

The Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit found that Saifuzzaman and Rukhmila have also amassed huge fortunes in the US and Dubai.

A group of shareholders of the bank recently sent a letter to the central bank, alleging that although Rukhmila was the chairperson of the bank, it was Saifuzzaman who pulled the strings behind it all.

'Hope this championship inspires the nation to unite'

I would like to dedicate this trophy and championship to the heroes who sacrificed their lives for a new Bangladesh. We want to dedicate this trophy to the martyrs of July and August, as well as to the flood-affected people of the country, because we played for them to win the trophy. I think they will be happy with this triumph.

Head coach Maruful Haque after a 4-1 victory over hosts Nepal at the ANFA complex in Lalitpur saw Bangladesh clinch their maiden trophy in the regional youth championship in their sixth attempt.

SPORTS REPORTER

When Bangladesh coach Maruful Haque announced before departing for Nepal that his team would not only play in the final but also lift the SAFF U-20 Championship trophy, there was little hope of clinching the elusive title, especially given only a two-week preparation period.

The youth footballers had been idle for the past two months since the completion of the Bangladesh Premier League in May. However, the UEFA A-licenced coach made incredible strides in a short time, preparing the players to be match-fit.

Eventually, proving why Maruful is regarded as the best local coach in the country, the boys in red and green overcame three-time champions India in the penultimate hurdle and two-time champions Nepal in yesterday's final.

Ecstasy was in abundance among the Bangladesh players and coaching staff following a 4-1 victory at the ANFA Complex in Lalitpur, but they did not forget the heroes who died in the anti-discrimination student-led movement during July-August, as well as the flood victims of late, and dedicated the victory to them.

"I would like to dedicate this trophy to the heroes who sacrificed their lives for a new Bangladesh. We also faced severe flooding, and many people and families are suffering from a lack of food and drinking water. Our new government is working to rebond the nation, and I hope this championship will inspire all Bangladeshis to unite and support the country's reform," said coach Maruful at the post-match conference, adding that his players executed the style of play he wanted from the start of the all-important match.

Working as a unit with utmost determination were the promising bunch, comprising Mirajul Islam, Rabby Hossain Rahul, Mohammad Asif, Mehedi Hasan Srabon, Piash Ahmed Nova, Asadul Mollah, Ashraful Haque, Shakil Ahmed Topu, and others, who did not let the initial pressure from Nepal derail them from their ultimate objective.

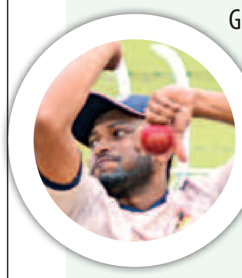
Mirajul – the tournament's top scorer, with four goals, and its most valuable player – said, "To tell the truth, I never thought I would be the top scorer; it was beyond my expectations. My goal was to advance Bangladesh."

Asif, who was named the best goalkeeper of the tournament, said, "We had never been champions from U-17 to U-20, and we were deeply disappointed after being runners-up in 2022. This time, we wanted to leave the pitch with smiles instead of tears. I can't express my excitement at becoming champions."

Rahul, who also scored one of the four goals in the final, said, "It is impossible to fully express my feelings, and I think this is the biggest achievement of my footballing career. I shared with my teammates that Nepal would be morally high after beating us in the group stage, but we aimed to take advantage of that."

SHORT CORNER

'Shakib earned many things for himself but not for nation'



Dr Asif Nazrul, the adviser for Law, Justice, and Parliamentary Affairs to the Interim Government, said that Bangladesh cricketer Shakib Al Hasan has not 'earned anything for the nation' but hoped that the all-rounder would not be arrested when he returns to Bangladesh over a murder case filed against him. Comparing Shakib's case with that of former national team goalkeeper and BNP leader Aminul Haque, who was denied bail time and again during the Awami League regime, Nazrul said: "Shakib has earned many things for himself but not for the nation while Aminul had won for Bangladesh."

Malan retires from international cricket

Dawid Malan retired from international cricket on Wednesday, with the batter saying his England career "has not been easy". Malan signed a 12-month central contract in October and was England's leading run-scorer in their woeful 50-over World Cup title defence in India in the weeks that followed.

Bangladesh Women's 'A' team to tour Sri Lanka in September

Bangladesh Women's cricket 'A' team will tour Sri Lanka for seven white-ball matches in September, a press release by Sri Lanka Cricket confirmed on Wednesday. Bangladesh will arrive in Sri Lanka on September 5 and play two 50-over matches followed by a five-match T20 series.

Tigers shouldn't overthink about facing Abrar, experts suggest

SAMSUL AREFIN KHAN

Bangladesh should keep their focus on getting a positive result from the series-deciding second Test against Pakistan and play according to their strength rather than concentrating on the opposition squad, cricket experts opined on Wednesday.

The Tigers humiliated Pakistan in the opening Test with a 10-wicket win, forcing the hosts to make several changes for the second Test squad.

Pakistan, who went into the first match in Rawalpindi with four seamers and no frontline spinner in the playing XI, brought in in-form leg-spinner Abrar Ahmed alongside uncapped all-rounder Kamran Ghulam and pacer Aamir Jamal for the second Test.

Abrar's inclusion looked obvious since the two Bangladesh spinners – Shakib Al Hasan and Mehedi Hasan Miraz – picked up seven wickets to guide the tourists to a historic victory.

The 25-year-old Abrar, who made a brilliant start to his Test career by taking 38 wickets in six Tests, had a successful outing against Bangladesh 'A' during a recent four-day contest, finishing with figures of 4-103. Pakistan will surely want a similar performance from him in the crucial second Test.

"Whoever is included or not, we have to think about getting a positive result from the match. Previously, we won the first Tests against teams like Australia and New Zealand but in the second Tests, we were unable to earn even a draw," local coach Wahidul Gani told the Daily Star yesterday.

"We have played well against Pakistan but our improvement will be noticed if we can earn at least a draw in the second match. They will definitely pick a spinner and probably Abrar is the best spinner for them at the moment.

"They will also definitely back their pacers but we have to play according to our strength. I think Bangladesh need to go into this match with the aim of winning," the veteran coach added.

In recent past, Bangladeshi batters weren't challenged by leggies in red-ball cricket and the likely presence of a leg-spinner could be a cause for concern for the visitors.

The last time Bangladesh faced a proper leggie was 22 Tests ago in 2021 when they toured Sri Lanka for a two-match Test series and they had to face Wanindu Hasaranga in the opening Test in Pallekele.

Bangladeshi batters handled Hasaranga exceptionally well in that contest as he remained wicketless despite bowling 45 overs in two innings and was eventually dropped for the second Test.

In recent times, Bangladesh only faced Chinaman spinners like Afghanistan's Zahir Khan (in 2023) and India's Kuldeep Yadav (in 2022) in red-ball cricket, with both finishing with good amount of success against Bangladeshi batters.

"Playing with a leg-spinner in Tests is very common for Pakistan. Leggies like Yasir Shah, Danish Kaneria played for them over the years," said coach Sohel Islam, who monitored some of the Test cricketers in Bangladesh Tigers camp before their departure for Pakistan.

"They made a wrong call by playing without a spinner in the first Test. Abrar was initially in the squad and was later dropped. Abrar bowls really well in red-ball cricket. We played leg-spinners in red-ball cricket before and also took preparation against them. Let's see how the batters deal with him this time," he concluded.

Alcaraz relishing 'intense' rivalry with Djokovic

REUTERS, New York

Carlos Alcaraz said he enjoys a good friendship with Novak Djokovic away from the court but the Spaniard also relishes the intense rivalry he has with the Serbian great as the pair move towards a possible final match-up at the US Open.

"Every time that we step on the court, we play really high (level) tennis," Alcaraz told reporters after his first-round win at the US Open on Tuesday.

"Every time that we face each other, it has been a really good and intense match."

A changing of the guard appeared complete earlier this year when the 21-year-old Alcaraz thrashed 24-time Grand Slam champion Djokovic in the Wimbledon final in July to defend his crown and capture his fourth major title. But fortunes can change quickly in tennis. Alcaraz was almost inconsolable after falling to Djokovic in the Olympic final at Roland Garros earlier this month, saying he felt that he had let down Spain. Djokovic described winning the Olympic gold medal as his "biggest sporting achievement".

"We have a really good friendship off the court," Alcaraz said. "We talk a lot in the lockers every time that we see each other around.

"Once we step on the court, there are no friends here on tour, but after that, after the court, I have a really good relationship with a lot of players, and one of them is Novak." With Djokovic seeded second and Alcaraz third, the pair could be on a collision course to meet in the final in New York.

The new UCL format explained

AFP, Paris

All eyes will be on Monaco today as the draw of the updated version of the UEFA Champions League for the 2024-25 season will take place at 10:00 pm.

The new format of the league will see 36 clubs feature in the competition proper, an increase from 32 under the old format.

There is an extra place for the fifth-best European league according to UEFA's ranking, which means France's Ligue 1 now has three automatic qualifiers.

In addition, there is an extra berth for each of the two leagues with the highest coefficient ranking from last season in UEFA competition, which this year are Germany and Italy.

The remaining extra slot goes to a national champion to emerge from the qualifying rounds, which will be completed this midweek.

Since 2003, the Champions League featured 32 clubs split into eight groups of four, with the top two from each section advancing to the last 16.

That has now changed radically, and from this season the 36 clubs will be pooled together in one league, in a so-called 'Swiss system' more commonly associated with chess.

Before, participating teams played six games in the group stage, facing each opponent home and away. Now clubs will each have eight games.

The 36 teams will be split into four seeded pots of nine. Every club will play two teams from each pot, one at home and one away.

This "raises the prospect for fans of seeing the top teams go head to head more often and earlier in the competition," UEFA say, a nod to the fact this format was introduced at a time when the spectre of a breakaway Super League hung over European football.

No team will come up against another club from the same domestic league, and every club can only face a maximum of two teams from any one country.

Whereas in past years the group stage ended in December, the expansion of the Champions League means the two extra matchdays will be staged in January.

The number of games is increasing from 96 in the old group stage, up to 144 in the new league phase.

The 36 clubs will be ranked together in the one league, with the top eight all progressing to the last 16 and the format of the competition from that point on remaining the same.

However, it will be seeded, taking into account positions in the league phase.

In addition, a play-off round will be introduced, with the teams finishing from 9th to 24th in the league phase going through to a two-legged knockout tie to decide the remaining spots in the last 16. These play-off ties will be seeded.

The bottom 12 teams in the league phase will be eliminated, with no access to the second-tier Europa League, as was the case in the past.

'No worry' over Mbappe's Liga form

REUTERS, Madrid

Real Madrid manager Carlo Ancelotti is not worried about Kylian Mbappe's start at the club after the France striker failed to score in his opening two league games. Mbappe, 25, joined the La Liga and Champions League winners as a free agent from Paris St Germain in June, bringing an end to a transfer saga that had rumbled on for years.

Despite making a promising start by scoring on his debut to help Real earn a 2-0 win over Europa League champions Atalanta in the UEFA Super Cup final two weeks ago, Mbappe has yet to find the net in two La Liga games with Real and struggled in a draw at Mallorca and in a dour home win against Real Valladolid.

"His last goal was on August 14th. It has only been two weeks since, that is no reason to worry. Neither we are not worried as a club, nor him," Ancelotti told a press conference on Wednesday, ahead of Thursday's La Liga match at Las Palmas. "He is very happy here, delighted, sure he wants to score in the next game. So does Vinicius, who has yet to score this season and I don't see him worried either. "(Mbappe) is progressing really well, I see him doing better every day, excited, motivated, training well. He is very humble. I think his adaptation is going really well."

Ancelotti said a slow start was to be expected after key midfielder Toni Kroos retired, while they are also trying to fit Mbappe into a new centre-forward role.

"Every year has its own challenge because there are changes in the structure of a team, the system that is implemented," Ancelotti said.

"Last year we also needed time at the start of the season, we needed a late goal to get a result in many games. It will take some time until we find our mojo and the best version of ourselves but it's a normal thing.

"I didn't ask Toni Kroos to be Aurelien Tchouameni last year, just as I won't ask Tchouameni to be Kroos. Each player has his own characteristics. The team has to adapt to the characteristics that Tchouameni has, which are very important for us."

With a game in hand, Real Madrid are fifth in the La Liga standings on four points, five behind leaders Barcelona.

GAZI TYRES FACTORY FIRE

Rescue op yet to begin

Families of 'missing' ones gather at site; experts unable to inspect risky building a day after fire doused

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Three days have passed since a massive fire broke out at Gazi Tyres factory in Narayanganj's Rupganj, but the fire service is yet to launch a rescue operation in the six-storey factory building.

A technical team of the Fire Service and Civil Defence went to the factory yesterday afternoon to check whether the structure was safe for conducting the operation. The team members did not enter the building as it was risky.

The team operated drones to look for victims trapped inside the building, but did not find anyone.

Officials said they will decide about the rescue operation today.

Hamidur Rahman, additional district magistrate of Naryanganj and also the chief of an investigation committee, told The Daily Star that they would bring experts and advanced equipment from the capital to carry out the rescue operation if the local fire service cannot do the job.

Hamidur said they were making a list of the people who were claimed to have been missing by their family members.

Campus politics should focus on education

Newly appointed DU VC Prof Niaz shares his views

SIRAJUL ISLAM RUBEL

The focus of student politics should be issues relating to academia, said Professor Niaz Ahmed Khan, the new vice-chancellor of Dhaka University.

"I believe that if politics is to be done on campus, it should be related to education. We will talk about curriculum, the relationship between the university and society and between students and teachers. These should be the main aspects of student politics," he said.

Prof Niaz was talking to The Daily Star and other media outlets yesterday, his first day as the VC. He spoke about the crucial issues of student-teacher politics as questions were raised on partisan politics polluting the campus.

Prof Niaz said a greater social consensus is required to decide whether such politics should exist on the campus. "It is difficult to decide on our own."

Asked whether he wants to make Ducsu (DU Central Students' Union) effective again, Prof Niaz said he will take measures to make the university's existing structures

The body of a journalist at GTV, also known as Gazi Television, was found floating in Hatirjheel lake in the capital early yesterday.

Rahanuma Sarah, 32, was the newsroom editor of the channel.

Pedestrians pulled her out and took her to Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH), where doctors declared her dead around 2:00am.

Md Saiful Islam, officer-in-charge of Hatirjheel Police Station, said a restaurant employee spotted her floating in the lake.

The OC said whether it is suicide or murder will be known only after getting the autopsy report.

Floods upend lives of thousands

Extent of damage getting clear as water starts receding in many areas

SAJJAD HOSSAIN and SIFAYET ULLAH

The extent of the devastation from the floods is becoming visible as the waters are receding.

Thousands of homes have been washed away and many small businesses are destroyed.

Mohammad Mostafa, 66, a resident of Chhagalnaiya, Feni, said his paddy field on two and a half acres and stored rice were ruined.

"I don't know what we will eat when the relief effort stops," he said.

In Chhagalnaiya, hundreds of locals were running after trucks carrying relief materials yesterday.

Officials said around 80 percent of the upazila was inundated.

Due to heavy rain, the level of water increased in eight upazilas of Noakhali yesterday, reports our correspondent there.

In Lakshmipur, officials said 90 percent of the district was still flooded and over 8 lakh people were marooned.

Families, including the elderly, women and children, have been living on the sides of roads in the district.

Abul Kalam, a 62-year-old farmer of Char Kelakopa area, said he had been sleeping on a plastic sheet under the open sky for a week. There was three-feet-deep water in his hut.

"Never in my life have I seen a flood lasting this long," he said.

Around 200 others were seen in similar conditions in the area.

"I have my three cows with me. They are hungry too. We are surviving on people's handouts," he said.

In Cumilla, the level of floodwater is falling along the Gumti river.

Abdul Latif, superintendent engineer at Cumilla East Water Development Board, said the river is flowing 22cm below the danger level. But as the embankment is broken, villages are still getting flooded in Burichang and Brahmmanpara upazilas.

"We are surviving on people's handouts. I have my three cows with me on the street. They are hungry too."

The disaster management ministry announced that the flood situation will improve soon.

Water levels in all rivers are falling, and heavy rain is not likely, Additional Secretary KM Ali Reza told a press briefing.

Over 58 lakh people in 11 districts were affected by the floods. The disaster has so far claimed 31 lives.

Twelve people drowned in Cumilla, six in Noakhali, two in Feni, five in Chattogram, three in Cox's Bazar, and one each in Khagrachhari, Brahmanbaria, and Lakshmipur. Two people remain missing in Moulvibazar.

The government has opened 4,003 shelters, providing refuge to over 5.4 lakh people.

BB governor says those will be sold later to refund depositors

People who deposited money in Islami Bank and other Shariah-based banks will be given their money back after selling of S Alam Group's assets, said Bangladesh Bank Governor Ahsan H Mansur yesterday.

Speaking at a press conference at the central bank headquarters, Mansur urged people not to buy assets of S Alam Group.

"No one should touch the wealth of this group for the sake of the country. We want to use the assets to refund the depositors."

Mansur also urged the depositors and customers to be patient. "Don't withdraw money all at once. Then no one will get the money. Many have kept money in these banks for getting good interest. Don't be impatient now."

He added that they will not return the money by printing more money. "Because that will not be good for the nation and inflation will be 100 percent.

Bank accounts of Salman, Sheikh Selim, Quader frozen

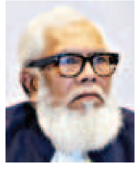
Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit yesterday asked banks to freeze the accounts of Salman F Rahman, former adviser on private industry affairs to Sheikh Hasina; and Sheikh Fazlul Karim Selim, former lawmaker; and their family members.



The BFIU also ordered freezing the accounts of Obaidul Quader, former road transport and bridges minister; Md Akiz Uddin, a former deputy managing director of Islami Bank and also a personal secretary to the S Alam Group chairman; and their family members.

The banks have been ordered to keep the accounts, including those of their businesses, frozen for the next 30 days, according to letters.

They were also instructed to suspend transactions between the family members for an initial period of 30 days.

The BFIU ordered the banks to provide detailed information on all the accounts by the next five working days.

Now, Israel launches deadly West Bank ops

UN says West Bank raids risk 'deepening the already catastrophic situation'

AFP, Jenin

Israel launched a large-scale military operation Wednesday in the occupied West Bank, where the army said it killed nine Palestinian fighters, while the nearly 11-month Gaza war showed no signs of abating.

The offensive has killed more than 40,000 people in Gaza, according to the Hamas-run territory's health ministry. It has also caused widespread destruction, displaced nearly all of Gaza's 2.4 million people at least once and triggered a humanitarian crisis.

In the West Bank in the early hours of yesterday, the Israeli military launched a series of coordinated raids across four cities -- Jenin, Nablus, Tubas and Tulkarem.

Columns of Israeli armoured vehicles entered two refugee camps, in Tulkarem and Tubas, as well as Jenin.

By midday, they were blocking entrances to the towns and camps, AFP photographers said, with soldiers firing at the camps from which gunfire and explosions were heard.

Israeli bulldozers dug up asphalt from the streets, with the army saying it was looking for roadside bombs.

The Palestinian Red Crescent said Israeli forces killed nine people and wounded 15 others in the raids, revising its previous toll of 10 dead.

Victim pinpoints DGFI detention centre

ZYMA ISLAM

If there is one thing that differentiates the arbitrary detention of HM Rana from the other victims of enforced disappearance, it is that he knows exactly where he was inside the Dhaka Cantonment.

Almost every victim of enforced disappearance who came back alive said they were blindfolded the entire time while they were being transported and until they were taken inside their cells, or interrogation rooms.

They were similarly blindfolded when they were taken out of the centre and dropped off in random places.

INT'L DAY OF THE VICTIMS OF ENFORCED DISAPPEARANCES

HM Rana, a musician with Closeup-1 fame, was not picked up in the same manner as others. Other victims usually say they were picked up by men in plainclothes who showed up in unregistered microbuses with tinted windows in the middle of the night.

Since Rana's uncle was also in the military, he was escorted to the centre by a military officer on February 14 this year.

It was the day of his wedding reception.

"I was taken to a two-storey building with a chocolate-brown gate to the left of the CSD TESS restaurant next to the post office," said Rana,

Bangladesh signs UN treaty

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh signed the instrument of accession to the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearances yesterday.

The signing, led by Chief Adviser Professor Muhammad Yunus, took place during the weekly meeting of the interim government's advisory council amid applause from the council members, according to chief adviser's press wing.

"It is a historic occasion," Yunus said.

The move comes just one day before the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances.

Earlier this week, the interim government established a commission to investigate cases of enforced disappearances during Sheikh Hasina's 15-year rule.

Speaking on the signing of the convention, Environment Adviser Syeda Rizwana Hasan said the practice of making people disappear with the intent to suppress dissent was over.

Govt to take reform ideas from parties

To hold dialogue with them regularly

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The interim government has decided to engage in regular dialogue with the political parties to get reform proposals from them.

The decision was made yesterday during a meeting of the government's advisory council at the State Guesthouse Jamuna.

"We will continue the process of holding dialogue with the political parties. We will accept the reform proposals that would come from them. We have discussed a method in this regard," Environment Adviser Syeda Rizwana Hasan told reporters after the meeting.

The move came at a time when the BNP called upon the interim government to hold talks with the political parties regarding the next general election.

A BNP delegation, led by party Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir, yesterday met with Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus and made similar requests.

The BNP has been hounded over the last 18 years. The party chief, Khaleda Zia, was put in jail and not allowed treatment abroad while her son, Tarique Rahman, has been living in London since 2008 and faces a prison sentence back home. But with the Awami League regime gone, change is in the offing. BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir talks about a host of issues with Special Correspondent Partha Pratim Bhattacharjee.

TDS: You have said that the BNP agrees to give reasonable time for reforms before elections. How much time are you willing to give the interim government for that?

Fakhrul: The interim government is not elected. It is, in fact, selected. The main responsibility of this incumbent is to reform institutions -- that are on the verge of complete collapse -- that are indispensable for holding a free and impartial election.

It is difficult to say how much time will be needed for that as the previous Awami League government destroyed each of these institutions.

TDS: You urged the interim government for a roadmap for the next election and its reform plan. Where do you think immediate reforms are necessary? And if the BNP is voted to power, will it move to endorse those reforms at the parliament?

Fakhrul: The immediate past government has totally destroyed the judiciary, election commission as well as law enforcement. These institutions were politicised and criminalised. This is where we need immediate reforms.

A week into the ongoing flood situation in the country, outbreaks of waterborne disease are being reported from affected districts.

In the 24 hours till yesterday morning, at least six people died and around 3,000 patients were hospitalised because of waterborne diseases in flood-affected areas, according to the Directorate General of Health Services.

Of the deceased, four people died in Feni, one in Noakhali, and one in Lakshmipur.

Among the cases, the highest was in Cumilla at 1,606, followed by 686 in Feni, 246 in Moulvibazar, 172 in Noakhali, 120 in Lakshmipur, 81 in Sunamganj, 44 in Habiganj, 10 in Rangamati, and eight in Chattogram.

The diseases broke out mainly in the areas where people did not get fresh drinking water or water purification tablets.

In Lakshmipur, Jahid Hossain, a resident of Kolakopa village in Charbadam union under Ramgati upazila, said he had been suffering from diarrhoea for the last three days. "Without access to fresh water or water purification tablets, I have been forced to drink dirty floodwater."

The Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) yesterday asked banks to freeze all accounts belonging to former chief justice Obaidul Hassan and former attorney general Amin Uddin.

The anti-money laundering agency also ordered banks to block all accounts belonging to their respective spouses, according to a letter sent out by BFIU.

The move is a part of dozens of instructions issued by the BFIU to block accounts of top functionaries, including ministers, of the immediate past Awami League government, which was ousted by a mass uprising on August 5.

The AL, led by former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, ruled the country for 15 years, the longest tenure of any government since independence.

Amin Uddin, who was appointed as attorney general in October 2020, resigned two days after Hasina's ouster.

Obaidul, who was appointed as the nation's 24th chief justice in September last year, quit on August 10.

BSEC freezes 20 BO accounts

Those are linked to several ex-ministers, MPs, their families

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC) decided to freeze the beneficiary owner's (BO) accounts of 20 investors linked with several former ministers and former members of parliament.

The stock market regulator ordered the freeze in a commission meeting held at its head office in the capital yesterday.

According to the order, individuals will keep their funds, but any withdrawals will be disallowed during the freezing period.

The owners of the frozen BO accounts include former minister for home affairs Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal, his wife Lutful Tahmina Khan, his son Safi Muddaser Khan and his daughter Shafia Tasnim Khan.

Former foreign minister Mohammed Hasan Mahmud, his spouse Nurun Fatema Hasan and his daughter Nafisa Zumaina Mahmud, and former state minister Mohammad Ali Arafat and his wife Sharmin Mustary are also on the list.

Court issues travel ban on 14 former AL ministers, MPs

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday issued a travel ban on 14 former Awami League ministers and lawmakers in connection with corruption allegations brought against them.

The others are former social welfare minister Dipu Moni, former health minister Zahid Maleque, former education minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury, former food minister Sadhan Chandra Majumder, former industrial minister Nurul Majid Mahmud Humayun, former industrial deputy minister Kamal Ahmed Majumder, and former lawmakers Salim Uddin, Mamunur Rashid Kiron, Kujendra Lal Tripura, Kajim Uddin, Noor-E-Alam Chowdhury Liton, Shahjahan Khan, Kamrul Islam and Ziaur Rahman.

Judge Mohammed Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain of the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court in Dhaka passed the order after Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) Deputy Director Abu Hena Ashiqur Rahman, who is also conducting the investigation, submitted an application.

Scope to whiten

that the government's action against money laundering has started.

The former government made room to allow both individuals and companies to whiten money without facing scrutiny and by paying a 15 percent tax, a move that drew sharp criticism from economists, trade bodies and civil society.

Backtracking on its promise to eliminate black money, the then government hoped the initiative would increase the flow of money into the economy despite such measures failing to yield any fruitful benefits in the past.

According to the provision, no authority can raise any question if a taxpayer pays tax at fixed rates for immovable properties such as flats and land and 15 percent tax on other assets, including cash, irrespective of the existing laws of the country.

Before the last national election, the Awami League's election manifesto promised strong measures against those hoarding undisclosed money as well as those engaged in corruption.

But economists and corruption watchdogs said that successive governments allowing the whitening of black money was akin to "licencing corruption".

Since independence, schemes to legalise undeclared money have been introduced at least 22 times. But the response has been lukewarm.

According to data from the National Board of Revenue (NBR), nearly Tk 45,522 crore was whitened between 1972 and 2022, with the collector getting Tk 4,641 crore in taxes in total.

In fiscal 2020-21, the government offered full amnesty to black money; a record Tk 20,600 crore was legalised, yielding the NBR Tk 2,064 crore.

In fiscal 2006-07, the caretaker government offered the scope to legalise black money after paying a penalty, which is not normally levied. That year, Tk 9,682 crore was whitened.

Meanwhile, Muhammad Yunus, the chief adviser to the interim government, yesterday sought cooperation from Switzerland to bring back money stolen from Bangladesh when the ambassador of Switzerland, Reto Renggli, paid a courtesy call to him at his office, according to a press release of chief adviser's office.

"Is there any way to return the money?" Yunus asked Renggli.

Yunus said a lot of stolen money has been transferred abroad. "It is important," he said.

In response, Renggli said Switzerland is always "willing to cooperate in compliance with globally recognised procedures and standards and in line with proposals it has put forward in recent years".

The envoy said Switzerland would support the interim government and strengthen economic ties with the country.

immediately. But some measures are needed right away in the banking sector. It may not be possible within a short time but there should at least be a start for making some drastic changes.

We want reforms in largely four sectors -- Election Commission, law enforcement agencies, civil bureaucracy and judiciary. But the interim government should consult with political parties and stakeholders before their reform initiatives. And yes, we will certainly endorse reforms that are in line with consultations with political parties.

TDS: Where does the BNP stand about bringing back the acting chairman, Tarique Rahman?

Fakhrul: We want to bring him back. We believe that the cases against him have no merit, were fabricated and filed out of vengeance. His return would benefit both the country and the party.

TDS: During the meeting with the chief adviser, Professor Muhammad Yunus, you demanded withdrawal of cases against BNP leaders and activists across the country. There are several cases against Tarique Rahman and 111 against you. Has there been any progress?

Fakhrul: Yes, we did and we also spoke to the attorney general. We are drawing up a list and will provide it to the government.

Around 2,000 BNP members and activists have already got bail but their cases are still pending. We wanted to have the cases withdrawn as they are totally false. The sooner the cases are withdrawn, the better.

TDS: You have repeatedly asked that your party chief, Khaleda Zia, be allowed to travel abroad for better treatment. Any updates on that front?

Fakhrul: We, as well as the medical board, are working on it. It is not possible to send her abroad right now. It is yet to be decided whether she will be able to fly given her current health. Also, it is not decided where she would go. It really depends on her physical condition.

TDS: How well is the BNP prepared for an election?

Fakhrul: We did not sit idle for the last 15 years. We held district and sub-district meetings virtually connecting with party acting chairman Tarique Rahman and other party leaders. We held the party's standing committee meetings every week. We are completely prepared for the next elections.

TDS: There have been numerous reports of one extortion gang replacing the previous one. Many of the victims say, the extortion and persecution is still on, just that the people doing it have changed. The BNP has already expelled a few party men for their involvement in such activities. But what would you say about this political culture?

Fakhrul: Very unfortunate. During any political changeover, some incidents happen. It is part of the burden that we bear. Our society did not change overnight with the fall of the Awami League. There are still many who are criminals and I would strongly object to likening criminals to BNP activists. There may be many affiliated with the BNP, but a criminal will never get any support from the party.

The BNP has taken action against those involved with such activities. But I object to headlines that say the BNP is involved in these hostile takeovers.

TDS: We have seen since 1991 that the incumbents sideline the opposition in this winner-take-all culture. How do you plan to overcome this?

Fakhrul: We need a system of peaceful transfer of power, which we couldn't establish in five decades. We have developed a culture where one needs to be forced out of power. This is dangerous. A political consensus is the only way to end this. Democracy must be allowed to flourish.

SCAN THE QR CODE TO WATCH VIDEO

A good system —caretaker government— was formed. We have a proposal to introduce a caretaker system permanently to hold elections within 90 days. We will have to incorporate this provision into the constitution.

TDS: The Jamaat-e-Islami has been a key political ally of the BNP. But you appear to be distancing yourself from the Jamaat for some time. What is the status of the BNP-Jamaat relation?

Fakhrul: The alliance we had with the Jamaat had become dysfunctional long ago. But we were carrying out our anti-government campaigns simultaneously on the basis of mutual consultations. That was how we conducted our campaigns till the fall of the previous regime.

Since then, we have been in touch with other parties considering that the interim government is in power and there will be an election soon. Hence an overall political compact is necessary. But at the moment we are not in an alliance.

TDS: Sheikh Hasina's son Sajeeb Wazed Joy expressed a desire to work together with the BNP putting aside the longstanding rivalry. How do you respond to that?

Fakhrul: After the fall of the Awami League, BNP chief Khaleda Zia said she doesn't want the politics of destruction, revenge, and vengeance.

But the Awami League will have to answer for its activities of the last 15 years. The party must be held accountable for ruining the country's politics and destroying the economy. We have no objection to a political party adhering to democratic principles. We firmly believe every political party and every person has the right to do politics.

TDS: There is a demand to ban the Awami League. Do you think that one of the oldest parties of the country should be banned?

Fakhrul: Neither I nor my party favours banning any political party. BNP founder Ziaur Rahman introduced multi-party democracy. The Awami League had started a one-party rule, but our leader Khaleda Zia started parliamentary democracy. So, no, we don't support banning any political party.

TDS: We have seen that the BNP has a pro-China foreign policy, while the Awami League is pro-Indian. What will be your stance this time if the BNP is voted to power?

Fakhrul: We don't want friendship with any particular country. We want friendship with all. Also, we don't want any country to build relations with a particular party. We will develop a foreign policy based on mutual interest.

TDS: There have been numerous allegations against BNP's 2001–06 tenure. Will the BNP take lessons from its earlier mistakes? What is the guarantee that another Hawa Bhaban will not come back if the party is voted to power?

Fakhrul: Some media and individuals propagated this narrative that Hawa Bhaban was undermining the party and its leadership. The BNP has never done anything that went against the people. There might have been mistakes, though.

Hawa Bhaban was a personal office. Can anyone give me an example that someone was tortured or forcibly confined there? Some compare Hawa Bhaban with "Aynaghar" (a facility to forcibly confine mostly political opponents illegally and torture them). That is gross misrepresentation. It's a conspiracy to belittle the BNP's achievements.

If there is an election, people will decide which party is good, which is not. We will have to accept the election result. If we can't come to power, we accept defeat and go back.

adding that the compound had a garden in front of it.

"Many old cars were parked in front of the building."

Rana gave The Daily Star a photo of the building.

"When I entered, I was taken through a metal detector arch similar to the ones seen at airports. There was a reception and behind the desk was a plaque reading 'Directorate General of Forces Intelligence'. A logbook at the reception had pages full of names with blue or red check marks. I saw that my name was written along with my reporting time -- Rana, 8:00am," he said.

He was led to a room that had sofas. "A man in a suit came in, followed by another. The men had sidearms and badges with DGFI written on them," said Rana.

And thus began the interrogation, which lasted 48 hours.

"At one point, they brought in various tools of torture and laid them out on a table in front of us. There were pliers and a bunch of rods with metal attachments running through their lengths. A man brought in a device with an extension cord that could be used to give electric shocks," he said.

As the questioning went on, the men brought the torture devices towards Rana and threatened him. "They brought the shock device towards my head and zapped my hair. A man with pliers threatened to pull my tongue out," he said.

At one point, they brought in a video camera and asked Rana to strip. As Rana was about to take off his clothes, a lady officer came in, and he was stopped.

"You know what to do when a body part has cancer right? You cut it off. You have come to the place, where we cut out the cancer of society," Rana quoted one of the men saying.

"I had heard about the fabled 'Aynaghar' and was fully convinced that this was one of those places," said Rana. "Late at night when I was alone with just two guards, I asked them if more people were in the facility. They said there were."

Before Rana was detained, he said he was getting dozens of calls every day from people claiming to be DGFI officers. "It was strange. They kept asking me to come in and said that if I didn't, they would have to come and get me, and that it would not go down well," he said.

Rana was let go on February 15, a day after his planned wedding reception.

"We never got a chance to have a big wedding, so on our anniversary – February 14 – we had arranged a reception. I had gotten my wife the red bridal dress of her dreams. I was taken into the DGFI at 8:00am in the morning, and the entire time, my family thought I would be coming back to attend the reception, but I never showed up. Guests arrived and left puzzled," he said.

He said he still does not know why he was picked up.

Earlier this month, a delegation of rights activists, led by Mayer Daak, a platform of the families of the victims of enforced disappearance, went to the DGFI headquarters seeking information about the victims.

The delegation was told that the DGFI has 23 facilities. To date, nobody has been given information about where the facilities are or if any detainees are held there.

The Daily Star was unable to contact the DGFI to get their comments.

Victims frequently allege that the DGFI had confined them to the cells, but statistics provided by Odhikar show that they are often not the force in the forefront.

Odhikar logged cases of 709 people who had been victims of enforced disappearance between 2009 and June 2024. Out of those, 206 people were picked up by Rab, 240 people were picked by the Detective Branch of police, and 104 by the police.

Only in 9 cases it was alleged that the DGFI was involved in picking up the victims, while in the cases of 129 others, the abductors could not be identified.

The rest were allegedly taken by the police's Criminal Investigation Department, Ansar, and Industrial Police.

She did not, however, respond directly to a question of whether Rab would be brought to justice as a force. She instead said, "According to the terms of this charter, it would take effect after the signing."

A commission has already been set up to look into the past cases of enforced disappearances in Bangladesh, she added.

Hasina and 28 journos accused in ICT case

Razzaque, father of Nasib Hasan Rihan, 17, who was shot dead in the capital's Shyamoli Ring Road area on August 5.

The class-XI student was shot in the head when police opened fire, the complaint said.

Ataur Rahman, deputy director (admin) of the tribunal's investigation agency, said the complaint was registered and a probe was launched.

Hasina is now accused in eight complaints filed over crimes against humanity and genocide.

Seven of the complaints are about individuals killed during the quota reform protests and subsequent people's uprising that led to the fall of her government.

The other one is about the killings after a Hefazat-e-Islam rally in the capital in May, 2013.

According to yesterday's complaint, some of the 52 accused shot dead unarmed people as per the direction and plan of the other accused. The former were provoked and instigated by the latter.

The accused journalists were "sycophants", who in support of the AL government, "published false news to instigate" the genocide and crimes against humanity committed by the then government and law enforcers.

They are Naimul Islam Khan, former press secretary to Hasina; Iqbal Sobhan Chowdhury, former media adviser to the Hasina; Farida Yasmin, former president of Jatiya Press Club; Shyamal Dutta, editor of Bhorer Kagoj; Mozammel Babu of Ekattor TV; Nabanita Chowdhury and Subhash Singh Roy of abnews24.com; Ahmed Zobair of Somoy TV; Tushar Abdullah of Ekhon TV; Saiful Alam, editor of Jugantor; Naeem Nizam, editor of Bangladesh Pratidin; and Abed Khan, former editor of Samakal.

The other accused journalists are Probhash Amin, Farzana Rupa, Shakil Ahmed, Mithila Farzana, Zayadul Ahsan Pintu, Monjurul Islam, Ashish Saikat, Manash Ghosh, Pranab Saha, Masuda Bhatti, Munni Saha, JE Mamun, Swadesh Roy, Soma Islam, Shyamal Sarkar, and Ajay Das.

Former ministers and state ministers accused are Obaidul Quader, Asadduzzaman Khan Kamal, Anisul Huq, Hasan Mahmud, Hasanul Haque Inu, Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury, Zunaid Ahmed Palak, Mohammad Ali Arafat, and Jahangir Kabir Nanak.

Besides, former mayor Atiqul Islam, former inspector general of police Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun, former DB chief Harun Or Rashid, former DMP commissioner Habibur Rahman, former director general of RAB Harun Or Rashid, former DMP joint commissioner Biplob Kumar Sarkar, Maj Gen (sacked) Ziaul Ahsan, former OC of Adabor Police Station Mahabub Rahman, Chhatra League president Saddam and general secretary Sheikh Wali Asif Inan, and former prime minister's deputy press secretary Ashraful Alam Khokon.

The Hasina-led government formed the International Crimes Tribunal in March 2010 to try those who committed crimes against humanity during the Liberation War. Later ICT-2 was formed. At least six BNP and Jamaat leaders were executed following the ICT verdicts.

The filing of complaints against Hasina with the ICT started after Law Adviser Asif Nazrul on August 15 said the involvement of the highest position holders of the immediate past government has been examined, and it is possible to put them on trial.

'We want to know if they are alive'

FM MIZANUR RAHAMAN

In Chattogram, families of two individuals, who were allegedly picked up by law enforcers years ago, are still desperately seeking answers.

Jahid Hasan, 18, was reportedly taken by members of the Rapid Action Battalion (Rab-7) on October 14, 2018.

Jahid, son of late Md Yasin, was a key witness in a shootout involving Jubo League leader Asim Roy Babu.

The incident occurred in Chattogram's Muradpur on October 12, 2018, where Babu was killed and four Rab personnel were injured. Jahid was Babu's personal driver and had been interviewed by the media about the incident.

According to Jahid's elder brother, Mehedi Hasan Biplob, the family was awakened around 3:30am by men claiming to be administrative officials.

These men, armed and dressed in plain clothes, broke into the home, seized Jahid, and took him away in a black SUV.

Despite Biplob's efforts to locate Jahid and file complaints with Rab and local police, his whereabouts still remain unknown.

"We have tried everything to find Jahid. My mother is bedridden; she does not know whether her son is alive. We are now preparing to file a case," said Biplob.

Lieutenant Commander Mifta Uddin Ahmed, then CO of Rab-7, said at that time, "Rab is also searching for Jahid, as we did not find him during the gunfight."

The second missing person, BNP leader ASM Shahidul Alam Siraj, has been unaccounted for since March 6, 2012.

Siraj, a prominent figure in Fatickchhari upazila and former chairman of Lelang Union Parishad, disappeared after attending BNP's "Dhaka Cholo" movement.

His mobile phone was found switched off the following morning.

Polls soon after stability returns

Hopes BNP; Fakhrul calls on Yunus

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said his party is optimistic that the interim government led by Chief Adviser Dr Muhammad Yunus will hold an election by restoring stability soon in the country.

"We're hopeful that this interim government led by Professor Yunus can take the country to a stable situation shortly with their sincerity, patriotism and competence. At the same time, they can go for an election," said the senior BNP leader.

Fakhrul was talking to reporters after a meeting with the chief adviser at the state guest house Jamuna in Dhaka.

Talking about the meeting that lasted for over an hour, the BNP leader said the chief adviser invited them for a discussion. "It has been a very fruitful discussion," he said.

He said they believe this government would bring necessary reforms (to different systems and institutions of the state).

Replying to a question if the date for election came up for discussion in the meeting, Fakhrul said, "We've not discussed any date (for holding election). We won't say the date. They will say it."

He said there will be talks with political parties in phases.

Fakhrul was accompanied by BNP standing committee members Amir Khosru Mahmud Chowdhury and Salahuddin Ahmed in the meeting that started at 4:00pm.

Planning and Education Adviser Wahiduddin Mahmud and Law Adviser Prof Asif Nazrul were also present at the meeting.

Overhaul election system

Urge experts, propose proportional representation and bicameral legislature

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Election experts yesterday proposed major reforms like introduction of proportional representation system, bicameral legislature and neutral administration and police for an acceptable election system.

They made these proposals while taking part in a discussion organised by Sushashoner Janno Nagarik on reform of the election system at the Daily Star Centre.

They also called for the inclusion of representatives from the treasury, opposition benches, and the third-largest party in parliament in the search committee responsible for appointing the Chief Election Commissioner and other election commissioners.

They also urged political parties to practice democracy inside their own parties.

Former CEC Justice Abdur Rouf said the proportional representation system will enable voters to vote for a party rather than an individual candidate.

"The current nomination system will be transformed if we adopt a proportional representation (PR) system, which will also put an end to the practice of trading party nominations for money. It will simply reduce 80 percent corruption," said Rouf.

"In the current system, some spend Tk 20 crore for getting nomination, another Tk 20 crore on motorcycles and goons. So, they aim to make Tk 200 crore [through corruption once elected as MP] during his or her period," he added.

PR is an electoral system in which the distribution of seats corresponds with the proportion of the total votes cast for each party. For example, if a party gained 40 percent of the total votes, the PR system would allow them to get 40 percent of the seats in parliament.

Currently Bangladesh practices the first-past-the-post (FPTP) system in which the candidate receiving the highest number of votes in a constituency wins a seat in parliament.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- Reintroduce "no vote" option on ballot papers
- Let EC publish posters on behalf of candidates
- Organise projection meetings for candidates
- Make candidates disclose foreign assets
- Appoint returning officers from among EC officials

Local governance expert Tofail Ahmed said bicameral legislature, a system in which the legislature comprises two houses, is practiced successfully in many countries that also creates a balance while enacting laws.

No alternative to rewriting constitution

Says Prof Ali Riaz

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

To repair the democratic institutions of the state, there is no option other than rewriting the constitution, even if it requires a constitutional assembly, said Prof Ali Riaz yesterday.

He said the former Awami League government destroyed the state institutions to maintain its hold on power, and without strengthening these institutions, democratic reconstruction is impossible.

"But in this situation, there is hardly any scope to amend the constitution. So, my personal opinion is to rewrite the constitution," said Ali Riaz, a distinguished professor of politics and government at Illinois State University, during a press conference organised by the Centre for Governance Studies (CGS) at a city hotel.

The responsibility of addressing these ongoing critical issues does not lie solely with the government but also with citizens, who must act in the best interest of future generations, he said.

At the event, Prof Riaz said CGS plans to hold a series of dialogues titled "Democratic Reconstruction" over the next five months.

These dialogues will be held to gather insights and recommendations from civil society, intellectuals, and experts across various sectors to establish a sustainable democracy and ensure justice in the country, he added.

A total of eight dialogues will be held in Dhaka, with four additional sessions in Chattorgram, Rajshahi, Sylhet, and Khulna, according to CGS.

The dialogues will focus on

All repressive laws and draft laws that hinder freedom of expression should be scrapped, as those were formulated to keep the former government in power, said rights activists yesterday.

They demanded that all the cases, including those filed against journalists, under the Cyber Security Act (CSA) and now repealed Digital Security Act should be withdrawn.

They made the demands at a press conference organised by Forum for Freedom of Expression, Bangladesh (FExB) at Dhaka Reporters Unity.

Criticising the CSA, rights activist and researcher Rezaur Rahman Lenin said the cyber security law fails to distinguish between activities in the public interest and criminal activities.

Australia to give AUS $1b to flood victims

Acting envoy meets CA

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Acting Australian High Commissioner to Bangladesh, Nardia Simpson, paid a courtesy call on Chief Adviser to the interim government Prof Muhammad Yunus, at the state guesthouse Jamuna yesterday.

During the meeting, she expressed condolences for the loss of lives during the student-led protests and reaffirmed Australia's commitment to working with the interim government of Bangladesh.

Their discussions covered a wide range of issues, including security in the Bay of Bengal, the Rohingya crisis, human rights, economic cooperation, tax tariffs, and minority rights.

Simpson highlighted Australia's ongoing efforts to promote peacebuilding, culture, and leadership development in the Rohingya camps. She also announced that Australia would donate AUS $1 billion to support flood-affected people in Bangladesh.

On August 31, the finalist teams will present their ideas to the judges as they compete for the championship title.

POLICE INACTION

Rickshaws rule Dhaka streets

RAFIUL ISLAM

It was around 11:30am.

A pair of rickshaws passed by State Guest House Jamuna, the residence and office of the chief adviser of the interim government, located on Hare Road.

Within a short time, at least 10 more rickshaws, including two battery-powered ones, traversed the same route.

This has become the new normal seen all throughout the city, but even just over a month ago this would have been very unusual as rickshaws are banned from plying on most major roads of Dhaka.

But ever since the student-led protests intensified, and especially after the fall of the Awami League government on August 5, the pedal and battery-run rickshaws are ruling city streets in full view of police.

Rickshaw-pullers started to completely flout the ban when Dhaka's traffic system collapsed amid the absence of police for around a weeks following the AL government's fall.

While traffic police have been on the streets since August 12, they are largely limited to directing traffic, but are not enforcing laws.

"My income has increased now that we can go anywhere in the city," Zubair Hossain, a pedal rickshaw puller, told The Daily Star while taking a breather in front of the chief justice's residence yesterday.

Zubair said he came to Dhaka six months ago, but before August 5, he could only operate his rickshaw in the alleyways of Farmgate, Nakhalpara, Karwan Bazar, Madhubagh, and the surrounding neighbourhoods.

Minutes later Zubair started pedalling his rickshaw towards Moghbazar through Shaheed Captain Mansur Ali Sarak, another road where rickshaws are banned.

A study carried out by the Bangladesh Institute of Labour Studies (BILS) in 2019 said Dhaka had over 11 lakh pedal rickshaws.

Rickshaws rule Dhaka

Also, there were more than 2 lakh battery-run rickshaws in the city.

Pedal rickshaws are allowed only on designated roads while battery-run rickshaws usually operate on feeder roads.

In the past few days, this correspondent observed various major roads in Ramna, Tejgaon, Mirpur, Uttara, Airport, and Motijheel, where rickshaws were frequently seen.

In the past, police and ansar members used to guard the exits of feeder roads to prevent rickshaws from entering the thoroughfares and major roads. But they were not seen during recent visits.

Rickshaw-puller Maznu Mia along with others were seen waiting for passengers in front of the Apex Footwear outlet in Farmgate, adjacent to the busy Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue.

Asked how they managed to get to the major road, Maznu smiled and said nobody stops them now.

"In the past, police and ansar members used to puncture rickshaw tires, take away seats or sometimes even seize rickshaws if we operated on VIP roads," he said.

The rickshaw operations on major roads cause problems for drivers of private cars, buses and CNG-run auto-rickshaws as the slow-moving three-wheelers often go to the right lanes which are supposed to be fast lanes, the drivers said.

"This situation cannot go on. The rickshaw pullers do not obey any street law. We are always in fear of accident now," said Sujan Mia, a driver of Bihanga Paribahan.

Other motorists said the presence of both pedal and battery-run rickshaws was a problem as they move at different speeds, so deciding when to change lanes and overtake has become harder.

Several traffic constables, on condition of anonymity, said they no longer stop anyone because they want to avoid the hassles they faced before and after August 5.

"Look, there are only a few traffic police on the streets, and our supervisors often stay on the side of the road," said a constable on Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue.

Khondaker Nazmul Hassan, additional commissioner (traffic) of DMP, said, "We are taking steps [against rickshaws] and are hopeful that we will be able to bring a visible change to the traffic system withing two weeks."

During the student-led protests that culminated in the toppling of the AL government, many law enforcers were opening fire on protesters as hundreds died over just three weeks of violence. Many police personnel were also killed, and the force is still recovering from a crisis of credibility.

reviewed videos and images captured by drones. The fire burned for a long time -- almost three days -- due to different chemicals stored inside, which intensified the heat. The building's condition clearly reflects this. It not only just burned but also underwent extensive damaged," he also said.

Prof Raquib explained that the fourth and fifth floors of the six-story building collapsed onto the third floor, causing the third floor to buckle under the weight.

Drawing from past experience, the Buet professor said, "When the Rangs Building was demolished, our Buet team was also involved. The situation here is even more hazardous than it was there. Demolishing this building must be done with meticulous planning to avert any accidents."

Mirza Abbas cleared of graft charges

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday acquitted BNP standing committee member Mirza Abbas in a 2007 graft case.

Judge Masud Parvez of the Special Judge's Court-6 of Dhaka delivered the verdict in presence of him at the courtroom, said a court staffer.

On August 16, 2007, Anti-Corruption Commission filed one case with Ramna Police Station against Abbas and his wife Afroza for amassing wealth worth over Tk 5.67 crore beyond known sources of income, and concealing wealth statement of Tk 23 lakh to the commission.

The ACC on May 14, 2008, pressed charges against him and Afroza in the case.

In June 2008, the court framed charges against Abbas and his wife. It recorded statements of 24 prosecution witnesses.

vagueness and inadequacy," he said.

"In a completely undemocratic process, the previous authoritarian government took initiatives to draft new laws and policies, while amending old laws, to take away people's rights and increase and control state power. Citizen's participation and accountability in the formulation and implementation of these laws was nil," he added.

Saleem Samad, general secretary of FExB, said laws made in public interest should be formulated and amended, in consultation with the public and higher stakeholders.

Khairuzzaman Kamal, treasurer of Bangladesh Federal Union of Journalists (BFUJ), said cyber security laws are essential when they deal with people's interests and women's security, and to prevent all kinds of bullying.

Dr Syeda Aireen Jaman, secretary general of PEN International, Bangladesh, said during this interim period, it will be good to have a new ordinance in place that is in line with the "UN Plan of Action on the Safety of Journalists and the Issue of Impunity," alongside the protection of human rights.

Rezwan Islam of Global Voices and human rights advocate Sharmin Khan also spoke at the event.

primary elections in each constituency to select their candidates.

Shujan Secretary Badiul Alam Majumdar mentioned that one of the advisers of the interim government has requested a draft proposal for a law to appoint the CEC and other ECs. They plan to submit the finalised proposal to the government.

He also emphasised that student politics on campuses should be free from sycophancy.

Rights activist Faiz Ahmad Taiyeb emphasised the need for mechanisms that would allow expatriate Bangladeshis to cast their votes. He also called for efforts to curb the spread of misinformation and disinformation.

DU Professor Robaet Ferdous stated that all institutions, including the Election Commission, the Human Rights Commission, the Public Service Commission, and others, have utterly failed.

"Caretaker government should be incorporated in the constitution permanently," he proposed.

Prothom Alo Joint Editor Sohrab Hassan said if political parties do not practice internal democracy, all proposals and discussions will be in vain.

Dilip Kumar Sarker, central coordinator of Shujan, presented a set of reform proposals that includes reintroducing the "no vote" option on ballot papers, having the Election Commission publish posters on behalf of candidates, organising a projection meeting for all candidates in a constituency, requiring candidates to disclose their foreign assets in their affidavits, and appointing returning officers from among EC officials.

Samakal Advisory Editor Abu Sayeed Khan, former election commission additional secretary Jesmin Tuli, Fair Election Monitoring Committee chair Munira Khan, a key organsier of the anti-discrimination student protest Ariful Islam and others addressed the programme.

family's distress, said, "We don't know if my father is alive or not. We have seen others return from secret facilities; we hope for the same."

Advocate Akhtar Kabir Chowdhury, president of the Sanak-TIB Chattogram chapter, advised the families to seek legal recourse and appeal to the interim government.

"The issue of missing persons must be taken seriously. Legal avenues and appeals could provide some resolution," he said.

eight key topics -- the constitution, ensuring justice for victims of human rights violations and serious legal breaches, the judiciary, civil administration, constitutional bodies, law enforcement agencies (including intelligence agencies), economic policies (including the banking sector and foreign loans), and the media.

Addressing these topics is essential for rebuilding democracy, said Prof Riaz, adding that a rushed election without tackling these fundamental issues would be ineffective.

In reply to a query, Prof Riaz said there are limitations in amending the constitution. He rather suggested that there might be options to reconstruct it instead.

Zillur Rahman, executive director of CGS, said, "We have been working on how the state can reinforce its democratic institutions."

He also expressed hope that these dialogues will play a crucial role in shaping the country's democratic future.

Addressing the media, Zillur Rahman said, "Regardless of what we did in the past, let us be united now and work with due responsibility in this new situation. We should work to take mass media to a respective position so that no one can call it 'puppet media'."

"As journalists, we should act accordingly so that no one can file a case against us or put handcuffs on our hands in any changeover situations," he added.

Gonoforum pledges

Dr Kamal emphasised that Gonoforum will start its journey anew through the celebration of its founding anniversary.

"It is the moral responsibility of all political parties and the country's people to give proper time and all-out cooperation to the interim government led by Nobel Laureate Dr Muhammad Yunus to reform the state institutions and create an environment for a fair election."

In his written speech, he said said a new opportunity has been created to establish democracy and justice in the country after the mass movement. People are dreaming of an independent and discrimination-free new Bangladesh.

YUNUS CASE

SC adjourns petition hearing

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday adjourned until Monday the hearing on a leave to appeal petition challenging a High Court order that upheld the indictment against Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus and six other officials of Grameen Telecom in a graft case.

The case was filed by the ACC on May 30, 2023 against Yunus and 13 others on charge of misappropriating about Tk 25.22 crore of Grameen Telecom Workers' Profit Participation Fund and laundering money.

The six Grameen Telecom officials are Managing Director Nazmul Islam, and Directors Ashraful Hassan, Naznin Sultana, Md Shahjahan, Nurjahan Begum, and SM Huzzatul Islam Latifee.

On July 24 this year, the HC summarily rejected a petition filed by Prof Yunus and six other officials of Grameen Telecom, challenging a Dhaka court's order that framed charges against them.

DMCH plans to get rid of brokers in 100 days

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH) authorities have taken a 100-day programme to improve the quality of health services, said its director yesterday.

Speaking to the reporters at a press conference, he announced various plans, including renovation of cabins, increasing ICU beds and prevention of brokers within 100 days.

The press conference was held at the hospital.

Director Brig Gen Md Asaduzzaman said anti-corruption activities will be strengthened in the next 100 days. Initiatives will be taken to ensure behavioural change to improve the relationship between doctors, nurses and healthcare workers with patients.

Besides, initiatives will be taken to strengthen healthcare-related research activities, health education activities. Reception booths or information centres will also be set up.

To ensure free healthcare, there are plans to Sundarbans to reopen for fishers, tourists from Sept 1

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Khulna

The Sundarbans will reopen to tourists and various permitted businesses from September 1, following a three-month closure.

From that day, fishermen and tourists will be able to enter the world's largest mangrove forest after obtaining a permit from the Department of Forest.

The restriction, which was in effect from June 1 to August 31, aimed to protect the wildlife of the Sundarbans during the breeding season of animals and fish, Mihir Kumar, conservator of forests in the Khulna region, told The Daily Star.

Hundreds of fishermen are preparing their boats and nets to fish in the rivers and canals. Tour operators have also begun taking bookings after completing renovations on their boats.

Shivpada Biswas, a fisherman from Khalsibunia village in Khulna's Batiaghata, said he has been fishing in the Sundarbans for the last 30 years and has already obtained his permit.

Nazmul Azam David, general secretary of the Tour Operators Association of Sundarbans, expressed concern that bookings for tours have yet to pick up.

ARSON ATTACK ON GAZI TYRES FACTORY

No victims found in basement: fire service

Building too risky for rescue operation, says Buet delegation

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narayanganj

Fire Service and Civil Defence personnel yesterday entered the basement of Gazi Tyres factory in Rupganj of Narayanganj, which came under arson attack on Sunday, but found no victims there.

The firefighters also noticed that small fires were still burning at some places inside the building.

Meanwhile, a delegation from Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology inspected the building yesterday and said it would be "very risky" to carry out rescue operations on its upper floors.

Miscreants looted and set fire to the factory building, owned by former Awami League minister Golam Dastagir Gazi, on Sunday night, hours after Gazi's arrest.

Following the incident, many families gathered in front of the building claiming that their loved ones were trapped inside the factory.

However, even four days after the incident, the fire service has yet to start rescue operations inside the building.

Anwarul Haque, assistant director of the Fire Service and Civil Defence, yesterday said, "The probe committee and a team of experts, including a delegation from Buet, determined that the upper floors of the building were structurally too risky to allow for safe entry. However, the fire service conducted thorough searches in the basement area, but no dead bodies were found there."

He also said the drone footage showed no evidence of bodies as well.

"The rods are exposed on every floor, the columns have expanded, and the beams are bent. We cannot conduct search and recovery work in the building under the circumstances," he added.

Abdul Mannan, deputy assistant director of fire service in Narayanganj, said they have yet to decide how to conduct a rescue operation in the building.

Earlier yesterday morning, following an invitation from Narayanganj deputy commissioner Mohammad Mahmudul Hoque, Prof Raquib Ahsan of Buet's civil engineering department, inspected the building's surroundings and consulted with fire service personnel and others to determine whether it would be possible to enter the building for search and rescue operations Talking to journalists later, Prof Raquib said it would be "very risky" to carry out rescue operations there.

"I observed the building's exterior and, with help of the fire service's ladder, viewed as much as possible inside. I also

Let's help flood victims reclaim their lives: APU BISWAS

> Apu Biswas has already extended her support to flood victims through a representative at TSC. She commended the initiative led by the students at TSC, stating, "The way everyone is coming together to help the flood victims is truly praiseworthy. My admiration for them has grown immensely. Their unity and dedication during this national crisis are inspiring."

Apu Biswas, the renowned Dhallywood star, has appeared in numerous films over the course of her career. With several hits to her name, she remains a prominent figure in the industry. In February of this year, her latest film, Chaya Brikkho, was released.

The actress is looking forward to the release of her upcoming films. Although she was scheduled to originally film more projects this August, they have been postponed for the time being. Speaking on the matter, Apu shared with The Daily Star, "I, myself, am not focused on filming at the moment; my thoughts are with the flood victims. My heart aches for them."

She further expressed, "The news of the floods is everywhere, in the headlines on television and newspapers – seeing the faces of those suffering brings tears to my eyes."

"The elderly, in particular, seem to be bearing the burden more heavily. And when I see the faces of the children, I can't help but think of my child in their place. I feel compelled to do something for those enduring this suffering," Apu further remarked.

Apu Biswas has already extended her support to flood victims through a representative at TSC. She commended the initiative led by the students at TSC, stating, "The way everyone is coming together to help the flood victims is truly praiseworthy. My admiration for them has grown immensely. Their unity and dedication during this national crisis are inspiring."

The Dhallywood star mentioned, "I sent a representative with all the cash I could spare. I believe it's essential for everyone to step up during times like these."

Apu then reflected upon past catastrophes and said, "The most heartwarming thing is that whenever our country faces a crisis or a natural disaster, people come together to help. This time, however, has been exceptional—surpassing all previous efforts, the students at TSC have mobilised with renewed vigour. Their dedication during this calamity sets a powerful example for us all."

Although Apu Biswas couldn't personally visit the flood-affected areas, she ensured that relief supplies were sent through a delegation. "I wanted to be there, but with a young impressionable child at home, I couldn't make the trip myself. Instead, I sent aid through my representatives."

The actress firmly believes that nothing is more noble than serving humanity. "All the love we have is best expressed through helping others. I believe that we are here for one another. The most important work we can do is support each other, especially during times of crisis," she conveyed.

Apu Biswas, who commands a large fan base, acknowledged the role her supporters have played in her success. "Everything I am today, all the popularity I've gained, is entirely for my audience. Thanks to them," she noted. "Their love made me who I am. I urge them to help the flood victims in any way they can during this difficult time."

When asked about her expectations from the recently formed interim government, Apu Biswas expressed optimism. "I believe the new government will bring positive changes. I hope they work to eliminate discrimination because none of us want to see inequality in our society."

Lastly, the Dhallywood star appealed to everyone, stating, "Let's put aside our differences and come together to support the flood victims. Right now, this is our most urgent need. Let's help the people affected by the floods reclaim their lives, restore their smiles, and ease their sorrows."

Interim government to reshuffle Bangladesh Film Censor Board

The Ministry of Information and Broadcasting is set to reshuffle the Bangladesh Film Censor Board after Sheikh Hasina's government resigned on August 5.

The interim government aims to overhaul several institutions, starting with removing controversial board members and forming a new committee before resuming film screenings.

The last film approved was Madhyobitto on July 28, and no Bengali films have been reviewed since then. Ministry insiders suggest that directives for restructuring will be issued within a week.

Former board members like Kazi Hayat and Abdul Jalil expect the changes but haven't received official notifications yet. The only pending submission is Bhoyal by Biplob Haider, awaiting review.

Kaaktaal returns with 'Borshonabeg Concert'

Kaaktaal is set to host their postponed Borshonabeg Concert today at the National Library Auditorium, Dhaka. Initially scheduled for July 17, the concert was delayed due to political unrest. The event will feature the band's monsoon-themed songs alongside other tracks.

Rhythm Revolution organised the concert and intends to raise funds to support those affected by the flood. Lead vocalist Asif Iqbal said, "All of us want to celebrate the monsoon's beauty but more importantly we wish to aid the flood-affected communities going through unfair turmoil."

History beckons Tigers

Since their inaugural Test in 2000, Bangladesh went 1-0 up in a series involving two or more Tests only seven times.

Although they won series against teams like Zimbabwe (twice in 2005 and 2014) and West Indies (twice in 2009 and 2018), Bangladesh miserably failed to hold the lead or extend the margin in the three other instances against top-ranked opponents -- against Australia in 2017 and twice against New Zealand in 2022 and 2023.

Apart from that, Bangladesh won their one-off Test series against Afghanistan and Ireland previously.

"The morale of the players is very, very good, and for obvious reasons," Bangladesh head coach Chandika Hathurusingha said during a press conference on Thursday.

"Beating Pakistan in Pakistan is not an easy task. They are a very strong team. Still, we expect a good fight in the second game as well," the head coach added, mentioning that the Tigers might ring in some changes for the second game, keeping in mind the wicket and overcast condition.

Weather in Rawalpindi has deteriorated in the last few days as there has been persistent rain, forcing both teams to cancel a few practice sessions including the final one on Thursday.

Rain could also play spoilsport as the weather forecast suggests little to heavy rain on four of the five days, including today's opening day.

"We might have a few changes, depending on the condition tomorrow [Friday] when we look at the pitch. Today [Thursday], we didn't get to look at the pitch as it was covered and definitely the weather is slightly different from the last game," Hathurusingha added.

Bangladesh all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan will once again be in the spotlight due to some recent off-field developments surrounding the cricketer, who has seen his teammates rally around him following a murder case filed against the former Awami League lawmaker.

However, Bangladesh team management will hope to get the best out of their talismanic all-rounder to notch their maiden Test series win against Pakistan.

Meanwhile, Pakistan will be desperate to bounce back in the series with a victory and get their home record on the right track after failing to win any of their last nine Tests -- they failed to register any victory on home soil since their 2-0 series win over South Africa in 2021.

After going with an all-pace attack in the first Test, the hosts named leg-spinner Abrar Ahmed and left-arm pacer Mir Hamza in their 12-member squad for the game, dropping premier pacer Shaheen Shah Afridi who has been allowed to spend time with his new-born son and family.

mother Masuma.

At another hearing on the same case, former commerce minister Tipu Munshi was placed on a four-day remand.

In another case, a Dhaka court placed Major General (sacked) Ziaul Ahsan on a five-day fresh remand.

He is accused in a case filed with Adabor Police Station over the murder of a garment worker named Rubel.

Ziaul, the former director general of National Telecommunication Monitoring Centre, was placed on 18 days of remand in three other murder cases.

Former lawmaker Sadek Khan was placed on a five-day fresh remand in another case filed with Adabor Police Station over the killing of Jakir Hossain, 29.

On August 25, he was placed on a four-day remand in a case filed with Mohammadpur Police Station for the killing of truck driver Sujan.

Hasina faces 6 more cases

Hasina and 37 others were sued over the death of Jakir Hossain Rana on August 5 during the Anti-discrimination Student Movement.

His father Jamal Uddin yesterday lodged the case at Sreepur Police Station. In the case statement, he mentioned that some police and BGB personnel at the behest of Hasina and several other accused opened fire, leaving his son killed.

Manju Mia, father of slain Rahmat Mia, filed another murder case at the same police station accusing Hasina and 60 others. He alleged that some police and BGB members on the instructions of Hasina and several other accused fired bullets, killing his son on August 5.

Another murder case was filed at Basan Police Station against former PM Hasina and 154 others.

Pornima Begum, wife of Nazrul Islam, 32, who was killed on July 20 during the quota reform protest, lodged the case on Tuesday.

In Dhaka, Hasina and 87 others were sued over the death of Nadimul Hasan Elem, 25, in Dhaka's Sutrapur on July 19 during a protest.

His mother Kismot Ara yesterday filed the case with the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Tariqul Islam.

After recording the complainant's statement, the magistrate asked the officer-in-charge of Sutrapur Police Station to register the complaint as a first information report (FIR).

In Brahmanbaria, a murder case was filed against Hasina and 57 others over the killing of Zahirul Islam, 35, during a clash on March 27, 2021, between police and demonstrators protesting Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's visit to Bangladesh.

His elder brother Babul Miah on Wednesday night lodged the case at Brahmanbaria Sadar Police Station, said Mohammad Mozaffar Hossain, OC of the station.

According to the case statement, several former ministers and other accused ordered the law enforcers to use firearms against the protesters, which led to the death of Zahirul.

treatment at the police hospital, many with injuries to the leg and head, but they were recovering well. An injured student coordinator was also receiving treatment at the hospital.

Nurjahan spoke to injured police officers in the hospital's surgery department and enquired about their conditions.

The health adviser also highlighted the government's efforts to provide specialised care for those blinded during the uprising. Many victims lost one or both eyes, she said

The adviser said the government sent a list of patients with eye injuries to the Sheba Foundation, a US-based organisation. It agreed to send doctors to Bangladesh as soon as possible, she said.

The facilities where the victims will be treated include the Ispahani Islamia Eye Institute and Hospital, the National Institute of Ophthalmology & Hospital (NIOH), and the Chittagong Eye Infirmary and Training Complex, according to the adviser.

She said many people sustained severe leg injuries, with some requiring amputations.

"We are in talks with various donor agencies, including the World Bank, to bring in a team of doctors from abroad for advanced treatment," the adviser said.

Exim Bank freed from the grip of Mazumder the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit's order to freeze his bank accounts and his family members.

He, however, remains the chairman of the private bank owners' forum Bangladesh Association of Banks since 2009, a position he leveraged to extract benefits from the previous Awami League regime of 15 years.

Mazumder, also the chairman of garment exporter Nassa Group, exerted his influence to change critical policies for the banking sector such that it favoured his businesses. He also took loans bypassing rules and regulations, according to people with knowledge of the matter.

For instance, at the 654th board meeting of Janata Bank in 2021, a Tk 261 crore interest waiver facility was approved for two concerns of Mazumder's Nassa Group: Nassa Taipei Spinners and Nassa Spinners.

The central bank initially rejected the facility as Janata approved the waiver violating banking norms but later walked back on the decision.

To ensure his access to the power centre, he would collect funds from banks and personally hand the cheque over to the former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, according to the managing directors of banks who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

The new board was constituted as per section 45 of the Bank Companies Act, 1991 to protect the interests of depositors and ensure good governance, said the BB letter to the Exim Bank managing director.

As of last year, Exim Bank's total outstanding loans stood at Tk 46,937.63 crore and defaulted loans of Tk 1,629.46 crore, as per data from the central bank. However, bank insiders said the actual volume of bad loans is much higher than that.

Md. Nazrul Islam Swapan, Md. Nurul Amin and Anjan Kumar Saha were retained on the new board. Swapan, who is a sponsor-director, holds 3.54 percent shares of the bank, while Saha holds 2 percent shares. Amin, also a sponsor-director, holds 2 percent shares.

Two new independent directors -- SM Rezaul Karim, executive director of the central bank, and Khandaker Mamun, a chartered accountant -- were added to the new board.

The previous government had decided to merge another crisis-hit Padma Bank with Exim Bank, a move that faced widespread criticism from different corners and was eventually put on hold.

Earlier, the BB reconstituted the boards of National Bank, Islami Bank Bangladesh, Social Islami Bank, Global Islami Bank, Union Bank and United Commercial Bank.

The central bank plans to reconstitute the board of more ailing banks next week.

1,369 pro-AL bots

election be held under the current government."

But why would anyone make such comments so long after the election, and that too, on a completely unrelated, non-political post?

Researchers found that a network of 1,369 fake Facebook accounts was responsible for over 21,000 comments across various Facebook pages. These comments, often posted repeatedly on unrelated posts, praised the AL and criticised the BNP, especially leading up to and following the 12th parliamentary election on January 7 this year.

The bot network mainly targeted posts containing specific political keywords but occasionally made errors, leading to comments on irrelevant topics.

"However, they sometimes made errors, particularly with terms that, when written in Bangla script, coincidentally contained the letters corresponding to 'EC' [Election Commission]. For instance, in the case of bdnews24.com, an article about color printers mentioned 'Machine Identification Code (MIC)'. The bots mistakenly identified the 'IC' in 'MIC' as 'EC' when transliterated into Bangla, leading them to flood the post with hundreds of comments. The study revealed several such instances of these bot blunders," the dismislab report said.

The investigation also revealed that most of the bot profiles shared common traits, such as restricted privacy settings, stolen profile pictures, and minimal friend counts -- features consistent with political bots.

This discovery sheds light on the growing issue of Coordinated Inauthentic Behavior (CIB) on social media platforms, raising concerns about the manipulation of public discourse in Bangladesh.

Court issues

ACC Public Prosecutor Mahmud Hossain Jahangir moved the petition on behalf of the ACC.

In the application, Jahangir said the former ministers and lawmakers, who have graft allegations against their names, were trying to flee the country. So, a travel ban is needed to prevent them from leaving the country.

The ACC informed the court that an investigation is underway into the allegations that they all amassed huge amounts of money through illegal means during their tenure.

The judge sent a copy of the order to the special superintendent of police (Immigration) of the Special Branch for the next course of action.

Telegram boss free but charged and held in France

AFP, Paris

Telegram chief Pavel Durov was out on bail yesterday after four days of detention in France. However, he has been banned from leaving the country as he faces a possible trial related to illegal content carried on his messaging app.

Russian-born Durov, dressed in black and wearing dark glasses, walked briskly out of the Paris court house late Wednesday into a waiting car after being charged but allowed to go free under judicial supervision.

Durov, 39, was charged on several counts of failing to curb extremist and illegal content on the popular messaging app which now has over 900 million followers but has become increasingly controversial.

His lawyer David-Olivier Kaminski said it was "absurd" to suggest Durov could be implicated in any crime committed on the app.

Durov was arrested at Le Bourget airport outside Paris late Saturday and questioned in subsequent days by investigators.

The charges concern alleged crimes involving an organised group, including "complicity in the administration of an online platform to enable an illicit transaction".

This charge alone could see him jailed for up to 10 years and fined 500,000 euros if convicted.

Israeli soldiers take position during an army operation in Tulkarm in the north of the occupied West Bank yesterday. Israel on Wednesday launched a large-scale operation in the occupied West Bank where the military said it killed Palestinian fighters, as the nearly 11-month-old war on Gaza showed no signs of abating.

Constructive talks held with China: US

AFP, Beijing

US President Joe Biden is looking forward to talks with Xi Jinping in the "coming weeks", top White House aide Jake Sullivan told the Chinese leader yesterday as they met for rare talks in Beijing.

Sullivan, the first US national security advisor to visit China since 2016, met Xi as he wrapped up three days of talks in Beijing which also saw him sit down with Foreign Minister Wang Yi and other high-ranking officials.

His visit came as China was embroiled in security rows with US allies Japan and the Philippines.

Sullivan told Xi during a meeting yesterday in Beijing's ornate Great Hall of the People that Biden "looks forward to engaging with you again in the coming weeks".

"President Biden is committed to responsibly managing this consequential relationship to ensure that competition does not veer into conflict or confrontation, and to work together where our interests align," he said.

Chinese state media said Xi told Sullivan that in spite of "great changes", China and the US could still enjoy good ties.

"China's commitment to the goal of stable, healthy, and sustainable development of China-US relations hasn't changed," Xi said.

"We hope that the US will work with China to meet each other halfway," he added, according to CCTV.

Sullivan told reporters at the US embassy that the talks with Chinese officials had lasted for 14 hours, describing the discussions as "constructive, candid, substantive".

The Ukraine war came up during the talks, but Sullivan said that both sides had not reached "any particular plan".

"I can't say that we did make progress on that issue," he said.

The talks did not touch on the upcoming US election, but Sullivan said that Vice President Kamala Harris wanted to maintain "open lines of communication" with China.

On Wednesday, Sullivan and top diplomat Wang had discussed plans for their leaders to talk in the coming weeks.

They also clashed over China's increasingly assertive approach in disputed maritime regions.

The officials agreed to hold a call between the two sides' theatre commanders "in the near future", a readout from the White House said.

Sullivan also raised the importance of "freedom of navigation" in the South China Sea, where China and the Philippines have clashed in recent months, and "stability" in the Taiwan Strait, Washington said.

'S Korea's climate goals not enough'

AFP, Seoul

South Korea's Constitutional Court yesterday uled that much of the country's climate goals were unconstitutional, handing a landmark victory to young environmental activists, who wept for joy on the court steps.

The first such case in Asia, brought by children and teenagers who named an embryo as a lead plaintiff, claimed that South Korea's legally binding climate commitments were insufficient and unmet, violating their constitutionally guaranteed human rights.

The court ruled that the government's limited climate targets violate the constitution as they do "not sufficiently protect the basic rights of the people," the legal representatives of the plaintiffs said after the hearing.

In 2021, South Korea made a legally binding commitment to reduce carbon emissions by 290 million tons by 2030 -- and to achieve net-zero carbon emissions by 2050. To meet this goal, the country needs to reduce emissions by 5.4 percent every year from 2023 -- a target they have so far failed to meet. As a result of the ruling, Seoul will now have to revise its climate goals, said a lawyer for the plaintiffs

Gujarat floods toll rises to 28

AFP, Ahmedabad

Intense monsoon rains and floods in India's Gujarat state killed at least 28 people in the past three days, some drowning and others hit by falling trees, government officials said.

The weather department warned more heavy rain is expected yesterday in the western coastal state.

Rivers have burst their banks and more than 30,000 people fled their homes.

The state government said late Wednesday that 13 people had died from drowning and the rest from houses or trees collapsing on them.

The Indian Express newspaper said 35 people had died so far across the state.

Some 1,856 people were rescued by disaster and army officials deployed for relief operations.

village, said, "Over the last three days, I've developed burning rashes on my hands and feet. I've tried applying some generic ointment I bought from a local shop, but to no avail."

According to the Lakshmipur Civil Surgeon's Office, 58 patients were hospitalised with diarrhoea across the districts in 24 hours till yesterday.

Our correspondents found similar situations in many places when they visited Noakhali, Lakshmipur, Feni, and Cumilla.

In Feni, many were suffering from diarrhoea and skin diseases in Chhagalnaiya upazila.

As many areas in the upazila were still submerged, the stranded people could not reach health facilities.

Hosne-Ara-Begum, a resident of Gopal union, who took his 14-year-old grandson to a temporary health camp at Chhagalnaiya Pilot High School, said there were rashes all over his hands.

"Rashed never had skin diseases. Prolonged exposure to floodwaters gave him the rashes."

From the same union, twelve-year-old Saima, who also got rashes, could not move to the temporary health camp like Hosne Ara did as her village was still submerged and she had no access to transport facility.

Feni Civil Surgeon Shihab Rana said, "We treated 603 patients with waterborne diseases across the district in the 24 hours till Wednesday."

In Cumilla, Wahedunnesa, 70, a resident of Isapura who has been in the shelter centre at Bhorasa High School in Burichang since August 23, said she has been suffering from diarrhoea and cold for the last four days.

It's difficult for her to use the toilet, which everyone at the shelter shares.

There were sufficient stocks of oral saline and water purifying tablets at the shelter, according to its in-charge, Monirul Islam, reports our Cumilla correspondent.

According to the Cumilla Civil Surgeon's Office, 81 patients were hospitalised with diarrhoea across the districts in 24 hours till yesterday. A total of 502 patients were treated for waterborne diseases since August 23.

In addition, 130 patients in Noakhali and 58 in Lakshmipur were treated for diarrhoea in the districts over the last 24 hours.

52 LIVES LOST SO FAR

At least 52 people were killed in flash floods that began on the night of August 22, triggered by heavy rains and an onrush of water from upstream.

Around 10,72,579 families remain stranded in 11 districts, said a press release from the Chief Adviser office, citing the Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief.

Of the deceased, 14 died in Cumilla, 17 in Feni, six in Chattogram, three in Cox's Bazar, eight in Noakhali, and one each in Brahmanbaria, Lakshmipur, Khagrachhari, and Moulvibazar.

Additionally, 54,80,463 people from 492 unions under 68 upazilas in Feni, Cumilla, Chattogram, Khagrachhari, Noakhali, Moulvibazar, Habiganj, Brahmanbaria, Sylhet, Lakshmipur, and Cox's Bazar have been affected by the floods.

Govt to take reform ideas from parties for whitening black money and bringing down the cost of performing hajj to a reasonable level.

DRAFTS APPROVED

The advisory council approved in principle the draft of the "Father of the Nation's Family-Members' Security (Repeal) Ordinance, 2024" as it decided to repeal the "Father of the Nation's Family-Members' Security Act, 2009".

Once the ordinance is gazetted, Bangabandhu's family members will not get special security.

The home ministry's Public Security Division placed the draft of the ordinance before the advisory council after it was vetted by the Legislative and Parliamentary Affairs Division.

"The context [of repealing the ordinance] is that this [interim] government is an outcome of the Anti-discrimination Movement. The security agencies do not feel that this special security system is needed. Besides, it was considered as a discriminatory law. The law will be repealed on this ground," Rizwana said.

The Father of the Nation's Family-Members Security Act was enacted during the rule of the Awami League in 2009.

In 2015, a gazette was issued in line with the act granting lifelong state security and free utility services to Bangabandhu's family members.

The advisory council also gave the final approval to the draft of the "Special Security Force (Amendment) Ordinance, 2024" to ensure the security of the chief adviser.

HAJJ PACKAGE

Rizwana said the government is working on bringing down the cost of hajj packages to a reasonable level as there is a syndicate behind the rise in the cost.

Replying to a query, the adviser said, "It is not possible to say how much the cost can be reduced or how much the cost will be. However, our initial assessment indicated that the cost can be cut."

OTHER DECISIONS

Talking about some other agendas of the advisory council meeting, Rizwana said many export-oriented industries incurred losses due to the ongoing floods. The government has taken some measures to provide assistance to the workers in this sector, she said.

The environment adviser said the government has already started taking necessary steps to keep the prices of essentials within the affordability of the people.

She said the interim government will inform the media about the activities carried out by the ministries during the first month in office.

Replying to a question about whether actions should be taken against those officials who are still holding important posts after being appointed by the previous Awami League government, Rizwana said good officials are needed to run a government.

"There is no need to take immediate decisions regarding the efficient officials. If there is any specific allegation of corruption against any official, the authorities concerned will take action.

"How would we proceed with our regular works if we adopted the policy of not retaining any officials who were holding good posts in the administration of the previous government?"

The adviser said the government will give a reception to the Bangladesh under-20 football team for becoming the champions for the first time in the SAFF under-20 Men's Championship.

The advisory council also congratulated the national cricket team, the Bangladesh Cricket Board and the other people concerned on the team's win against Pakistan in the first Test match in Rawalpindi on August 25.

BSEC freezes

Post-flood recovery will be challenging

Flood leaves victims with a whole new set of problems

As floodwaters slowly begin to recede, a grim reality is emerging across the 73 upazilas of 11 districts that have been affected over the last 10 days or so. The flood has left behind a trail of destruction—broken homes, crumbling roads, collapsed bridges, toppled electric poles, public facilities lying in ruins. The scars of the disaster are evident everywhere. Many have returned to their homes, or what's left of them, while others, whose villages are still under water, remain in the shelters. An uncertain future awaits them all. The thought of rebuilding their lives from the ground up can be daunting, yet this is what they must prepare for.

According to an estimate, at least 52 people have died in the flood. The human toll, tragic as it is, is just one component of the widespread devastation caused by it as survivors now must focus on the painful process of recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction, with little help guaranteed. Many have lost their homes, livestock, and other belongings, and will need financial and institutional support to get back on their feet. A big part of the recovery also involves regaining livelihoods, especially for farmers, fishers, and other small earners. The government and private donors must ensure steady provision of not just food and clothes but also cash support, at least until some recovery is achieved. Another focus area is their health needs. Many in flood-affected areas are suffering from waterborne diseases including diarrhoea, skin infections, cold-fever, etc. So, ensuring adequate medical care is vital.

Unfortunately, this is proving to be difficult because of the flooding of many health facilities, including the 250-bed Feni General Hospital, that left them severely compromised. The Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief has reportedly deployed 619 medical teams across 11 districts. But ensuring the full resumption of local health complexes is crucial for uninterrupted care. There are many other areas of rebuilding and reconstruction that the government also needs to focus on urgently. While we are yet to know the full extent of the damage caused by the flood, initial estimates are quite alarming: 6,542 kilometres of roads damaged, and 1,066 bridges and culverts ruined. Highways in affected regions are in no better shape. Many utility structures have been destroyed. There has been widespread littering, with piles of garbage seen in many areas.

All these things will require prompt and proper interventions. We are told that rescue and relief activities have been hampered because of coordination problems, exacerbated by the ongoing administrative chaos caused by transfer and other issues. The absence of upazila chairmen and other public representatives is also causing problems and will likely continue to do so for some more time. This is all the more reason why the government must double down on ongoing efforts, ensuring full cooperation of all relevant state agencies and officials, so that flood-affected communities have an easier go of it going forward. It must repair and resume all public facilities without delay, and must help the affected in every way it can.

Councillor crisis needs to be resolved

Residents must not be denied essential services any longer

Service disruptions across various wards of Dhaka North City and Dhaka South City—primarily due to the absence of their councillors—are causing immense suffering for the residents. According to a report by Prothom Alo, 66 out of 75 ward councillors in Dhaka South are not attending their offices, while 11 out of 54 councillors in Dhaka North are similarly absent. This has led to a breakdown of services and many attendant complications. The uncertainty surrounding absent or absconding councillors will continue unless the authorities take decisive actions.

The ward councillor offices in Dhaka provide 14 types of services. Key among them are birth and death registration as well as issuance of various certificates such as citizenship, character, inheritance (warish), income, marriage or family membership, eligibility for elderly and disability allowances, etc. A councillor's office also handles attestations and no-objection certificates (where applicable), and signs off as a verifier for national identity cards and voter lists. Additionally, the councillor is responsible for overseeing mosquito control and sanitation works and the distribution of TCB products. The fact that these vital services are being hampered at this critical time for the nation is extremely disconcerting.

Some of the councillor offices came under attack around the time of the fall of the Awami League government, which not only damaged these offices and their equipment but also destroyed important documents, many likely belonging to citizens. The complexities this may cause for people seeking services in the future remain unclear. Many people are already showing up at the ward offices daily for various services, only to return home dejected. Unless this issue is immediately addressed, people will continue to be denied essential services, leading to a huge backlog of pending paperwork and potentially more problems in the future.

Under the circumstances, the authorities need to urgently determine why the councillors are absent and ensure resumption of services. As local government experts have suggested, councillors can be given a week's time to return: those who do can be assigned multiple wards at once, while those who do not can be subjected to legal consequences. Additionally, alternative arrangements can be made, such as having the office of the regional executive officer provide some of the services. However, none of these solutions are permanent. Therefore, the government should consider a process for replacing absent ward councillors.

The interim government must not fail

KAS MURSHID

We now have another opportunity to get things right and the challenge is to manage aspirations and expectations. We want everything—safe roads, cheap and quality health services, good schools, inexpensive electricity, low inflation, zero corruption, professional police services, an accountable administration and judiciary, rule of law, social justice, jobs, etc. The list is endless. And we want all this right away! Our impulse for instant gratification runs strong as we righteously scream for the resignation, arrest, incarceration, or even "phashi" of anyone and for anything, expecting the government to immediately deliver.

INTERIM GOVERMENT

VISUAL: ALIZA RAHMAN

Unfortunately, there are no quick fixes. The challenges facing us are complex and will require time and effort. Time, however, is not unlimited. For one thing, the current mood of victory and jubilation will soon give way to recrimination, infighting, and impatience. As these intensify, our poor advisers will find themselves beleaguered, and only the toughest will keep going while others will decide to leave. It would be naive to think that all the major stakeholders will keep their peace and hold their tongues for very long. The chaos has not subsided yet; we are ruled by emotion, instinct, and plain disregard for rules, norms, and values—these have been the worst casualty of a long period of abject disregard for the rule of law. In the meantime, vultures are circling the skies and have begun to sweep down upon media houses, banks, and vantage positions from which economic rents can be extracted.

Same old wine?

Initial signs show that the playbook of governance has not shifted very much. Just as top BNP leaders were once accused of setting buses on fire, so now we see top AL leaders being accused of killings occurring even in the remotest of districts. The horrific scenes we see at our court premises are no different, even though we have a neutral, non-political government in place. Nobody is talking about judiciary reforms before calling for the annulment of constitutional amendments. This is a problem for a new Bangladesh.

This is our last chance to usher democracy into Bangladesh.

What is the interim government to do? It must be pragmatic and realistic. It must carefully assess what reforms it can deliver and what must await a democratically elected government. It should, however, lay out a concrete plan of action indicating its priority areas. We have discussed reforms for many years, even decades so an action plan ought not to pose any serious challenges.

At the very outset, the new government should send out strong powerful signals that indicate its broad commitment to democratic practice, judicial reforms, rule of law, and intolerance to corruption. Perhaps the most important signal it should send out is our belief in an inclusive and just socio-economic system under an overall liberal democratic-secular framework. These signals remain weak.

Priorities

The first question is how do we prioritise our interim goals? Should we establish a maximal set of goals or a minimal set of critical goals? Or perhaps strike a note somewhere between the two?

The second, and far more important question is, how do we implement reforms, especially institutional ones? We have almost zero experience here, and so must rediscover the wheel. We could learn from the experience of other countries, such as Singapore, that made the transition. Their experience is more recent. They too were a British colony like us and have inherited similar systems of governance, and more importantly, they have been able to modify and build upon those systems to create superb outcomes. However, following another South Asian country in this regard is not advisable.

We should simply use our common sense and be ready to make mistakes, learn from mistakes, and then move forward. This will require setting up a task force for each department or institution to draw up plans after careful study and discussion. Consultants from, say the Singapore government and international agencies, can aid the task forces, which will operate within a specific time frame. We need to restructure, get rid of obsolete positions, put in place new positions, clearly identify qualifications and experience for recruitment and promotion, have a proper system for staff evaluation, re-examine the system of salaries and incentives, and place special emphasis on building a strong HR department, a strong and reliable system of financial accounts, and a dependable audit mechanism. Third-party monitoring of HR and finance would be crucial. While some of these mechanisms exist, they should be reformatted and revamped. Anyone who has worked in government will know how intractable these quite basic governance prerequisites are likely to be.

We need to start the reform journey by initially picking one sector to pilot out ideas and approaches and throw sufficient resources at the project to prevent failures. If we can fix one institution, we can scale up quickly. The most difficult sector nor the least difficult one should be chosen. An "average" sort of sector will do fine. The set of priority reforms must reflect and inform our overarching goal: to bring in a vibrant democracy with all the necessary components required for its success.

For instance, a free, credible, and independent media is crucial to fight the war against unscrupulous social media, fake news, and false narratives while a powerful and independent election commission is needed for credible elections. The key question is whether some form of interim arrangement will need to continue. If so, how will such an arrangement be constituted?

We all understand that fundamental reforms must be carried out in public administration, the judiciary, the police, NBR, state-owned banks and industries, and within political parties. The interim government may not have sufficient time to see all these through. They may want to set out a road map, begin the process earnestly, and ensure that all political parties commit themselves to the reforms publicly and through their manifestoes. They can start by implementing the appropriate legal frameworks after due changes, modifications, and refinements.

For democracy to work, a sector that should be addressed head-on is the reform of political parties and the need to abide by a code of conduct. All of us have ideas about what such a code might involve, and the current government should be well-positioned to come up with one, obviously after discussion with stakeholders.

Some policy reforms as opposed to institutional reforms are significant low-hanging fruits, which only require a few signatures to change. The separation of the executive from the judiciary should be top on the list. Reforms to the Bangladesh Bank charter to ensure its autonomy should also be relatively easy. Various crony-friendly rules in the banking and financial sectors could be changed. In addition, the autonomy of various institutions in the public sector including the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies could be re-established and returned to its status quo ante. Subtle benefits given to crony capitalists in the guise of tax forgiveness, subsidies, and duty waivers should be weeded out too. Our duties and taxes must be realigned to promote diversified exports and employment.

> We do not want to witness another mass upheaval, another bout of violence to settle scores or another political crisis—all because of the greed and arrogance of our rulers and their cronies, and their desire to rule forever. Nor do we want to witness the beginning of another set of authoritarian rulers and despots.

Conspiracy

The student-led uprising was undoubtedly native. However, various analysts including Jeffrey D Sachs have spoken of possible US involvement and infiltration of the movement. Such a serious allegation will require a thorough investigation.

We should not have any qualms about forging a better relationship with the West. This relationship, however, would only be meaningful if it goes well beyond the usual Western rhetoric urging democracy, good governance, labour rights, and so on designed to expand its own empire. We have had enough of that sort of advice. We have strong developmental aspirations to follow in the footsteps of the Asian Tigers. We need access to Western markets, transfer of technology, and assistance in capacity building in science, engineering, technology, and AI. We should have at least one world-class institute of technology within the next five years as well as massive investments in infrastructure. Help us with these and you will have our friendship and access to a potentially huge market of 170 million people.

End note

This is our last chance to usher democracy into Bangladesh. Too many lives have been lost in its pursuit since 1947 when we became free from colonial rule. It was thwarted time and again by hostile forces within and without. We cannot afford to waste this chance again. We do not want to witness another mass upheaval, another bout of violence to settle scores or another political crisis—all because of the greed and arrogance of our rulers and their cronies, and their desire to rule forever. Nor do we want to witness the beginning of another set of authoritarian rulers and despots.

We are lucky to have Professor Yunus to lead the charge. I think he is the only person in the country who can unite us and find a way for us to resolve our differences so that we can emerge as a strong democratic country with a vibrant economy. Let us show the world that we can be a Muslim-majority state with a strong democracy, continue our great economic journey inclusively and develop our own model of a just society. Professor Yunus enjoys tremendous international goodwill, which Bangladesh needs at this critical juncture.

Our enemies are waiting for us to fail. We cannot afford to oblige them. My sombre warning to all is: failure now would leave the door open to foreign intervention and subsequent loss of sovereignty and independence.

INTERNATIONAL DAY OF THE VICTIMS OF ENFORCED DISAPPEARANCES

How could we have descended to such depravity?

Extrajudicial killings and disappearances should never reappear

THE THIRD VIEW

Mahfuz Anam
is the editor and publisher of The Daily Star.

MAHFUZ ANAM

We congratulate Prof Yunus's government for joining the UN treaty on enforced disappearances. We also welcome the formation, last Tuesday, of an inquiry commission to investigate extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances and to report within 45 days. Headed by a retired high court judge, the commission will investigate the activities of the police, Rapid Action Battalion (Rab), Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB), Criminal Investigation Department (CID), Special Branch (SB), National Security Intelligence (NSI) and the military's Directorate General of Forces Intelligence (DGFI). Instead of working for the protection of the state, government, or society, these intelligence agencies became extensions of the government's policy of quelling dissent, obliterating the opposition and controlling the independent media.

This is one of the most urgent, important and pro-people initiative that the interim government could have taken, and we congratulate the relevant adviser or advisors for this initiative. We, from the media and this particular newspaper, wish the commission resounding success. We need not only to do justice to the victims but also ensure that it does not reoccur.

It is the latter task that engages us more. The practice of using security agencies to extend ruling party domination and especially to destroy the opposition is, sadly, not something that was started by Awami League. Although it can be said to have reached its zenith with the widespread practice of enforced disappearances and extrajudicial killing under Sheikh Hasina's rule, it began with the entry of the armed forces into direct politics when Bangabandhu was assassinated. We know for a fact that when BNP was being organised in the late seventies, several security agencies were used to cajole, convince and compel politicians and civil society members to join it. This was followed by Gen Ershad's nearly decade-long rule, during which he also used them to form his party and control the opposition. We all expected that this notorious practice would cease with the restoration of democracy and representative government in 1991.

Regrettably, this practice continued under the elected governments of both BNP and AL, reaching its most ignominious apex in the attempted assassination of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on August 21, 2004, in which security agencies were clearly and elaborately involved. A total of 23 people, including the head of AL's women wing, were killed.

Thus, over the last three decades—since 1991, when we expected transparent, people-centred politics to replace behind-the-scenes manipulation—the involvement of security agencies increased in proportion to the political leadership of the day losing public trust. Sheikh Hasina's 15-year rule stands as a lesson in how a political party of AL's legacy, reach and organisation became increasingly dependent on security agencies. This dependency included allowing them into the inner workings of party operations, such as vetting candidates for nearly all tiers of the party, to the extent that aspiring leaders at the union and district levels sought the blessings of security agencies to achieve their ambitions.

ILLUSTRATION: BIPLOB CHAKROBORTY

Many factors contributed to Sheikh Hasina's downfall, but perhaps the most heart-wrenching was, especially after 2010, the practice of picking people up from their homes and streets and then making them disappear for months or years without the slightest need to inform anyone—including their families—about their fate. Sometimes, their dead bodies would appear in the most unlikely places. Sometimes, they would return home but remain silent for fear of further repercussions. But most often, they would just disappear for weeks, months, or years, never to return.

Just imagine the agony of their loved ones. Death, however cruel, draws the curtain on a tragedy. But disappearances represent a continuous suffering mixed with hope that one day the family will open the door and find their loved one—father, husband, son, friend—miraculously returned. Each knock on the door became both a flicker of hope and a sense of deep disappointment. Imagine this going on for years.

One of the fundamental responsibilities of a modern state is to ensure the safety of life and property—we are leaving aside the question of liberty for the moment. This assurance was not provided in Bangladesh under Sheikh Hasina's regime, especially since 2010. According to Odhikar, a human rights organisation that maintained a well verified record of disappearances—despite facing significant challenges, including jailing of its chief, who is now an adviser in Prof Yunus's cabinet—there were a total of 708 victims of enforced disappearances between 2009 and June 2024. Of these 708 victims, 57 percent returned alive, 13 percent were found dead and nothing has been known about the remaining 30 percent. The practice of "picking up" victims from homes or streets was carried as follows: 31 percent by Rab, 30 percent by the Detective Branch (DB), 22 percent by DGFI (mostly accompanied by Rab) and 14 percent by the police.

According to a report by Zyma Islam, published on August 30, 2022, at least 522 individuals became victims of enforced disappearances between 2009 and 2018. Most survivors who returned home never spoke about their experiences for fear of reliving their hellish ordeals. However, a few who did speak confirmed our worst fears. One said, "They attached two crocodile clips to my two ear lobes and when switched on, sent electric shock damaging my eardrums during interrogation." Another said his hands were cuffed behind his back throughout his detention, which varied from two months to two and a half years. According to the detainees, the cells were 2.5 feet wide, 4 feet long and 5 feet high—too small to lie down or stand up. It was always half-sitting or half-lying. Such cruelty resembles medieval torture. Despite being underground, dark and without windows, the detainees were blindfolded throughout their captivity, even for basic needs and showers.

The stories of "Aynaghar" (House of Mirrors) represent another level of torture and cruelty that we have recently been exposed to. These constitute gross violations of human rights and reveal the existence of secret prisons that are completely unmonitored and devoid of legal oversight. They were run totally arbitrarily and at the whims of their officers. A retired army officer and a Supreme Court lawyer were kept in such secret prisons for eight years and would likely have remained there if not for the fall of the regime. Mikel Changma, a leader from the Chattogram Hill Tracts area, did not see sunlight for five years (2019-2024) of his confinement.

While the inquiry commission on disappearances is expected to reveal its report within 45 days, immediate steps should be taken to allow families and rights activists to visit all 23 prisons that the DGFI has committed to opening to the public. All those who have been cruelly and illegally detained must be returned to their families immediately.

We must never fall into such depths of cruelty and inhumanity again. Enforced disappearances and extrajudicial killings are a shame on our dreams from the Liberations War and must be eradicated forever. Too much power and arbitrariness have been allowed to security agencies in the name of fighting extremism. We hope the commission will lay down a clear legal framework so that nobody is made to suffer as we saw in the last 15 years.

Sometimes, their dead bodies would appear in the most unlikely places. Sometimes, they would return home but remain silent for fear of further repercussions. M MAROOF ZAMAN

On December 4, 2017, around 6:45pm, I left my home and took my car to go to the airport to receive my younger daughter. As I started driving, I saw two motorcycles following me. I was aware that I was being monitored for the past year. I used to write a lot in the international media about the unequal agreements signed between India and Bangladesh, about the failures of the government and the injustices done by them.

I also wrote against enforced disappearances and extrajudicial killings but never did I imagine that I would be a victim one day.

From the time and turns the microbus took to reach my place of confinement, I could guess that I was taken to some place in the cantonment. First, they took me to a torture cell, beat me up severely, and hurled abuses at me. I told them to stop but they didn't. Then someone asked me, "Are you Maroof Zaman?" I replied, "Yes." He then asked, "Are you 'Banglar Bir'?" I said, "Yes, that's the name I use in the websites." They then beat me up again and took me to another small room.

I was kept there for four and a half months. Every three to four days, they used to come and torture me. They used to bring printouts of my writings and abuse me for what I wrote. They even called me a traitor. I protested by saying, "No, I am not a traitor. I wrote nothing against the state, I wrote to protect the interests of the country, I wrote against the injustices done by the government."

There were different levels of torture, namely grade one, grade two, and grade three. I was subjected to grade two level torture. Grade three torture means severe physical torture. While some young people may survive it, it is difficult for someone my age to survive such tortures. They told me that since I would not survive third-degree torture, they would instead give me injections, which would have severe impacts. They also used a high-powered light bulb and harsh noises to prevent me from sleeping.

On January 29, 2018, I heard a bullet shot and then someone was brought to my next room. Later, I heard someone saying: "He is no more." Another person was tortured through waterboarding. I didn't know what happened to him later.

Sometimes, I heard people saying, "Guard Shabdhan." This is a phrase used in the army by the guards to salute an officer. One day, I asked them to change my water bottles, as they were extremely dirty. A young man came with two water bottles, with the word "Shena" written on them. Also, on the first day of my abduction, when they handcuffed me, I could see that it was made of stainless steel, which is used by the security forces. I became certain that I was confined within the cantonment.

They hit me so much on my face that my teeth were broken. There was puss and blood coming out from my swollen gums. I asked them to take me to a doctor and get an X-ray done, but they rejected my appeal. I still have no sense in my gums and the nerves in one of my arms are severely damaged from the excessive beatings. I told them, "I will die if you don't give me treatment." They replied, "Die, we want you to die. We won't have to kill you then. You will die from your illness."

I knew I was abducted on the basis of a politically motivated case. Those who abducted me knew my name and were in plainclothes. I was told that I was against the treaty (Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord, 1997). They claimed it was a crime to oppose it. They said, "It means you are against the state. The government runs the state, and the government is the state."

I said they could kill me if they considered asking for workers' rights and the rights of my people a crime. I said, "Amar rokte Banglar pobitro mati snigdho hok" (Let my blood bring peace to the sacred soil of Bengal). I even said if they killed me, my ideals would live on. When I said these, they hit me in the stomach with an object, and eventually took me to a facility.

The facilities are constructed so that a sliver of light enters through an angle only in a few rooms so you can see nothing. No sound from outside can be heard. Towards the end, I fell very ill. In the beginning, I lost a significant amount of weight as I was unable to eat. I was handcuffed, blindfolded tightly, and not allowed to sleep during my time there. I suffered in this manner for a year. Medical examinations had to be conducted on me because I had fallen severely ill. My sodium level and blood pressure had dropped drastically.

One day, I was fastened onto a chair that was capable of rotating at a high speed. I was asked, "Where are your weapons?"

In this way, five years passed there. No information reached me during that time, and speaking to others was not allowed. I did hear the sound of other people talking and felt the presence of other inmates, but I never got to know what happened to them.

On the day of my release, I was asked if I had any personal belongings. At that point, I did not know I was going to be freed. I thought I was going to be killed. I was being taken somewhere in a car while another car was following us and I saw weapons.

I was in the car for several hours, when suddenly a left turn was taken. The man to my right told me not to scream or make a fuss. He asked if I knew my family's number. Then he said, "We're going to release you. Wherever we drop you, you will stay there, for 30 minutes. If you get up before that time, we'll shoot you. Once 30 minutes pass, you will untie yourself, and you will run."

I said nothing. When I opened my blindfold, I saw the light of the world for the first time in years. I saw in a newspaper that the nation was awaiting a new government; I learnt that Sheikh Hasina's government had fallen.

My family was in immense pain. They believed I had passed away, and my funeral was held. I learnt my father who was alive at the time of my capture, was no more.

If it had not been for the student's uprising, the heaviness of the pain for many in a similar situation would not have been relieved. Sheikh Hasina and her accomplices committed heinous acts to create an atmosphere of immense fear. She along with every person who assisted her should be tried. I want them to be punished lawfully so that such heinous acts and such horrifying breaches of human rights, never occur.

I was handcuffed, blindfolded tightly, and not allowed to sleep during my time there. I suffered in this manner for a year. Medical examinations had to be conducted on me because I had fallen severely ill. My sodium level and blood pressure had dropped drastically.

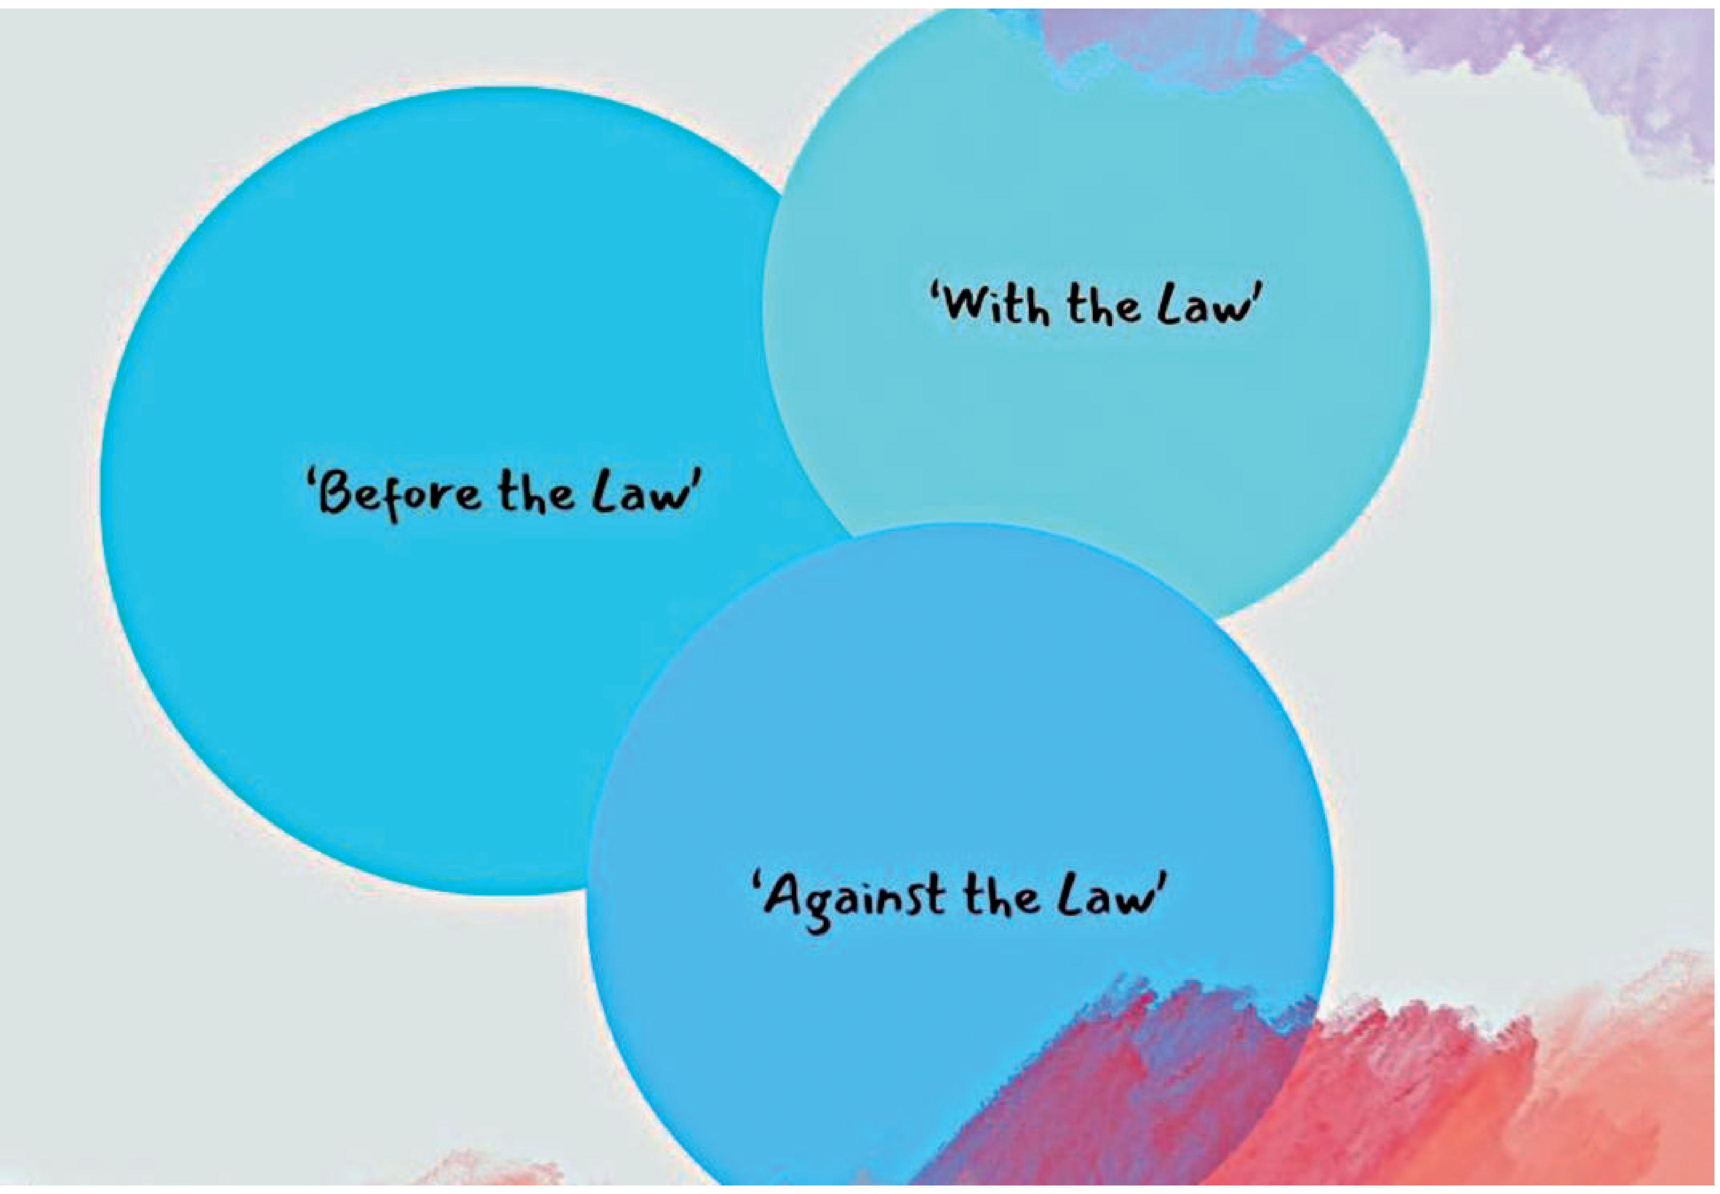
These are abridged excerpts from interviews taken for The Daily Star.

LAW AND SOCIETY

People's understanding of 'Law' during the uprise: A sociolegal analysis

This much is clear - law has very much become part of the everyday conversations. This surge in people's interest in law makes it an apt time for dismantling the colonial legal structures. We need to decolonise our laws to repair the damages done by the previous regime and decolonise our minds to become a truly non-discriminatory, inclusive society. This is something I hope the interim government would consider.

ARPEETA SHAMS MIZAN



The July uprising marks a significant event for our national history not only as a moment of political introspection, but also in terms of appreciating people's perception and understanding of law as a lived experience. The events offer a rich case study of observing people's perception and understanding of law – popularly termed as legal consciousness in sociolegal studies. Observing the popular use of law during the protests can help us understand how law in books differs from law in context, law in society, law in everyday reality (Chua and Engel, 2019).

In this piece, I will discuss three aspects of legal consciousness manifested in the uprising: 1. That the chaos of revolution exposed law as both an anti-people force and a useful instrument for demanding justice, 2. That use of legal language in popular discourse made people agents of producing alternative legalities to counter state-sponsored narratives of law, and 3. That people's attitude throughout the process reflects the colonial violence heavily embedded in people's psyche.

Ewick and Silbey's groundbreaking research (1998) presented three types of legal consciousness: 'before the law'; 'with the law' and 'against the law'. All the three manifest in this movement. 'Before the law' consciousness characterises law's objective to attain justice. The student protest initially started on grounds of equality and fairness in public service opportunities. As the government remained dismissive of students' demands, the movement presented itself as a fight for anti-discrimination, referring to constitutional promises. As the government remained dismissive of students' concerns and became tone-deaf to the gross human rights violations by law enforcement agencies, law appeared as a brute power, exercised unpredictably and resisted by citizens. The cracks appearing in state power put people in 'against the law' legal consciousness.

As the state crackdown caused an overwhelming public outcry, social media flooded with posts condemning the all-out state violence using a sharp legal tone. Until the July uprising, law and legal terminologies did not broadly feature in the daily language people use. Understandably, most of the protesters and netizens were not legal professionals, therefore their use of legal terms is not always theoretically sound, but once you move beyond a doctrinal lens, it provides you with a rich example of legal consciousness. Words like discrimination, citizens, legitimacy, human rights, war crimes, genocide, justice dominated digital discourse. Not just the educated urban bourgeoise, but also the mass people (including those who live hand to mouth) were coopting the legal terms to use Facebook updates, posts, tweets, photo captions into legal strategies. This is a ripe example of 'with the law' legal consciousness, where individuals use law as a tool to their advantage.

People can and do rely on legal authority even when they know little or nothing about formal law (Sarat and Kearns, Law in the Domains of Culture: 1995). Many people while demanding an immediate government step down were not sure what would happen next. Nonetheless, in demanding so, people became agents of alternative legalities and actively created rules that confronted state law. These legalities manifested through disobeying state order of curfew, violating the 2012 Anti-Graffiti Act by claiming back freedom of expression. Once the interim government was formed, academics have examined the validity through doctrinal analysis. However, the legitimacy of the interim government can also be explained using a sociolegal approach which considers law as a subclass of legitimate social order.

The above discussion shows that sociolegal framework of legal consciosuness provides a useful analytical framework to understand what factors influenced people's behaviour and demand for an alternative order during the uprising. Throughout various phases of the movement, divergent ideas of law appeared for people to make sense of their reality. Everyone appreciated law from their subjective lived experience. For the state law enforcement agency, law meant their right to self-defence even if that took excessive use of force. For the protesters law was reclaiming the power of the republic that belonged to the people. For those shot down, perhaps law meant a misplaced trust in the state that the police and fellow citizens would not harm them. For the family members of the killed, law is most likely a false promise made by the state. How these conflicting perceptions reconcile in the coming days is much dependent on the ensuing chaos that is continuing.

I want to wrap up the discussion by touching upon the colonial influences on people's mindset. Given the state's repressive use of law, a wide public mistrust existed against domestic legal mechanisms. In attempting to remedy that mistrust, pockets of individuals appealed to international media and influencers, and some groups of diasporas made petitions to their local counsellors, MPs, senators, and preparing to bring charges against Sheikh Hasina before international judicial bodies like the ICC. While lack of trust in domestic legal mechanism is understandable, these groups' preference for Western/Global North intervention exposes the latent colonial mindset that continues to treat the West as 'saviours' (Mutua 2001). Understanding this mindset is crucial for meaningful change. Cosmetic changes in police uniforms and logos are being considered as a change towards a clean slate. But such superficial reform cannot rectify Bangladesh's suppressive legal culture which is now continuing in the guise of vengeance, mob justice, moral policing of dissenters (e.g. trifling the attacks on minorities while focusing more on Indian media's overexaggerations/suppressing indigenous people's rallies in the CHTs). These actions are 'othering' citizens and continuing the colonial violence.

This much is clear - law has very much become part of the everyday conversations. This surge in people's interest in law makes it an apt time for dismantling the colonial legal structures. We need to decolonise our laws to repair the damages done by the previous regime and decolonise our minds to become a truly non-discriminatory, inclusive society. This is something I hope the interim government would consider.

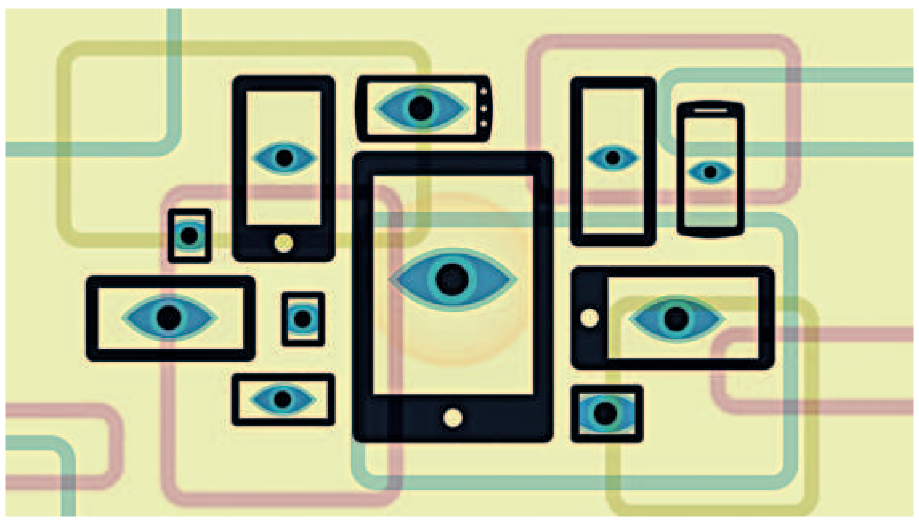
RIGHTS WATCH

Privacy concerns over phone searches

FARHAT LAMIA MOURI



During the quota reform movement in July and early August, reports emerged of police conducting unjustified phone searches and making arrests. In addition to targeting protesters, students and pedestrians were also subjected to such searches and interrogations at numerous checkpoints. Authorities invariably defended these actions as necessary for maintaining national security and public order. However, such measures, lacking appropriate legal justification, raise serious concerns about invasions of right to privacy and potential abuses of power. Indeed, when the law enforcers resort to such searches, it trickles down to the private actors (e.g., various political activists) as well, creating a false sense of authority and justification in doing what is prohibited to quell the opposition.

Despite the need of upholding public order, fundamental human rights cannot be encroached upon. It is crucial to respect the right to privacy as guaranteed by national as well as national laws in order to shield people from capricious and invasive acts of the state.

The right to privacy is a universally recognised fundamental human right. Article 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) asserts, "No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home, or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honor and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks." Similarly, Article 17(1) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) states, "No one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home, or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his honor or reputation."

In Bangladesh, the right to privacy is constitutionally protected under Article 43 of the Constitution of Bangladesh, which guarantees that every citizen has the right to the privacy of their correspondence and other means of communication. Furthermore, the otherwise infamous Cyber Security Act (CSA) 2023 allows a police officer of at least the rank of inspector to seize computers, networks, and data if there is suspicion of a crime under the CSA. The Information and Communication Technology Act, 2006 (ICTA), and the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Act, 2001 (BTRA), provide additional legal frameworks for data and communication inspections. The Bangladesh Police Act of 1861 and the Code of Criminal Procedure (CrPC) provide law enforcement with certain powers to maintain public order and investigate crimes. However, these laws require that searches and seizures be conducted based on reasonable suspicion and often necessitate a warrant issued by a competent authority.

In the case of Mrs. Nilufar Hossain v Bangladesh (2024) it was opined that, "... to have fundamental right to privacy, for example, is not just to have a claim against the State that it refrains from interfering with one's privacy interest, say through searches and seizures, but also an entitlement to positive state action directed towards the protection of one's privacy interests against the interference of third parties, namely through the law of defamation, data security legislation and so forth."

The Supreme Court of Bangladesh has also affirmed the right to privacy in various rulings. For instance, in State and Others v Oli and Others (2019), the Court held that the right to privacy extends to private communications over the phone, and phone companies must ensure the security and confidentiality of citizens' communications. In Aynunnahar Siddiqua and Others v Government of Bangladesh and others (2016), the Court further noted that the right to privacy is fundamental to the freedom of dissent and cautioned against unjust interference under the guise of surveillance.

Despite the need of upholding public order, fundamental human rights cannot be encroached upon. It is crucial to respect the right to privacy as guaranteed by national as well as national laws in order to shield people from capricious and invasive acts of the state.

Pakistan target ‘ruthless’ bowling

AGENCIES

Head coach Jason Gillespie has emphasised the need for Pakistan to “play positive” and be “ruthless” in their bowling against Bangladesh as they aim to win the second and final Test in Rawalpindi, starting today, and square the series.

“We want to go out there and play positive cricket... and with our bowling, we want to be ruthless... ,” said Gillespie, the former Australia pacer, acknowledging the challenge ahead after the hosts conceded a stunning 10-wicket defeat in the series opener at the same venue.

Bangladesh spinners Mehedi Hasan Miraz (4-21) and Shakib Al Hasan (3-44) wreaked havoc in the second innings, leaving Pakistan to regret their decision of not including a frontline spinner in the first Test.

Pakistan have thus recalled leg-spinner Abrar Ahmed, who has 38 wickets in six Tests to his credit, coming in for star pacer Shaheen Shah Afridi -- rested to spend time with his newborn son and family.

“We’re just looking at what our best combination is for this game,” said Gillespie, who is overseeing his first series with Pakistan.

All-rounder Shakib Al Hasan leads the charge as Bangladesh players had an upbeat training session on Wednesday at the Rawalpindi Cricket Stadium where they will face hosts Pakistan in the second of the two-Test series, starting today, hoping to seal a first-ever series victory over Pakistan. [Bottom] The hosts, meanwhile, will be eager to carry their determination from the practice session into the game and bounce back following a 10-wicket thrashing in the first game. PHOTO: AFP

Keeping complacency at bay biggest challenge for Tigers

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh seemingly caught Pakistan off guard last week in the first Test with their brilliant all-round showing to register their maiden Test win over the Asian giants and now stand with a chance to clinch their first-ever Test series win against the hosts.

When the Tigers step into the field today in Rawalpindi for the series-deciding second Test, they will undoubtedly come across a wounded Pakistan team which will be out to prove a point.

But before worrying about the opposition, the team will have to fight the feeling of complacency that could creep into their psyche after the history-making win in the opening Test and rob them off the chance to make further history, something that has happened in Test series against Australia and New Zealand.

Bangladesh don’t possess a healthy record in the longest-format despite being in the scene since 2000. They have won only eight Test series and drawn 10 out of the 73 they have competed in before the ongoing series against Pakistan.

Bangladesh have won the first match of a series involving two or more Tests only seven times and although they managed to win four of those, two each against Zimbabwe and the West Indies, they have finish at the losing end in the other three occasions, once against Australia and twice against New Zealand.

In 2017, Bangladesh created history when they beat Australia for the first time in a Test by 20 runs in a thrilling contest in a tailor-made wicket at the Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium in Mirpur but they ended the series on a losing note in Chattogram, conceding a seven-wicket defeat.

Against New Zealand, Bangladesh went 1-0 up in Mount Maunganui in 2022 and in Sylhet in 2023, but lost the following Tests in Christchurch and Mirpur respectively.

After squandering three golden opportunities to seal a Test series win against a top side, Bangladesh once against find themselves in a position of strength heading into the final Test, with a chance to make history.

To do so, the Tigers have to guard themselves from complacency, handle the pressure of expectations while remaining on the offense.

“We always go with an offensive strategy, of course,” Bangladesh head coach Chandika Hathurusingha told reporters during a press conference yesterday.

“We focus on our strengths and limitations. Then on top of that, you look at the pitch and the overcast condition as well. So, we take all these into account when we think about strategy,” he added.

In the opening Test, Bangladesh posted 565 in the first innings after the hosts declared on 448-6. Openers Shadman Islam and Zakir Hassan showed the way with a cautious but effective partnership that allowed the tourists to go into the third day with all 10 wickets intact.

Similarly, when the team needed the bowlers to raise their hands, they did it quite brilliantly, more so during the final day of the game when they bowled out Pakistan inside 56 overs in the second innings to set up a 30-run target, which the openers chased down without a hitch, securing the team’s biggest ever win in Tests in terms of wickets in hand.

Since gaining Test status in 2000, Bangladesh have only won two of their 32 overseas series with wins in the West Indies (2009) and Zimbabwe (2021), drawing three and losing 27.

“I think the important thing is you have a partnership early on like the 12 overs our openers batted [on Day 2]. It gave us a lot of confidence and control of the game on the third day morning. Then Mominul [Haque] and Shadman [Islam] put up 90 odd and then Mushfiqur [Rahim], Liton [Das] and [Mehedi Hasan] Miraz capitalised on that platform,” Hathurusingha recounted the first Test win.

“We talked about spending time in the middle and getting their fast bowlers to come and bowl in the second, third spells. So, I think that mindset changed and the approach was different, our game plan was slightly different because of the condition. I think that helped a lot to put up a good show with the bat,” Hathurusingha concluded.

Two U-20 players get first national team call-ups

SPORTS REPORTER

Two players from the SAFF U-20 Championship winning team -- defender Shakil Ahad Topu and forward Mirajul Islam -- got maiden call-ups to the national team for the upcoming two FIFA friendlies against Bhutan next month.

A total of four players from the SAFF U-20 team were included in the 23-member squad announced by head coach Javier Cabrera yesterday. SAFF U-20 midfielder Chandon Roy and forward Rabbi Hossain Rahul, who had previously earned national team call-ups, also made the squad this time.

Six players -- Tariq Kazi, Rimon Hossain, Rafiq Islam, Syed Kirmani, Sushanto Tripura, and Mehedi Hasan Srabon -- from the squad that faced Australia in the World Cup Qualifiers in June were left out.

Bangladesh will leave for Bhutan today with the matches scheduled for September 5 and 8, respectively.

Bangladesh squad: Mitul Marma, Sujon Hossain, Pappu Hossain, Topu Barman, Bishwanath Ghosh, Saad Uddin, Mehdi Hasan, Rahmat Mia, Isa Faisal, Shakil Hossain, Shakil Ahad Topu, Sohel Rana, Md Ridoy, Jamal Bhuiyan, Md Sohel Rana, Mirajul, Chandon, Mojibur Rahman Jony, Rakib Hossain, Shiekh Morsalin, Faisal Ahmed Fahim, Shahriar Emon and Rahul.

BCB to appoint new audit firm

SPORTS REPORTER

An independent audit firm will be appointed from amongst top four audit firms to look into Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB)’s finances, board president Faruque Ahmed informed following yesterday’s board meeting.

Moreover, the tender process for the Sheikh Hasina International Stadium, which was to be built in Purbachal, has been cancelled.

“The stadium’s tender process’s last date was yesterday [Wednesday] and we have cancelled it following everyone’s approval,” Faruque told reporters.

The board meeting was supposed to shed light on the new standing committees under Faruque, but the standing committees have not yet been decided. Faruque revealed that chairman of women’s wing Shafiul Islam Nadel has tendered his resignation.

The newly appointed BCB president said that he was hopeful of holding the Bangladesh Premier League (BPL) at the right time. However, he will first be focusing on organising the teams that will participate.

Faruque further informed that he will be looking at the 2023 World Cup investigation report, which had not been made public under previous BCB president Nazmul Hassan Papon.

Meanwhile, ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan and head coach Chandika Hathurusingha have been in the spotlight for separate reasons. Faruque said that a decision on Hathurusingha will have to wait until the Pakistan series ends.

Questions had been raised over whether Shakib will be allowed to travel and stay outside the country and yet continue to play. Faruque confirmed that Shakib will continue staying outside since he has been handed NOC to play in county cricket, but a decision on the matter will be made after the India series.

‘The players have incredible love for the country’

Maruful Haque is undoubtedly one of the country’s top coaches, with his domestic achievements underscoring his credentials. The 54-year-old added another accolade by guiding Bangladesh’s youth football team to their maiden SAFF U-20 Championship title. Upon returning to Dhaka from Nepal, Maruful spoke to The Daily Star’s Anisur Rahman about his journey to winning the championship. The excerpts of the interview are as follows:

The Daily Star (DS): How challenging was it to prepare for the tournament in just 15 days, also considering the players were out of action for two months?

Maruful Haque (MH): This was one of the toughest challenges of my career. I had to conduct two training cycles while also ensuring the players got enough rest. In 12 to 13 sessions, moderate fitness was prioritised alongside the application of emergency fitness components, mainly aerobic training. Tactically, I didn’t focus on all aspects -- knowing the individual quality of the players, strength and playing style of other teams in the SAFF region -- but chose five effective tactics and applied them across the four matches. However, the players had maintained a level of basic fitness, which helped prepare them.

DS: How did you motivate them for the final against hosts and two-time champions Nepal, who had never lost to Bangladesh in previous four encounters?

MH: From the second day of training, I injected self-belief in the players that they could become champions. When a coach understands the pattern of the players’ mentality, then he can easily guide the whole squad. I noticed an incredible love for the country, which I hadn’t seen in other teams before. I tapped into this by showing them motivational images, relating to the [July-August’s historic] student movement and the trophy unveiling.

DS: How do you see this squad, including forwards Mirajul Islam and Rabby Hossain Rahul, progressing to the senior team?

MH: It’s too early to predict, but I believe most of this group have the potential to make it to the senior team. Ultimately, it depends on how each player develops, as 80 percent of players in our country fail due to their own actions, and the rest due to external factors like injuries, family issues, or clubs.

DS: You previously guided the senior national team through a month-long of training, and worked with U-23 team likewise, but didn’t succeed. From your end, what made things click this time?

MH: The senior level was highly competitive, with the country’s top players. Back then, we were behind teams like India, Afghanistan, and Maldives -- who had players like Ali Ashfaq. In South Asia’s age-group tournaments, all teams are fairly equal, though India are slightly ahead. However, I’ve also developed myself, gained more experience, and updated my approach to fit the situation.

Over 1,000 killed during mass uprising, 400 blinded

Says health adviser

STAR REPORT

Health Adviser Nurjahan Begum yesterday said more than 1,000 people were killed and over 400 blinded during the student-led mass uprising.

The adviser spoke about protest casualties while briefing reporters after visiting the Central Police Hospital in Rajarbagh.

The Human Rights Support Society on August 21 said it had received information on the deaths of 819 people during the protests from the victims' families, hospitals, witnesses, and national dailies.

According to a primary report of the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights published on August 16, as many as 650 people were killed in Bangladesh during the student-led protests between July 16 and August 11.

Adviser Nurjahan said numerous injured policemen were undergoing

NATURE QUEST

Two streak-throated woodpeckers perched on a tree in Chattogram's Karnaphuli, having a little chat. These birds occur mainly in the drier woodlands, from lowlands to mountain foothills, across the Indian subcontinent. The males, like those in the photograph, have red crowns on their heads while the females have black ones. They eat mostly insects, particularly ants and termites. Sometimes, however, they opt for nectar and seeds from flowers. Due to their vast range, they are in the "Least Concern" category of the IUCN Red List. PHOTO: NOBLE CHAKMA

History beckons Tigers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh will be looking to seal their first-ever Test series victory over Pakistan when they take on the hosts in the series-deciding second match at the Rawalpindi Cricket Stadium today.

The Tigers find themselves in a favourable position in the two-match series after they clinched a comprehensive 10-wicket win over the hosts -- their maiden Test win against Pakistan in 14 attempts -- in the opening Test at the same venue last week.

As it stands, Bangladesh can't lose the series -- a situation not so unfamiliar to the Tigers. However, in the previous instances when they had the chance of sealing a series, the Tigers went on to lose the decider and ended up sharing the spoils with their opponents.

Two AL men shot dead in port city

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Two men were shot dead by unknown gunmen in the Kuyaish area under Hathazari upazila of Chattogram last night. The armed assailants, riding a motorcycle, fled the scene quickly after the incident, said sources.

The deceased were identified as Awami League activists Masud Kaisar, 32, and Md Anis, 38, said Chattogram's acting Superintendent of Police (SP) Wasim Firoj.

Wasim said the duo was heading to Hathazari from Baizid Bostami's Nur Mosque around 9:25pm.

At one point, the two on the bike fired at them near Ever Care Hospital in Kuyaish area, leaving Anis dead on the spot, he said.

"Injured Masud died in Mojuripara area of Hathazari while he was trying to flee from the spot after the attack," the SP added.

However, the reason behind the incident could not be known immediately.

Police sources said the two were supporters of former Hathazari upazila chairman Yunus Goni Chowdhury.

Asks S Alam Refined Sugar Industry to explain bond misuse

MOHAMMAD SUMAN

The Chattogram Customs Bond Commissionerate has sought Tk 246.26 crore in unpaid duties from the S Alam Refined Sugar Industry against the import of 60,500 tonnes of sugar.

The S Alam Group concern had released the raw sugar under bond (home consumption) facility without paying any customs duty on the condition that the customs duty will be paid when the goods are shifted from the company's bonded warehouse, The Daily Star has learnt from customs bond officials.

According to the law, oil and sugar refining companies have been permitted to release their imported raw materials without incurring import duty under the bond facility since January 2019.

However, in February, S Alam Refined Sugar Industry began selling the commodity in the local market without paying the duty.

"As per the law, no good can be marketed without paying customs duty -- the company sold 60,500 tonnes of sugar but did not pay any duty," Md Mizanur Rahman, joint commissioner of Customs Bond Commissionerate, Chattogram told The Daily Star.

Subsequently, on August 22, Bond Commissioner Mohammad Lutfor Rahman issued a show-cause letter demanding Tk 246.26 crore in revenue.

The Bond Commissionerate will initiate legal proceedings to recover the dodged revenue if the company fails to provide a satisfactory response or pays the duty within 15 days.

Meanwhile, the revenue authority is planning to review all import and sales data from 2019 to determine if the company has engaged in any additional irregularities related to the import of products utilising the bond facility, said a top official of the National Board of Revenue.

On August 20, the Chattogram Customs, Excise and VAT Commissionerate, another wing of the NBR, formed four audit teams to investigate the business operations and transactions of 18 companies within the S Alam Group.

The teams have been directed to review all types of financial transactions and purchase-sale records of the last five years starting from 2019.

A detailed report will be prepared and submitted by the teams within the next 30 days, with the assistance of 20 customs officials.

Subrata Kumar Bhowmick, executive director of S Alam Group, and Mohammad Akhter Hossain, general manager (corporate), could not be reached for comment.

Salman, Anisul put on remand for third time

Court places them on fresh 5-day remand

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday placed former law minister Anisul Huq and Sheikh Hasina's private industry affairs adviser Salman F Rahman on a fresh five-day remand in a murder case.

With this, Anisul and Salman have been placed on 25 days of remand in three phases.

At the hearing around 7:00am, the magistrate asked Anisul and Salman if they had anything to say.

"We were in favour of the quota reform protests. I don't know anything about the incident [the case is about]. I want justice," Anisul was quoted as saying by a police officer present at the court.

He also told the court that he was innocent.

The hearing was on the case filed over the murder of Suman Sikdar, 31, at the capital's Badda during a demonstration on July 19.

Israeli West Bank raids enter second day

Death toll rises to at least 14; Islamic Jihad commander killed; UN demands immediate halt to violence

AGENCIES

The death toll climbed yesterday as Israel pressed a large-scale military operation in the occupied West Bank for a second day, despite UN concerns it is "fuelling an already explosive situation".

The operation was launched as violence raged on in the other main Palestinian territory, the Gaza Strip, which has been devastated by Israeli offensive on the territory.

Israel began coordinated raids in the northern West Bank cities of Jenin, Tubas and Tulkarem early on Wednesday, in what the military called a "counter-terrorism" operation.

Columns of Israeli armoured vehicles backed by troops and warplanes were sent in before soldiers encircled refugee camps in Tubas and Tulkarem, as well as Jenin, and exchanged fire with Palestinian militants.

The army said it killed five militants in Tulkarem yesterday, bringing to 14 the overall death toll since the launch of the West Bank operation.

"Following exchanges of fire, the forces eliminated five terrorists who had hidden inside a mosque" in Tulkarem, the military said.

Palestinian militant group Islamic Jihad confirmed the death of Muhammad Jabber, also known as Abu Shujaa, its commander in the Nur Shams refugee camp in Tulkarem.

The violence has caused significant destruction, especially in Tulkarem, whose governor described the raids as "unprecedented" and a "dangerous signal".

AFPTV footage showed bulldozers ripping up the asphalt from streets in the city. Widespread damage was reported to infrastructure, including to water and sewage networks.

The Palestinian health ministry said 12 Palestinians were killed on the first day of the operation.

Hasina faces 6 more cases

Several ex-ministers, top cops also sued

STAR REPORT

Six more cases have been filed against former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and her several cabinet members.

Three of them were lodged in Gazipur while one each was filed in Dhaka and Brahmanbaria. Besides, another complaint was filed yesterday with the investigation agency of the International Crimes Tribunal against Hasina and 51 others.

Several former ministers, including Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader and Asaduzzaman Khan, top police officers and two dozen senior journalists were among the accused.

Hasina is now facing at least 81 cases -- 68 on murder charges, eight over allegations of crimes against humanity and genocide, three on charges of abduction, and two on other charges.

Dismislab finds they're talking about polls months after its conclusion

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In a recent investigation, dismislab uncovered a coordinated bot network on Facebook that used fake accounts to sway public opinion in Awami League's favour and to discredit the opposition, particularly the BNP.

The investigation began with a seemingly unrelated article on bdnews24.com, where a political comment under the post sparked curiosity.

On June 21 this year, an article titled "Is There an Invisible Code on Every Page Printed by a Color Printer?" appeared on the website and Facebook page of bdnews24.com.

The technical nature of the story might have eluded the interest of political enthusiasts, but it caught the eye of a researcher from dismislab -- not for the article itself, but for a comment under the Facebook post.

"This election will be transparent. People will be able to vote freely in the upcoming election. The BNP is scared to participate because they can't rig the vote this time."

The dismislab report said, "The researcher was taken aback by the subsequent comments. Even months after the election, users were still making remarks critical of the opposition party and its leaders, expressing hopes for a successful and fair election, and insisting that the

Where are our loved ones?

Families of the victims of enforced disappearances speak freely for first time, demand probe and justice

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Ayesha Ali has been praying every day for over 10 years to see her son.

As several people emerged from secret detention centres known as Aynaghar after the fall of the Sheikh Hasina-led government early this month, Ayesha started hoping that her son Abdul Quader, who was 23 when he disappeared in December 2013, would knock on the door any moment.

"I touch his clothes everyday and I tell myself that he will come back. I keep looking out of the window, expecting to see him on the street," she said, breaking down in tears at a human chain at Central Shaheed Minar.

"Everyone says the country is now independent. Is the country not independent for my son?"

Other participants at the event then embraced Ayesha and tried to soothe her.

Quader, a student of finance at Jagannath University, was picked up by men claiming to be Rab members from the capital's Bashundhara area, family members said. He was a supporter of the BNP.

Many other family members of the victims of enforced disappearance were at the event, marking the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances.

Mayer Daak, a platform for the families, has been commemorating this day since 2013.

Speaking about her brother Mazharul Russel who has been missing since 2013, another participant named Nusrat Jahan also broke down.

"I want to touch my brother's hands. He used to take me to the school on his bicycle. I have nightmares of him being locked in a dark room alone. 'Find me,' he says to me," Nusrat said.

She then urged Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus to take steps to investigate the secret prisons.

She said there must be Aynaghar at the facilities of law enforcers where "my brother and others are probably detained".

"We want to know whether our loved ones are alive or dead," she added.

Abdul Mannan

Islami Bank's former managing director Abdul Mannan had not appeared or spoken publicly since S Alam Group took control of the bank in March 2017.

Breaking more than seven years of silence yesterday, he said the infamous conglomerate forced Mannan at gunpoint to resign from his post at the Shariah-based bank after he was taken hostage by members of a security agency.

"I was forced to resign on a pad that the Islami Bank has never used since its inception in 1983 till date," Mannan said at a discussion yesterday where he recalled a few memories of his forced removal at that time.

The Forum for Bangladesh Studies organised the virtual event on "Elimination of Occupancy in the Banking Sector: Will the Plight End?".

Commemorating the deaths in the recent student-led movement that ousted the Awami League regime on August 5, he said: "Now I think I have freedom of expression. Earlier, I did not have the courage to speak even while staying abroad."

How UCB's Ronny acquired so much offshore assets

Ex-minister Javed, wife's bank accounts frozen, but his brother Anisuzzaman Ronny, wife Imrana remain unmarked

ZYMA ISLAM and
PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

As Saifuzzaman Chowdhury Javed's grip over United Commercial Bank (UCB) created a trail of disguised loans with abuse of political influence after he became a minister in 2019 back home, his brother Anisuzzaman Chowdhury Ronny's assets saw a meteoric rise in the UK.

Last year, The Daily Star reported that Javed, the former land minister, and his wife Rukhmila Zaman co-own over 260 properties in the UK while Bloomberg News had put the figures at over 350 properties worth about £200 million, or over Tk 3,143 crore.

This newspaper has now tracked five UK companies owned by Ronny and his wife Imrana Zaman Chowdhury together or individually with their business partners. The firms hold properties worth £22.31 million, or over Tk 350 crore, acquired after Javed's entry to now-deposed Hasina's cabinet.

The firms are Bitcom Real Estate Ltd, Ronny 42 Ltd, AA Mandarin Ltd, Gilbert Street Estates Ltd and Sovereign Financing Ltd.

These companies all have a common trajectory – starting with pennies and no real income before suddenly acquiring high-end properties in London. These are seemingly holding companies for stashing wealth from unknown sources in the British real estate market.

For example, Ronny and Imrana incorporated Bitcom Real Estate Ltd in May 2020 with just a £100 issued capital. A little over a year later on July 15, 2021, the company purchased a £1.6 million apartment in a skyscraper called

UN to dispatch fact-finding team to Bangladesh

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The UN Human Rights Office will dispatch a fact-finding team to Bangladesh in the coming weeks to conduct an impartial and independent investigation into the human rights violations committed between July 1 and August 15.

The decision came after Chief Adviser Muhammad Yunus requested the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Türk for such a mission, said Spokesperson for the UN rights office Ravina Shamdasani at a press briefing in Geneva yesterday.

The fact-finding mission will investigate violations and abuses perpetrated during the mass protest, analyse root causes, and make recommendations to advance justice, accountability and way out for long-term reforms.

An advance team visited the country from August 22 to 29, meeting people including student leaders of the recent protests.

The team also met many advisers to the interim government, the chief justice, senior officers of the police and armed forces, lawyers, journalists and

India will deal with govt of the day

S Jaishankar says about Bangladesh

UNB, Dhaka

Referring to the recent changes in Bangladesh, Indian External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar yesterday said they would deal with the government of the day.

"It is natural that we will deal with the government of the day," he said.

The minister said they have to recognise that there are political changes, and political changes can be disruptive.

"And clearly here, we have to look for mutuality of interest," Jaishankar said at the release of the book titled "Strategic Conundrums: Reshaping India's Foreign Policy", authored by Rajiv Sikri.

The Indian minister said everyone was aware that since Bangladesh's independence, the relationship between the two countries had its ups and downs.

DHAKA'S OFFICE CANTEENS where meals and memories are made

RBR

Our Dhanmondi office was a typical posh eighties two-storied house, with a manicured lawn and an annex building for the kitchen and other service quarters. When this beautiful home was rented to our office in the early nineties, our threadbare office canteen was situated at the far corner of the kitchen wing; serving only singaras and tea.

Our athletic teaboy used to carry a tray full of cups with steaming tea and hopped down the stairs as if he were an acrobat in the act. He loved showing off his skills, and we loved appreciating it.

However scruffy and small office canteens are, they are lifesavers, especially in areas with fewer restaurant options, as opposed to downtown districts, where restaurateurs have set up eating houses that are famous for their specialty all over the town.

The office goers of this busy city chalk out their office lunch plans according to their preferences – options included home-cooked meals, restaurant food, or canteen food – or skipping it altogether. The subsided office canteens, serving anywhere from 100 to 500 people, in big and small offices, come to the rescue for most. Many canteens take a monthly fee for a mid-morning snack, lunch, and seasonal fruit; others have a pay-first option for an array of choices. Offices have canteens under their administration wing to monitor and maintain quality and hygiene while preparing the meals. They hire professional cooks and chefs for their canteens.

The tea room on each floor is fun to watch though, with a motley collection of mugs and cups with funny and interesting quotes on them, and of course, their favourite tea and coffee blends. The smell of brewing coffee or tea is stimulating. Fancy additions are a French press, but the majority go for office coffee machines and stick to their preferred order of double latte or double tea bag milk tea.

While canteens serve lunch and mid-afternoon snacks in most Dhaka offices, it is the newspaper canteens that work till midnight. Thus, their snack menu is as diverse as the front page. Let's begin with the ever so-delicious egg-paratha roll, the potato and vegetable croquette, puffed up aloo puri with tamarind chutney, fried chicken, and the absolute favourite "loodles" (noodles) with slit green chili as a substitute for veggies. Special lunches of ilish polao, beef tehari, steamed bhetki in tomato puree, and the vegetable labra are to die for.

Imagine this scrumptious meal for a subsidised bill.

However, you cannot afford outside food every day, it's detrimental not only to your health, but your wallet as well. But many office goers refuse to carry packed lunches; and having canteen food day in and day out can be taxing on your digestive health, especially when the leafy greens turn into an utter black, tasteless dread or when the fish smells, well fishy! And the beef is swimming in oil and some sort of black masala paste.

Then again, good and bad office canteens are still beloved. The long hours of hot political debates, the rantings about social attitude changes and personal woes over cups and cups of bad tea and fried food; lunches and tea breaks are the most favourite part of our working hours.

Needless to say, the canteens and tea rooms are owned by you. There is always a game on the television, and colleagues gather around it to cheer for their team. During football matches, even the canteen staffers put on their favourite jerseys and lay bets with the office people. There is a beautiful comradery. It is the only place in the office where you get to see people from all departments, hear their stories, share your meals, and sit with friends.

Hasina made accused in 3 more cases
Three ex-ministers also sued

Former road transport and bridges minister and Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader is AL chief Hasina's co-accused in two murder cases filed in Kishoreganj and Munshiganj yesterday over the three deaths.

Hasina is now facing at least 84 cases -- 70 on murder charges, eight on allegations of crimes against humanity and genocide, three for alleged abduction, and three on other charges.

In Kishoreganj, BNP activist Matiur Rahman filed the case over the killings of two fellow party workers on August 4, said Sadar Model Police Station OC Md Golam Mostafa.

Westmark Tower in Central London, documents show.

Despite being a company specialising in "the buying and selling of real estate," Bitcom never purchased any other property as of 2024, with its tangible assets now valued at £1.8 million, company registration documents show.

The couple incorporated another UK firm, Ronny 42 Ltd, in August 2019. A hundred pounds was all the company was worth until it bought a £9.1 million property in the luxurious 17 Park Crescent in central London on October 1, 2020. Like Bitcom, Ronny 42 Ltd has not purchased any other property.

Similarly, AA Mandarin Ltd was formed with only £100 and had no income, but by July 2023, the company acquired a £2.8 million apartment on the sixth floor of the 5-star London hotel Mandarin Oriental Mayfair, lease documents show.

In addition to a string of homes in the UK, Ronny and Imrana list one property in Dubai's luxurious Palm Jumeirah, the upmarket fan-shaped artificial island off the Persian Gulf. The property address mentioned in lease documents leads straight to a flat in Dubai The Palm, which is described on its website as "one of the most exquisite hotels on The Palm, Dubai".

Neither the Ronny-Imrana couple nor ex-minister Javed appear to have any other viable businesses in the UK that could have been used to generate income. There is also no record that they took permission from Bangladesh Bank to move money abroad, which is mandatory. So, how did they acquire so much wealth in the UK?

British company registration documents state that Ronny and Imrana hold golden passports of Antigua and Barbuda, a Caribbean tax haven for the world's wealthy. It offers the golden passports for a $230,000 donation to the National Development Fund or the purchase of real estate worth at least $300,000.

In a 2020 interview with Edgeprop Singapore, finance broker Masood Rashid described how one of his clients bought a property with a mortgage and used the steep interest earnings of the offshore cash deposit to pay the mortgage, and "still make a profit". He did not give any name.

"It's called arbitrage," Rashid, co-founder of Opes Financial Partners, explained and added that his specialisation is in "politically exposed person". The broker had arranged a £12 million property in London for Javed, The Daily Star was able to track via property documents and an announcement on LinkedIn by the broker.

Asked how he got the financing for his properties in the UK and how he was paying the multiple mortgages, Ronny said he obtained the mortgages as a UK citizen through "proper due diligence" in line with the country's law.

"I have been doing various business in the UK since 2001. I am able to service mortgages from these businesses," he said in a written response.

He also said his father, late Awami League leader Akhtaruzzaman Chowdhury Babu who once took over the UCB bank at gunpoint, had businesses in the UK since 1965. "As one of his successors, I have inherited some of them. From where I was able to put down the down payment," Ronny said.

MILKING UCB

Javed entered the British real estate sector a year after the Awami League returned to power in 2009, and his wealth accumulation there shot up after he became a member of Sheikh Hasina's 2019-2024 cabinet, company documents show.

He raised the number of his companies fourfold to eight in just three years. Ronny followed in his brother's footsteps, opening his first company in the UK in 2019 and expanding his and his wife's business to five firms.

This meteoric rise in offshore wealth came at a time when the political clout of Javed, and by association Ronny's, consolidated back home. It was apparent on the board of UCB, where the family and their representatives had 10 out of 14 director's posts until mid-2024 and eight until the restructuring of the board by the central bank last Tuesday.

The Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) had earlier frozen the accounts of Javed and his wife Rukhmila after the fall of the Awami League government on August 5, but Ronny and Imrana have remained untouched.

Rukhmila was the chairperson of UCB's board of directors. After the BFIU had frozen both her assets and accounts, Javed's sister Roxana Zaman Chaudhury was made the chairperson. Their siblings Ronny, Asifuzzaman Chowdhury, and Afroza Zaman were directors. Four other directors were their employees, either from Javed and Ronny's main family business, Aramit Group, or Ronny's business, Navana Pharmaceuticals, or companies opened by their children and business partners.

Highly placed sources inside UCB said that Javed used to sit in on the bank's board meetings although he was not a part of the bank in any way since he became a minister. With a board more like a family get-together, disguised and related party loans got easy approval.

After the BFIU's measure, 36 employees of UCB in a letter to the central bank accused Javed and Ronny of benefiting from disguised loans.

For example, Aramit's Protocol Officer Mohammed Forman Ullah Chowdhury, whose starting salary in 2017 was Tk 20,000, received a Tk 25 crore loan as the proprietor of Chattogram-based M/S Vision Trading in March 2020.

Mohammed Adnan Imam, a UK real estate businessman and director of NRBC Bank, secured UCB capital facilities worth at least Tk 1,516 crore for six companies owned by or directly connected to him, one nested in another, paper trail shows.

Of these companies, Adnan's AWR Developments (BD) Ltd and AWR Real Estate Ltd were given Tk 617 crore by the bank, Genex Infosys Tk 426 crore, Bangla-UK Agro Products Ltd Tk 302 crore, Fulpur Agro City Tk 51 crore, and TSN Trade & Infrastructure Development Ltd Tk 120 crore, bank documents show.

Asked whether these were related party loans, Ronny said these were not related as they were public limited companies.

Sovereign Financing Ltd, one of the five companies owned by Ronny or his wife in the UK, was co-founded by Adnan in 2022. The company is completely dormant now.

Contacted, Adnan denied having any active business relationship with Ronny and receiving the related party loans.

However, Gilbert Street Estates Ltd, one of Ronny's five firms in the UK, is co-owned by Adnan's wives. The real estate company worth £10.52 million, or over Tk 165 crore, has a property on Gilbert Street in Mayfair, London, according to lease documents. One of Adnan's real estate companies and all of Ronny's UK companies are housed in that property, the documents show.

Sharif Abdullah, a former UCB vice-president who left the bank in October 2023, described how he was made to disburse large loans to companies not worth their salt, and how the funds were likely siphoned off.

"As a banker, we have to find out the actual beneficial owner of the account. For example, if a police officer's homemaker mother-in-law opens an account with Tk 10 crore with no supporting documents, it is pretty certain that the beneficial owner of the account is the police officer. It is as simple as that," said Sharif. "The siphoning of funds from loans was primarily executed through working capital facilities, such as time loans and overdrafts, rather than term loans."

Sharif said he was compelled to approve Tk 450 crore "unethical loans" benefiting Javed and Ronny for an agro farm which had a total valuation of Tk 7 crore at best. He also admitted to disbursing Tk 100 crore loans to a construction firm with fake work orders.

He said he had visited a steel company with the capital machinery so worn out that they could be sold only as scrap. "Yet the capital machinery was valued at Tk 400 crore. Another company was seeking to acquire that firm, and we asked for Tk 300 crore on their behalf – we got Tk 250 crore. My refusal to approve this loan led to severe threats and intimidation," alleged Sharif, who now lives in Australia. "I faced unbelievably high pressure from the management to provide these clients with loans they are not fit for."

POLITICAL INFLUENCE

The sheer abuse of political privilege to bend the rules was clear as the day to regular employees of UCB. At least two sets of photos posted by his followers showed Javed holding political meetings inside the bank despite not being a part of it. The latest photos were from July 15, 2024.

Bank insiders identified the conference room where the meeting was held in a room right beside the boardroom at their Gulshan office.

"Normal employees are not allowed inside that space," said an employee of the bank, requesting anonymity.

Ronny used to drive around in a car with a flag stand, according to multiple photos, indicating his willingness to abuse the political privilege afforded to his brother.

The Daily Star confirmed that it was Ronny's car – a Bentley Flying Spur Hybrid.

A flag stand is only allowed for the senior most members of the government and the state, including the president, the prime minister, the Speaker and deputy Speaker, the chief justice, the chief whip, cabinet ministers and the leader of the official opposition. A member of the general public, even if he or she is a business magnate, is not allowed to use a flag stand.

Asked if he used a flag stand in his car, Ronny said: "As my brother was a land minister, once in a while we used to travel together, for which I had to keep the stand."

Where are our loved ones?

Twenty-two family members spoke at the human chain. Rights activists, politicians and lawyers expressed solidarity and demanded justice. Many held photographs of their missing loved ones.

Rina Alam, whose husband Noor Alam has been missing for more than nine years, said, "I want my husband back. If he is dead, I want to know for sure. I appeal to the chief adviser to do something to bring him back.

"Please tell us something; we can't go on waiting like this. Return my husband so that my children can call him baba."

Mikel Changma, a leader of a regional group based in the hill tracts, who was released this month from detention after over five years, said, "I urge all writers, poets, intellectuals, and students to support our struggle.

"If we cannot ensure the punishment of Hasina and those involved [in running secret prisons] right now, this system will continue to exist," he added.

Supreme Court Lawyer Sara Hossain said, "Our higher courts remained silent on this issue. We have seen no intervention from the courts about this matter."

Sadika Sarkar Safa, aged less than 11, was holding a photo of her father Mahfuzur Rahman Sohel who went missing 10 years ago.

"I want my father back. This is my only request to the new government," she said.

Maruf Zaman, a former diplomat, who was in detention for over a year, described the harrowing details of the conditions at DGFI Joint Interrogation Cell.

"Hundreds of people have used fish bones to cut their hands and write their names and phone numbers with blood inside the rooms. There are hundreds of names inside each cell. Where are they?" he asked.

Mayer Daak coordinator Sanjida Islam Tulee demanded that the detained persons be released and information about them be made public.

Mayer Daak organised a photo exhibition and discussion at the National Museum yesterday evening.

Environment Adviser Rizwana Hasan said the interim government was genuinely willing to find every disappeared individual.

"We are not part of the government responsible for these enforced disappearances. We want to stand beside the families that endured grief and ensure that the perpetrators behind face justice," she said.

Supreme Court lawyer Jyotirmoy Barua said the previous government's actions made it evident that it was behind these disappearances.

The previous administration repeatedly gave the excuse that there was no law to try those involved in enforced disappearance.

"We need a specific law. The president has the authority to pass laws through ordinances, which can later be approved by the elected government.... A special tribunal could define how this law should be formulated. Alternatively, the government could amend sections 363 and 364 of the CrPC to facilitate investigations into these cases," he said.

"Since Bangladesh is now a signatory [to the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance], the National Human Rights Commission can now independently investigate these cases. In addition, our commission [on enforced disappearance] can also investigate. Reports from both commissions can be sent to the International Criminal Court, because these are instances of crimes against humanity."

Fisheries ministry Adviser Farida Akhter spoke.

'I was forced to step down'

In his short speech, he said the day he was taken hostage and forced to resign at gunpoint, many top officials of Bangladesh Bank (BB) had stayed in their offices until late at night to accept his resignation.

After taking control of the board by removal of Mannan and other top executives, the Chattogram-based conglomerate, owned by Mohammad Saiful Alam, and its associated companies took loans of Tk 74,900 crore from the bank, which is 47 percent of Islami Bank's total outstanding loans as of March this year, according to the documents of the bank.

'RETURN OWNERSHIP TO DEPOSITORS'

Addressing the event, economists and experts urged the interim government and the BB to take immediate steps to bring the ownership of the banks back to the depositors to save the financial sector from further deterioration.

Rashed Al Mahmud Titumir, professor of development studies at the University of Dhaka, said depositors are the real owners of banks, but sadly the top executives of banks are considered the owners.

"Unfortunately, there are no banking laws in the country that recognise depositors as owners," he said.

Titumir said the interest of depositors and small and medium enterprises, who are the backbone of the economy, must be reflected in the upcoming reforms in the banking sector for sustainable development.

He said there is no actual data on the exact amount of bad loans because no forensic audit was conducted.

Mamun Rashid, chairman of Financial Excellence Ltd, said the BB has calculated the bad loans amounting to Tk 1.82 lakh crore, but it has given an estimate of Tk 3.77 lakh crore as soured loans to the International Monetary Fund.

The amount is about 20 percent of the total disbursed loans of the banks.

The exact amount is likely to be much higher, he added.

About the money laundered out of Bangladesh, Mamun said there was information that "large sums were borrowed from banks in the morning, and the money sent abroad through hundi in the afternoon".

S Alam took over six banks, he said. But the banking rules state that more than 10 percent of a bank's shares cannot be given to any person or entity. It was irresponsible on the part of the central bank.

S Alam's ownership share in Islami Bank is about Tk 1,800 crore. As a single beneficiary, S Alam Group withdrew about Tk 50,000 crore from the bank when the bank had deposits of Tk 160,000 crore.

"Now the question from all quarters is, how did S Alam come into picture? Islami Bank's managing director and board members were taken to a five-star hotel where they were forced to resign and a new managing director was appointed overnight at supersonic speed. This was the S Alam method of becoming the owner of one bank after another."

Badiul Alam Majumdar, secretary of Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan), said corruption in banking and other sectors is rooted in the petty politics of the country.

"To get out of this situation, reforms are needed in the political culture first," he added.

Mizanur Rahman, economist, columnist and an adjunct professor of Manarat International University, also spoke at the event moderated by journalist Monir Haider.

FLOOD AFTERMATH

Relief that has yet to arrive

Without govt assistance, flood victims in remote Laxmipur villages endure days of starvation

SAJJAD HOSSAIN, back from Laxmipur

Nearly 5,000 flood-affected residents in Kolakopa village of Laxmipur have been completely cut off by water in the ongoing flood.

Despite this, even as water levels begin to recede, government assistance and relief have yet to reach the village.

Since the fall of the AL regime, the local chairman and members have all gone into hiding.

Lambakhali Government Primary School is the sole government-designated disaster shelter in the area.

Around 200 people have sought refuge there, but not a single government aid package has arrived. Instead, the little food they have received has come from volunteers, mostly student organisations and members of political parties.

Belal Hossain, a farmer from Char Badam village who has taken shelter here, yesterday said he last ate at 8:00pm on Thursday.

He has been without food ever since till we last spoke to him yesterday evening.

This has been the case for him and his family for the past 11 days.

"It's not just me; my wife, my two sons aged 2 and 5, and my 8-year-old daughter are all hungry," he said.

In the last month, Belal and others at the shelter have only received khichuri once. On three occasions, they were given puffed rice and biscuits as relief.

"I have no money. We need food. Who should I tell this to? There's no one to listen to our suffering," Belal said.

All the people in the shelter we talked to share the same hardship, they are waiting for aid that has yet to arrive.

Their desperation is growing with each passing day.

Dilruba Begum, tearfully expressing her frustration, said, "No one has provided us with proper food. No one has even helped us with cash assistance."

She added, "It's been over 12 hours since we haven't eaten anything."

Shefali Akhter, 60, echoed her.

The situation is particularly dire for mothers like Fahima, who broke down in tears, saying, "Even if I go without food, it's not a problem, but my three young children are crying in hunger. How can I comfort them with just words?"

Some, understandably so, reacted angrily when we approached them for comments.

Parvin Akhter said, "Give us food. We don't want blabbering from you."

This dire situation is not limited to Kolakopa alone. Villages like Purba Swarasita, Char Badam, Poragacha,

Displaced, thousands seek rehabilitation in Moulvibazar

MINTU DESHWARA

Whenever a flood takes place, the full extent of its damage cannot be mostly understood until the water recedes.

As such, now that the floodwater has completely receded in Moulvibazar, the aftermath of the flood has started to take shape.

In the Tillagaon union of Kulaura upazila in the district, hundreds of thousands of people have been displaced from their homes and are now enduring severe living conditions.

A visit to the flood-affected Mirerpara and Hajipur villages in the union on Thursday revealed the extent of their distress.

In both villages, flood victims expressed deep concern as paddy and vegetable seedlings have been submerged.

In Mierpara village, 30 houses have been completely destroyed, while 25 have been partially damaged. The residents of those houses were forced to leave and take shelter elsewhere, mostly in neighbouring houses.

Over 2m children at risk

Says Unicef

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Over two million children in eastern Bangladesh are at risk as floods sweep through homes, schools and villages, Unicef said yesterday.

These floods, the worst in eastern Bangladesh in 34 years, have affected 5.6 million people, said a press release of the UN agency.

Unicef said millions of children and families are stranded without food and emergency relief supplies. The government personnel and volunteers are conducting rescue operations, although access remains difficult in some areas.

"The devastating floods in the eastern parts of Bangladesh are a tragic reminder of the relentless impact of extreme weather events and the climate crisis on children. Far too many children have lost loved ones, their homes, schools, and now are completely destitute," said Emma Brigham, Deputy Representative of Unicef Bangladesh.

"Unicef is on the frontlines providing water purification tablets, oral rehydration salts and other essential supplies, but more funds are needed to reach these children and prevent an even more devastating impact on their futures."

Mentioning its efforts in the flood since its onset, the UN agency said having joined an initial assessment mission with the local government adviser AF Hassan Ariff, Unicef with its partners has reached over 3,38,000 people, including 1,30,000 children, with life-saving supplies such as 3.6 million water purification tablets, 25,000 jerry-cans to store water and over 2,50,000 oral rehydration salt sachets.

"But much more is needed," the release reads.

From homes to hopes, everything washed away

Feni flood-hit people stare at a bleak future

SIFAYET ULLAH

His house collapsed in a flash in the floodwater. Mohammed Shahjahan, a 55-year-old, lost everything in his residence and took shelter in a relative's house.

"Everything turned upside down in a few hours. Now, I have no house, no furniture," said Shahjahan while cleaning his damaged house on Thursday from Champaknagar village of Feni.

The teary-eyed man, father of the two children, said he doesn't know how he will reconstruct the house as he spent savings of a lifetime to treat himself in 2022.

"I was an expatriate and forced to return from Saudi Arabia due to spinal disease in 2022. Now I don't know what I will do," he said.

Grocery shop owner Sayedul Hoque was moving account books of his shop that were damaged by floodwater.

Sayedul said he fed his five-member family by running the grocery store. But most of the goods in his shop were destroyed due to the flood.

"I don't understand how to collect the dues," he said from Shuvopur union under Chhagalnaiya upazila.

Like them, thousands of flood victims in the district are staring at an uncertain future as the devastating flood has destroyed their houses, crops, and livelihoods.

According to the Feni district administration, at least 10.5 lakh people have been affected in the district due to recent floods under six upazilas. 1.5 lakh people have been forced to take shelter.

The flood began in the border district on August 20. The situation worsened gradually and affected Parshuram, Fulgazi, and Chhagalnaiya upazilas in the first phase.

Later, floodwater spread to Feni Sadar, Sonagazi, and Dagonbhuiyan, creating a severe crisis across the district.

During a visit to different upazilas of the districts on Wednesday and Thursday, this correspondent found that victims were trying to move things from their submerged residences.

59-year-old farmer Abdul Malek was nurturing his damaged paddy on a road near his residence at Fazilpur union under Sadar upazila on Thursday.

"I stored 800 kg of paddy at home as future food. But everything was destroyed in the flood water," he said.

"With the help of relief, I will be able to pass the time of disaster. But how to gather food for my family in the future? the farmer said.

Hasina Begum, a housewife from Chanua union under Sadar upazila, said she could recover only steel-made furniture from his house.

"Wooden chairs, tables, and carpets were damaged by water. I threw away a lot and have to buy new things to survive," she said.

Next polls most challenging in history: Tarique

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Acting Chairman Tarique Rahman termed the next national election one of the most challenging in the nation's history.

He made the remarks yesterday during a virtual discussion with BNP leaders and activists from the Rajshahi division.

Speaking as chief guest on the second day of a series of meetings with grassroots leaders, Tarique said, "BNP has always relied on public support for election results. The way BNP has maintained the trust of the people for the past 17 years, enduring immense oppression and persecution, must be continued."

Withdraw murder charges against journalists

DUJ urges interim govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Dhaka Union of Journalists yesterday raised concerns over the recent implication of journalists in murder cases across various districts, including Dhaka, following recent political shifts.

In a statement, the DUJ called on the interim government, particularly Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus and relevant ministry advisers, to exempt journalists from these accusations.

DUJ President Sohel Haider Chowdhury and General Secretary Akhter Hossain voiced their apprehension and formally requested government intervention.

Due to heavy dust, the air in the Gabtoli area of the capital turns into a murky haze. Although pedestrians cover their faces with their hands, it is not of much help to save themselves from the pollution. It can also be risky to cross the road in such a manner, with vehicles rushing towards them. The photo was taken yesterday.

Palestinian envoy sends relief aid to flood victims

STAR REPORT

Palestinian Ambassador to Bangladesh, Yousef SY Ramadan, has provided relief aid packages for flood victims in Bangladesh.

The aid, which includes essential supplies, also features Palestinian flags as part of the packages.

The relief goods are being distributed through As Sunnah Foundation.

Around three million people have been affected by the flood in many districts including Feni, Cumilla, Noakhali, Chattogram, Habiganj and Moulvibazar.

In Feni, Parshuram, Fulgazi, and Chhagalnaiya upazilas have been badly affected.

People and children urgently require cash assistance, safe drinking water, hygiene kits, emergency latrines, sanitary pads, oral rehydration salts and emergency life-saving medicines. Primary healthcare services to treat sick newborns and children and help pregnant women to give birth must be restored immediately, it added.

The recent floods come close on the heels of the floods in north Bangladesh and Cyclone Remal in May. Jointly, the three emergencies have impacted over 13 million people across Bangladesh, including 5 million children, according to the press release.

In response to these three emergencies, Unicef urgently requires up to $35.3 million for critical, life-saving, and multi-sectoral interventions for children, as well as pregnant and lactating women, it said.

Fire completely doused, families

An expert team from Buet, in collaboration with the Public Works Department, visited the site earlier this week and declared it too dangerous for rescue operations.

Professor Raquib Ahsan, who led the team, noted that the fire had severely damaged the upper floors, which collapsed onto the lower levels, causing visible cracks in the building's columns.

Rashida Begum, the mother of a missing worker, Md Aman, 21, criticised the authorities: "Why are we not even given their remains? Over a hundred people are missing. Is this the first fire in Bangladesh?"

Jakir Hossain, who has been searching for his younger brother Manir Hossain, 28, found a pair of shoes he identified as his brother's but no body. He returned to his family with ashes and the shoes, holding a symbolic funeral for Manir.

The building continues to emit smoke and the smell of burning tyres and chemicals.

Withdraw murder charges

The statement highlighted that since the political transition on August 5, triggered by the anti-discrimination student movement, a number of journalists have been implicated in murder cases.

Over 50 journalists, including leaders from various journalist unions and press clubs, have faced accusations in different districts, including Dhaka. DUJ criticised the ongoing murder charges as detrimental to the profession and public trust.

While the DUJ acknowledged that legal action could be justified if specific allegations against a journalist are proven, they denounced the practice of implicating journalists based on their support for the previous government.

The leaders also condemned the harassment and mistreatment of journalists during their arrests and court appearances, calling for the immediate identification and prosecution of those responsible for such abuses.

The statement expressed alarm over the widespread filing of murder charges, noting that it has created fear within the journalist community and among the public.

The DUJ warned that such actions could undermine efforts to build a fair and non-discriminatory state and society.

They urged for the prompt withdrawal of these charges against journalists and journalist leaders.

Tk 30,770.14 crore. This means Tk 1,835 crore has been saved," he said during a press conference at the service area 2 of the Padma Bridge's Jajira end.

He provided a breakdown of the savings, including Tk 530 crore from the main bridge, Tk 80 crore from river training, and Tk 178 crore from access roads and service areas. Additionally, Tk 500 crore was saved due to price contingencies, Tk 103 crore from land acquisition, Tk 200 crore from consultancy, and Tk 244 crore from other expenses, he added.

"After receiving instructions [from the chief adviser], I decided to cut costs across the ministries I oversee. This does not mean we will do less work; we will carry out the same projects at a lower cost so that we can implement more initiatives with the same budget," Fouzul said.

The Padma Multipurpose Bridge Project was completed on June 30 this year, approximately 17 years after its inception in August 2007.

The project underwent several revisions, with the cost rising to Tk 32,605 crore.

At one point, Shafiqul Islam, the then project director, had estimated that around Tk 1,600 crore might not be needed, predicting the final project cost to be around Tk 31,000 crore.

Relief that has yet

Azadnagar, Harun Bazar, and Hajiganj are also reeling from the flood's devastation, with no relief in sight.

More than three dozen flood-affected people confirmed that they have not received any government relief in the past week.

"We want to eat rice," said Kader Hossain.

"Some students came a few days ago with biscuits and puffed rice. I requested them to arrange for rice, but there's still no news from them."

'JOURNALIST, TAKE MY NAME'

"Journalist, please take my name," said Hafez Ahmed with a trembling voice.

The elderly man mistakenly believed that having his name recorded might somehow place him on a food distribution list.

"I have been starving for the last two days," he added.

Nazir Hossain and Malek Uddin, two other elderly villagers from Kelakopa, stood beside him, their eyes filled with the same forlorn hope.

"Write down my name and details," Malek Uddin said.

"I have no money to buy food. Please leave me some money," he added.

WHEN THE ROAD BECOMES HOME

In Kelakopa, over two hundred desperate people are now living on the road after floodwaters inundated their homes and farmland.

The 10-kilometre road is under threat, with large cracks and cave-ins appearing in several places. All the villages under Ramgoti Upazila have been forced to take refuge on the roads, with no other options left.

Tariboon Begum, 45, of Mirerpara village, who has taken shelted at a neighbouring house, shared her plight

"After I lost my husband years ago, I have been working in households to look after my son. Now my 16-year-old son studies in a madrasa. We didn't have anything else apart from our little house, and now it has been destroyed by the flood," she lamented.

Day labourer Shadekul Islam of Hajipur village said, "My mud house was completely destroyed in the flood, and I am now left helpless. I don't need any relief; I need urgent rehabilitation."

He also has been forced to take shelter at a nearby house.

Junab Ali, a member of Ward 7 in Tilagaon union, said over 50 houses in the ward have been completely destroyed, with an additional 60-70 houses suffering significant damage.

Chairman Abdul Malik of Tilagaon Union Parishad urged wealthy individuals and the government to help rehabilitate the affected households.

"The flood has severely impacted hundreds of homes, agricultural lands, and fish farms, leaving many people destitute. The total damage assessment is underway," he said.

Upazila Project Implementation Officer Shimul Ali said, "Based on preliminary reports, 350 houses have been totally destroyed, with 2150 houses damaged partially. A comprehensive survey is being conducted through local representatives."

Upazila Nirbahi Officer Mohiuddin said the process of listing the victims is ongoing.

Once completed, the list will be submitted to higher authorities for further assistance, he added.

He also said the government has provided adequate relief and the relief operations are ongoing.

Determined to support his family, Zakir began working as a mechanic at the age of fifteen. Over the years, he earned a modest living repairing pipelines in Kanchpur.

On July 21, Zakir was having a meal at a local shop near Kanchpur Bridge on the Dhaka-Chattogram highway.

Students were protesting in the area, demanding reform in the quota system. Soon, a clash broke out between the protesters and law enforcers.

Suddenly, a bullet struck Zakir in the back. He fell to the ground, and despite his co-workers' efforts to get him to safety, he succumbed to his injuries.

Zakir's body was brought back to their village the same day. He was laid to rest in the family graveyard the following day.

Misili Begum, 65, is now beyond consolation.

"He was my everything... My son was just 22. His daily earnings were crucial for our survival. We did not have much; still, we saved whatever we could to have a place of our own," she said.

Misili remembered Zakir's warnings over the phone, urging her to stay indoors due to the escalating violence.

"Despite his own fears, my son continued to work, only to become a victim of the violence," said the grieving mother.

"All my hope is gone... I have nothing left to live for," she said.

Siam succumbed to his injuries that day. His body was laid to rest in his village graveyard.

Siam's father, Abdul Kuddus, reflected on his son's unfulfilled dreams with a heavy heart.

From a young age, Siam wanted to establish a madrasa in their village, where he could teach others, said Kuddus.

"Siam was a devout and dedicated young man," he shared. "He not only pursued his studies but also worked as a Muazzin, contributing to our community."

His mother, Laki Khatun, said, "My son had promised not to join the protest, but when his friends took part, he couldn't stay away."

In the midst of their grief, the family has chosen to forgo seeking legal action.

"I have lost my son. Nothing can bring him back," Kuddus said.

He said with the constant coordination of Biman Bangladesh Airlines, which is providing ground handling facilities at the HSIA, the airport staffers are working throughout the day to improve the quality of baggage handling facilities.

"Passengers are getting 80 to 85 percent of their luggage within the stipulated time and for the rest of the luggage we are in a constant process to improve. It's a continuing process."

He said the first piece of luggage is now available at the belt within 18 minutes of the aircraft touching the boarding bridge and shutting down its engines and the last item is available within 60 minutes.

"We are trying our best so that passengers get the luggage and complete immigration formalities in the shortest possible time," he added.

As the procession marched towards a police station, clashes broke out, and police fired on the crowd.

Saiful was caught in the crossfire. A bullet struck him in the chest. He succumbed to his injuries at a local hospital.

The harrowing sight of her brother falling to the ground, wounded and helpless, left Rimu shattered. "I can't believe he's gone," she said, as she was in tears. "I saw him fall and knew instantly that we had lost him."

The grief was not confined to Rimu alone. Their mother, Khodeja Khatun, had been eagerly anticipating Saiful's return.

"I had hoped to see him come back healthy and happy," Khodeja lamented. "But instead, we had to bury him after two days."

"Saiful was our main source of income," she said. "Now, I don't know how we will manage the educational expenses for my daughters."

Family members and locals have called for a thorough investigation into his killing, demanding justice for the remittance fighter whose life was cut short by violence.

He further advised the party men to act responsibly, underscoring the importance of maintaining the trust of the people.

"No action should be taken that would undermine the people's trust," Tarique added.

Meanwhile, BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday called for state compensation for the families of individuals who were abducted and killed during the previous Awami League government.

Speaking at a rally in front of the BNP's central office in Nayapaltan, Fakhrul highlighted the need for justice and reparation for the victims.

GAZI TYRES FACTORY

Fire completely doused, families seek missing loved ones

SHAHEEN MOLLAH and SOURAV HOSSAIN SIAM

The massive fire at the Gazi Tyres factory in Rupganj, Narayanganj, was completely extinguished at 6:05pm yesterday, after five days.

Confirming the development, Abdul Mannan, deputy assistant director of the Narayanganj fire service, said all fire service personnel had returned to their stations by 8:00pm.

Army, police and BGB personnel have taken position in front of the facility.

Mannan said they had not yet found any bodies inside the facility.

Due to the building's hazardous condition, an extensive search operation remains risky and has not been conducted, he said.

However, drones were used to spot the possible presence of any bodies inside the six-storied building, he added.

On Monday, law enforcement officials, district administrators, and the factory owners will meet to discuss the next steps for retrieving any potential remains.

"The building needs to be partially dismantled to conduct a thorough search operation. This will take some time," said Mannan.

Around 100 families of the missing persons gathered outside the factory yesterday, protesting and demanding answers about their loved ones.

The families, who believe their relatives were trapped inside when the fire broke out, are calling for information on their status and, if deceased, the recovery of their remains.

Representatives from these families were taken inside the premises by fire service personnel to make them understand the risks involved in searching the severely damaged building.

Mohammad Rana, brother-in-law of Mamun, a worker who was reportedly trapped inside the factory, expressed frustration over the ongoing situation.

"Fire service should not have left without retrieving the bodies of those burnt inside. All bodies from inside the tower should be retrieved immediately," he said.

The factory, owned by former minister and lawmaker Golam Dastagir Gazi, was set ablaze on August 25 by arsonists. The fire destroyed much of the facility.

A pleasant surprise at Dhaka airport

Inbound passengers say they are getting luggage quickly

RASHIDUL HASAN

For passengers with past experience of the Dhaka airport, the prospect of flying into Bangladesh's capital has not been a pleasant one, chiefly because of the seemingly interminable delays in getting their checked-in baggage.

But things appear to have changed as passengers are now getting their luggage very soon after landing at the Hazrat Shahalal International Airport.

"It's a dramatic change at the airport. Earlier, we had to wait for a long time to get luggage and also for completion of immigration formalities. But at present the scenario has changed. I have got my luggage immediately after reaching the luggage belt," said Md Kamal Hossain, who came from New York by a Qatar Airlines flight recently.

Different groups in Facebook lauded the recent positive change at the Dhaka airport over the past two weeks or so.

Abul Kasem, who recently came from Singapore, said the behaviour of immigration and other officials had changed. He also said he got his luggage within 20 minutes of landing.

'I want protection'

Says Priya who was severely injured in attack by her husband in Dhaka

SHAHEEN MOLLAH

It was around 1:30pm on April 10 when Tasnim Sarah Priya, 27, a resident of Uttara in the capital, was saying her prayer at their rented house.

Suddenly, she was startled by a loud noise from another room, which quickly escalated into a horrifying attack.

"My husband burst into the room and started slashing my face with a knife. I tried to defend myself, but he kept attacking," Priya told The Daily Star.

Priya was initially treated at Dhaka Medical College Hospital and was later admitted to Health and Hope Hospital in the capital, where she spent 20 days recovering from her severe injuries.

After receiving treatment, she was living with her mother in Uttara.

On May 22, Priya filed a case against her husband, Mohammad Roni, and three of his associates under the Suppression of Violence against Women and Children Act and the Dowry Prohibition Act.

The brutal attack left Priya's face severely disfigured, and she now avoids mirrors altogether.

"I can't bear to look at my face. Every scar terrifies me. I haven't been able to sleep at night since the attack," she said, breaking down in tears.

Roni, a trader who owns twelve shops across various districts including Dhaka and Chattogram, married Priya in November 2022. They have one child.

However, their marriage quickly turned abusive, with Priya enduring repeated physical and emotional torment.

"In the last few months, my husband forbade me from using Facebook and even restricted me from leaving the house," Priya said.

Defying these restrictions, Priya sought a divorce, which further enraged Roni.

"When I mentioned divorce, he became furious and assaulted me multiple times. One day, he came to my mother's house and attacked my face," Priya said.

After filing the case, Priya revealed that her husband had threatened her, demanding she withdraw the charges.

"On Tuesday night, Roni came to my house, shouting that he would kill me. To save my life,

More than just NUMBERS

A 32-year-old expatriate fatally shot in Dhaka. A 19-year-old student gunned down by police in Sirajganj. A man, aged 22, shot in Kanchpur. At least 400 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, parents, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

Homecoming ends in heartbreak

Malaysia expatriate Saiful, 32, fatally shot in Uttara

OUR CORRESPONDENT,
Mymensingh

The return of 32-year-old Saiful Islam Sekul was eagerly awaited in his village home of Baroikandi in Netrakona's Durgapur.

Saiful had travelled from Malaysia to Dhaka to reunite with his family. But his homecoming on August 3 would turn into a heartbreak for his loved ones, culminating in a tragedy that would forever alter their lives.

Saiful, the second eldest of four siblings, had been working in Malaysia for a year to provide for his family following the death of his father.

His efforts in sending remittances had been a lifeline for his eight-member family, ensuring their sustenance and well-being.

After landing in Dhaka, he stayed at a relative's house in Uttara.

On August 5, Saiful, accompanied by his younger sister Lima Akter Rimu, joined the student protests in the area.

The atmosphere was tense as thousands gathered to protest.

AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPU,
Pabna

Nineteen-year-old Siam Hossain, a madrasa student, had his future mapped out.

He finished his "hafezi" degree and had plans to further advance his studies. Siam also balanced his academic ambitions with a commitment to his community. Working as a "Moyazzin" at a mosque in Betil village of Sirajganj district, he was a familiar figure in his local circle.

But on August 4, his aspirations were cut tragically short.

Siam joined a student protest in the Enayetpur market area. As the procession moved toward the local police station, tensions escalated, and the authorities opened fire on the demonstrators.

Among those caught in the crossfire was Siam, who was

Says mother of Zakir, 22, who was shot in Kanchpur

OUR CORRESPONDENT,
Mymensingh

Two years ago, Zakir, a 22-year-old from Durgapur upazila in Netrakona, made a life-changing investment.

With the goal of building a home for himself and his mother, he purchased a 15-decimal plot of land for Tk 150,000. This was not merely an investment in property, but in a future he dreamt of -- a safe haven for his family.

Tragically, Zakir's aspirations were shattered by a single, devastating bullet.

Zakir's father had passed away when he was just five. His mother, Misili Begum, was left to raise him alone. To make ends meet, she migrated to the Natun Bazar area in the capital two decades ago, taking on menial jobs such as trash collection and housemaid work.

Her tireless efforts ensured Zakir had a chance at a better life.

Taliban refuses to cooperate with UN Afghan mission

AFP, Kabul

The Taliban government's morality ministry said it would not cooperate with the United Nations mission in Afghanistan, calling it "opposing side".

The announcement comes after the UN mission (UNAMA) warned that a new morality law -- requiring women to cover up completely and not raise their voices -- would damage prospects for engagement with the international community.

The Taliban Ministry for the Propagation of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice (PVPV) said that "due to its continued propaganda, the PVPV will not provide any support or cooperation with UNAMA, which will be considered as an opposing side".

"We want international organisations, countries, and those individuals who criticised the mentioned law to respect the religious values of Muslims and refrain from such criticisms and statements that insult Islamic values and sanctities," the ministry said in a statement posted to social media Thursday.

Last week, the United Nations special rapporteur on human rights in Afghanistan, Richard Bennett, was banned from entering the country after joining other UN experts in a statement urging the international community to "not normalise the de facto authorities or their appalling human rights violations".

The Taliban government's 35-article morality law was published in the official gazette on July 31.

It imposes wide-ranging rules on men's clothing and attending prayers as well as bans on keeping photos of living beings, homosexuality, animal fighting, playing music in public and non-Muslim holidays.

US ready to turn page on Trump

Says Democratic presidential candidate Kamala Harris in first interview

AFP, Savannah

Kamala Harris declared Thursday that Americans are ready to turn the page on Donald Trump as she reached out to centrist voters in her first interview since her dramatic entry into November's presidential election.

The 59-year-old Democrat insisted on CNN that she would be tough on illegal immigration and support controversial oil and gas fracking.

"I am the best person to do this job," Harris said in a joint interview with her running mate Tim Walz while on the campaign trail in Georgia.

"I think people are ready to turn the page on that," she said. "People are ready for a new way forward."

The Democrat also said that she would name a Republican to her cabinet if she wins, in another sign that she is reaching out to wavering middle-of-the-road voters.

Trump branded the interview "BORING!!!" in a post on social media.

The Republican former president called Harris the "greatest flip-flopper" as he addressed a rally in the swing state of Michigan, before mocking her appearance in the interview.

"She didn't look like a leader to me," he said later.

Harris rejected criticism that she has shifted positions on politically sensitive issues including fracking, which she once opposed but now supports, and illegal migration over the Mexican border, where she has taken a harder line.

Addressing criticism that she had been too soft on immigration -- a core part of Trump's right-wing message -- Harris said that as president she would sign tough legislation.

Her comments appeared designed to court centrist voters worried by immigration and fuel costs. But in a nod to her left-leaning supporters, she insisted that she had not fundamentally shifted.

"My values have not changed," Harris said.

On another hot-button topic on the US political landscape, Harris urged a ceasefire in Gaza, but told CNN that she would not change President Joe Biden's policies for key US ally Israel, including deliveries of weaponry.

"No, we have to get a deal done," she said, adding that she was "unwavering" in her support for Israel but that "far too many innocent Palestinians have been killed."

Hasina made accused

Four former MPs – Rezwan Ahmed Taufiq, Afzal Hossain, Sohrab Uddin and Noor Mohammad – are among the 88 people named as accused in the case. Besides, 200-300 unknown individuals were made accused in the case, said the OC.

According to the case statement, a procession of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement and BNP leaders and activists was attacked in front of the district Awami League office on August 4.

Matiur alleged in the case that the AL leaders and activists attacked the participants of the procession with firearms, batons and sharp weapons.

During the attack, some BNP leaders and activists ran to save their lives and took shelter in the house of District AL Assistant General Secretary Syed Ashfaqul Islam Titu in Khormaptri area.

Later, AL activists confined them and set them on fire, killing two BNP activists – Zulkar Hossain, 38, and Anjana, 28, the case statement said.

It added that many others had been injured by bullets, sharp weapons and batons.

In Munshiganj, a case was filed over the death of a 22-year-old man during the student-led uprising on August 4.

Besides Hasina and Quader, Munshiganj District Awami League President Mohammad Mohiuddin, the unit's General Secretary Lutfur Rahman, and ex-Munshiganj MPs Faisal Biplab, Mrinal Kanti Das, and Sagufta Yasmin Emily were made accused in the murder case.

As many as 313 people, including Mohiuddin's younger brother Anis Uzzaman, former chairman of Sadar Upazila Parishad, Jubo League leader Jalal Uddin Rumi Rajon, and activists of AL and its student wing Chhatra League, were also named as accused in the case, while 200-300 people were made unidentified accused.

Shefali Begum, grandmother of victim Noor Mohammad Dipzal, filed the case at Munshiganj Sadar Police Station around 9:00am.

"No one has been arrested in this case yet," said Thander Khairul Hasan, additional superintendent of police at Munshiganj Sadar Circle.

North Islampur resident Dipzal was shot dead during the student-led movement in the Supermarket area of Munshiganj town a day before the Awami League's fall.

Two other residents of the North Islampur area – Riazul Faraji, 38, and Md Sajal, 30, were also shot dead at the same place on that day.

In Gazipur, Hasina and former Liberation War affairs minister AKM Mozammel Haque are among 57 people accused in a case over the loss of eyesight of 18-year-old college student Likhon.

Likhon's father Monir Hossain filed the case at Gazipur Sadar Police Station on Thursday night. The police station's OC Mostafizur Rahman confirmed the case to The Daily Star yesterday.

The other accused include former state minister for youth and sports Zahid Ahsan Russell, former Gazipur City Corporation mayor Jahangir Alam, Metropolitan Awami League Vice President Matiur Rahman and General Secretary Ataullah Mondal.

Another 300 unidentified people were also accused in the case.

India appears positive

The high commissioner also discussed other issues, including the safety of Hindus and minorities in Bangladesh. The envoy also informed the chief adviser that the flooding in eastern Bangladesh was caused due to excessive rain, said Jaiswal.

'HASINA'S DEPORTATION'

Responding to questions about former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's "deportation" to Bangladesh and if India has received any formal request from that country about sending her back, the spokesperson said, "This is in the domain of hypothesis, and it is not our habit to answer hypothetical questions."

Asked about India's stance on Hasina's status after her diplomatic passport was revoked and the fact that she could stay in India for 45 days out of which three to four weeks have already elapsed, Jaiswal refused to give any direct answer.

Jaiswal reiterated that Hasina came to India on August 5 on a "very short notice" and this sort of question about sending her back "lies in the realm of hypothetical issues."

Asked about the fate of India's bilateral development projects in Bangladesh, Jaiswal said the projects and cooperation with Bangladesh have been affected by the recent turmoil and some individuals involved in those projects had to return due to the law-and-order situation there.

"Once the situation there stabilises and normalcy is restored, we will engage with the interim government in Bangladesh and see how to take forward the [development] projects."

Jaiswal recalled the attack on the Indira Gandhi Cultural Centre in Dhaka and said Bangladesh authorities had tried their best to control law and order. "We hope the turmoil will end, and development cooperation will resume."

He said right now India is issuing visas to Bangladeshis only in emergency cases like medical visas. However, he said issuance of visas in other categories would resume when the situation improves in Bangladesh.

MODI-BIDEN TALKS ON BANGLADESH

Jaiswal said the issue of Bangladesh was "substantially discussed" during the telephone conversation between Prime Minister Narendra Modi and US President Joe Biden last week.

Asked about reports of differences between the read-outs issued by the two countries after the talks, he said some people misunderstood the readouts.

"Let me tell you these claims are uninformed, tendentious, and motivated ..."

"Firstly, the press releases issued after conversation between leaders are not like joint statements where everything is negotiated and mutually agreed upon. Secondly, such press releases are not meant to be comprehensive read-outs of such conversations. And finally, it is not unusual for two sides to emphasise different aspects of the same conversation in their respective read-outs."

The MEA spokesperson said, "The absence of an aspect of one press release or the other is not evidence of its absence in the conversation itself. I'm very much aware of the contents of the conversation between the prime minister and the president of the United States. And I can tell you that our press release is an accurate and faithful record of what transpired in the conversation and the subject of Bangladesh has been highlighted.

"It [the issue of Bangladesh] was substantially discussed by the two leaders," he added.

The read-out issued by the Indian Prime Minister's Office mentioned that the issue of Bangladesh and the minorities in that country did come up during the talks with the two leaders sharing concern over it.

However, the read-out issued by the White House did not mention the issues.

sub-registrar, a journalist of Ekattor Television and 150 unnamed individuals.

Samiul Alim, organising secretary of Shibganj Upazila unit of Jubo Dal, filed this case with the court of Bogura Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate Shukanta Saha yesterday.

Shibganj Police Station OC Abdur Rouf said they were yet to register the case. "We've heard about the case, but nobody has come to the police station to file it."

According to the case statement, the first eight accused ordered the others to attack a procession of students and protesters in Shibganj on August 5, the day the Awami League government was ousted in the face of the uprising.

The perpetrators used rods, bamboo sticks, crude bombs and firearms in a bid to kill the protesters, according to the charges.

Shahnewaj Bipul, one of the key accused and former vice chairman of Shibganj Upazila Council, opened fire at the protesters to kill Mushfiqur Rahman, who was wounded with 100-150 pellets in his chest, the case statement said.

ACC to start special drive

A member of the newly formed ACC team, speaking on condition of anonymity, said, "Since Sunday, we have received numerous complaints from across the country against many individuals. Many have communicated with us with evidence about the money some people have in their homes.

"If our team is allowed to work independently, we will be able to prevent a significant amount of money from being laundered abroad. We will start working in full swing within a day or two," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

BENAZIR, MATIUR TO BE SUED

The ACC has taken a policy decision to file cases next week against former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed and former National Board of Revenue member Matiur Rahman over amassing illegal wealth, said officials.

Since April, the ACC has been investigating the illegal assets of Benazir, his wife Jissan Mirza, and their daughters Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir and Tahseen Raisa Binte Benazir. The commission found significant evidence against them.

Benazir and his family members were summoned twice to appear before the ACC, but they did not show up or submit statements about their wealth.

The commission is now preparing two cases against them -- one for amassing illegal wealth and another for failing to submit the wealth statements, officials said.

If convicted of possessing illegal wealth charges, Benazir, his wife and their daughters will face a maximum 10-year prison sentence. The highest punishment for the charges of not submitting wealth statement is three year's jail term.

The ACC is also preparing similar cases against Matiur, his two wives, and three children.

After receiving notices from the ACC, Matiur and his family members requested the graft watchdog to extend the time for filing their wealth statements. The ACC granted their request, but they failed to submit the asset statements.

ACC lawyer Khurshid Alam Khan said they found evidence of acquiring illegal wealth by Benazir, Matiur and their family members. "They will be sued once the commission decides on this."

Fakhrul calls for UN-led investigation

"It is also encouraging that for the first time in Bangladesh, a UN team has arrived to take steps against the misdeeds committed during the [Sheikh Hasina's] autocratic regime."

He urged the government to engage with the UN Human Rights Commission to investigate all the crimes against humanity, killings, and enforced disappearances that occurred over the last 15 years. "If the interim government makes this request, the UN will certainly do it."

The BNP leader thanked the interim government for forming a five-member commission to find out forcibly disappeared people by the law enforcement agencies.

Justifying his call for providing allowances to the families of the victims of enforced disappearance, Fakhrul said many of those families are enduring significant hardship and struggling to support themselves and raise their children.

He said the state must restore the rights of the families of those who have been subjected to enforced disappearances and ensure justice for them.

"We know the identities of those responsible for enforced disappearances. We need to find and hold accountable those who were in positions of authority, and ensure they are punished."

He expressed optimism that the perpetrators of enforced disappearances will be arrested and punished soon.

In observance of the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances, the solidarity meeting was held in front of the BNP's central office in the capital's Nayapaltan.

Family members of the victims of enforced disappearance also spoke at the meeting.

Pakistan PM calls Yunus

Sharif expressed his willingness to provide support to the people affected by the floods in southern and southeastern parts of Bangladesh.

The Pakistan PM emphasised the need to revitalise relations between the two countries, saying there remains immense potential in expanding bilateral trade and economic cooperation.

The prime minister underscored the necessity to resume mechanisms like foreign secretary-level consultations and the Joint Economic Commission between Dhaka and Islamabad. He also stressed the need to reinvigorate the SAARC process.

Prof Yunus said he was committed to revitalising SAARC as a top regional forum to boost ties among the South Asian nations. He highlighted the necessity for holding regular SAARC summits and holding a brief meeting among the heads of state and governments of the SAARC states at the earliest.

Yunus also called for strengthening economic ties and people-to-people connections between the two nations.

After Prof Yunus was sworn in as the chief adviser, PM Sharif earlier congratulated him in a message.

1.83cr affected in Bangladesh

The most affected districts are Noakhali, Cumilla, Laxmipur, Feni, Chattogram, and Moulvibazar. Rural roads, agricultural fields, and fishponds have been submerged, cutting off essential access and severely impacting livelihoods. Crops in over 3.39 lakh hectares have been completely damaged, it said.

The report said that over 7,000 schools are closed due to flooding, affecting 17.5 lakh primary students across the affected districts.

Displacement and overcrowded temporary shelters have heightened security concerns, including for women and girls. The flooding of water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH) facilities across affected areas is of concern in terms of health and water-borne diseases, it said.

Meanwhile, over 20 lakh children in eastern Bangladesh are at risk as floods swept through homes, schools, and villages, Unicef said yesterday.

These floods are the worst in eastern Bangladesh in 34 years, said a press release from the UN agency.

Unicef said millions of children and families are stranded without food and emergency relief supplies. Government officials and volunteers are conducting rescue operations, although access remains difficult in some areas.

"The devastating floods in the eastern parts of Bangladesh are a tragic reminder of the relentless impact of extreme weather events and the climate crisis on children. Far too many children have lost loved ones, their homes, schools, and now are completely destitute," said Emma Brigham, deputy representative of Unicef Bangladesh.

UN to dispatch fact-finding team human rights defenders, representatives of political parties, and minority and indigenous communities.

In its meetings, the team discussed the modalities of the investigation into the rights violations and abuses committed during the recent violence and unrest, as requested by the interim government.

It also discussed areas including civic space, the need for truth, justice, healing, reparation and reconciliation, and other human rights issues that can be included in the reform process.

The way the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) can provide sustained support to that process was also discussed.

Ravina said Turk warmly welcomed Bangladesh's decision to sign the instrument of accession to the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and the establishment of a five-member national inquiry commission to determine the whereabouts of individuals forcibly disappeared allegedly by law enforcement agencies.

"The issue of enforced disappearances has a long and painful history in Bangladesh, on which the UN Human Rights Office and UN human rights mechanisms have advocated robustly," she said.

"We stand ready to support the Commission in its work, which should be in close consultation with victims and their families and in line with international human rights standards," the spokesperson said.

The UN Human Rights Office looks forward to supporting the interim government and people of Bangladesh at this pivotal moment to revitalise democracy, seek accountability and reconciliation, and advance human rights for all the people in Bangladesh, she added.

WE NEED TIME TO HEAL: TOYA

SHARMIN JOYA

From being vocal on social media to taking to the streets near Central Shaheed Minar, actress Mumtaheena Chowdhury Toya stood firm with the students in their anti-discrimination movement with a one-demand point, and demanded justice for the unjust killings disguised as 'defense'.

Toya and her husband, Sayed Zaman Shawon, who is also an artiste, both joined the movement. They have also sent aid and volunteered to support flood victims.

We invited the actress for an exclusive photoshoot and a conversation over coffee.

When did it first hit you to take to the streets and join the protest?

On July 18, it deeply shook me when I came across a video of a bloodied college student, still in her uniform—a scene no one should ever witness. I couldn't remain silent and called for an end to the violence on social media.

Little did we know how the situation would escalate—internet servers were shut down, and horrifying reports of innocent children being killed on rooftops and inside their homes left me terrified. It was a now-or-never moment for me, and I had to stand up against it. By leaving all fear behind, I joined with the Drishshyo Maddhyom Shilpi Shomaj, formed by the artistes of our industry.

With the interim government under pressure to bring changes immediately, what are your thoughts on the high expectations people have?

I believe we need to be a bit more patient and give them time to settle in and understand before expecting changes. However, the anger and frustration accumulated over the past 15 years will take time to heal. Having regained our voices, we are often making things difficult for those in power.

It will take time for people to understand what true freedom of speech is—that it is not spreading hatred or misinformation, but allowing everyone to participate in constructive criticism.

Moreover, we must continue the practice of questioning to prevent any further abuse of power.

As the nation anticipates systemic change, what shifts have you already observed?

Regaining our lost unity, which came at a great cost, is a credit to the students, and we must preserve it. Despite the challenges, the nation's support for flood victims marks a significant move.

If the Chief Advisor secured Tk 1,000 crore in relief with just one meeting, I believe he can drive major changes over time.

Interestingly, someone recently shared an incident where a traffic police officer was depressed because he could no longer receive bribes and thus couldn't pay for land on which he had already put a down payment on. This change reflects a growing sense of conscience among people, who are no longer resorting to bribes. While it may be unfortunate for the officer, it's a sign that citizens are becoming morally stronger.

One major demand in the aftermath was the abolishment of the Cyber Security Act, which significantly impacted press freedom and freedom of speech. Do you support the cancellation of this act?

As a victim of cyberbullying myself, I advocate for reforming the law rather than repealing it.

The law should protect individuals rather than harass them. It's also crucial to prevent the spread of propaganda or rumours, especially since the next generation relies heavily on the internet for information rather than traditional textbooks.

Having said that, we should also consider how similar laws are implemented internationally.

On a lighter note, you and your husband both share the same profession. Do you see this as an advantage or a disadvantage?

It's both. The advantage is that you both understand each other's lifestyles and can manage expectations regarding socialising or family time. On the downside, working in the same field and sharing a common circle can limit personal space and conversations since you're already aware of each other's work and situations surrounding it. Life is more interesting with a few mysteries in it (laughs).

WHAT'S PLAYING
Rilli

Rilli
ZAINUB KHAWAJA

Zainub J Khawaja's Rilli is a haunting exploration of perpetual rebirth and existential struggle. Opening with the line "mein tor jor ke," the song encapsulates the feeling of being trapped in a cycle.

The composition stands out for its deliberate pacing, allowing the melody to unfold with a meditative grace, unlike the hurried nature of many contemporary tracks. The instrumental solo, featuring a flute-like instrument, adds a hypnotic quality, drawing listeners into its introspective depths.

While 'rilli' technically means patchwork, the song's lyrics evoke the symbolism of the ouroboros, representing the anguish and struggle of enduring endless rebirth. Rilli is not just a song but a contemplation on whether one should continually reshape themselves to conform to the world.

WHAT'S ON THE GRAM

JIN

The oldest member of the famed K-pop group BTS, Jin recently graced the cover of Harper's Bazaar Korea for its September 2024 issue, exuding elegance in a coffee brown suit paired with maroon gloves that perfectly complemented his metallic necklace.

The singer thereby showcased the Men's New Fall/Winter 2024 Collection from Gucci, looking impeccably stylish.

Jin also made waves when it was announced that he would be appearing as a guest on Netflix's upcoming variety show, Dae Hwan Jang Kian Jang. Fans are eagerly anticipating his Netflix debut as they are excited to see him in this new reality show.

1-MINUTE REVIEW

Marvel offers ample uncensored fervour in 'Deadpool & Wolverine'

In Deadpool & Wolverine, when Deadpool (Ryan Reynolds) is left with no other option but to find a proper "anchor" for his world (Earth-10005) after the sacrificial death of Wolverine (Hugh Jackman) in the 2017 film Logan under the 20th Century Studios banner, he ends up finding the worst variant of Wolverine.

The Shawn Levy R-rated directorial movie, currently being screened across theatres worldwide, then becomes a perpetually crazy and unfiltered ride for Deadpool — hoping to save the earth from the clutches of Cassandra Nova (Emma Corrin), Charles Xavier's evil twin.

Fraught with fighting each other and then the actual villains, Deadpool and Wolverine also make appearances alongside several Marvel characters from their respective glory days under the 20th Century Studios' production.

The movie, in all its truth, pays homage to classic heroes from before the MCU era. With Disney's acquisition of 21st Century Fox, it seems that Feige is honouring these earlier films and characters, hinting at the possibility of future Marvel additions.

Stop political capture of public sector

Reports on BNP-linked groups' activities deeply alarming

The culture of patronage politics that has devastated our nation over the past decades—fostering corruption, undermining meritocracy, and weakening institutions—begins at grassroots with the capture of public contracts and extortion by political thugs. And this is what seems to be happening again, with the regime change only replacing the thugs. Over the past two-three weeks, we've had a number of reports on how BNP-linked leaders, civil servants, and professional groups have been trying to establish control in various sectors. This suggests that patronage politics may continue to be around even after a political government returns to power, leading eventually to regulatory capture by vested interest groups, unless reforms are undertaken to prevent it.

The latest example has its setting in Nagar Bhaban, which houses the headquarters of Dhaka South City Corporation (DSCC). According to a report by Prothom Alo, BNP-affiliated activists and employees have been trying to establish their dominance through a mix of showdowns, intimidation, assaults, and even extortion, creating a tense atmosphere there. They have their eyes on proceeds and contracts/leasing from various public works, projects, and markets run under the DSCC. Recently, a contractor's representative was beaten over the submission of a tender. Five high-ranking officials were also harassed, and one even beaten publicly. Promotions and placements are also being controlled.

Prothom Alo has earlier reported how BNP-linked individuals forcibly took control of the Shimulia ferry terminal, fish market, and trawler docks in Munshiganj's Louhajanj upazila by allegedly threatening and assaulting legitimate leaseholders. They have established a lucrative extortion racket there, collecting hundreds of thousands of taka daily. We have heard of a similar capture of many other terminals and markets, transport hubs and associations, footpaths, slums, and such public spaces that were previously controlled by or leased out to Awami League-linked leaders.

The question is, what is BNP doing about it? Officially, the party remains committed to preventing such exploitations. Acting Chairman Tarique Rahman on Thursday issued a warning saying that there is no place for criminals and miscreants in the party. Another top leader has been more specific, vowing stern consequences for those indulging in extortion and illegal capture of the public sector. But hardly anything has come of these warnings yet. This means at least two things: either this message is not being delivered strongly enough to grassroots leaders and activities, through swift punitive actions to convey the seriousness of the message, or the party, beyond public condemnations, is still not serious enough about it.

Both scenarios are equally concerning. We urge the BNP leadership to take action matching its strong words. It must prevent its grassroots leaders, professional groups or anyone exploiting its name to establish dominance through exemplary punishment. As the leading party in the country now, BNP has a duty to not just support but also actively take part in the reforms being envisioned by the students and people that toppled the Awami League government. It must help do away with the political culture of yesteryears that has brought nothing but misery for the country. However, we also need institutional reforms to dismantle this entrenched culture, and for that, comprehensive actions from the interim government are essential.

Are we ignoring the dengue threat?

Proper action needed from city corporations, health authorities

After the student-led mass uprising toppled the Awami League government, there have been so many issues jostling for our attention that the danger of dengue during a rainy season got pushed to the background. Our dengue control measures have never been adequate. One additional challenge this time has been the leadership chaos within city corporations and municipalities making it difficult to do their jobs, including dengue control. According to the DGHS, 79 people have died and 12,343 have been infected from January 1 to August 29. Reportedly, hundreds of patients are getting admitted to hospitals across the country every day. This calls for proper interventions from the authorities.

The governance issues within the city corporations may complicate efforts, however. Although the administration has installed CEOs with full administrative and financial power to run the 12 city corporations, replacing the mayors, we have seen how the crisis of councillors is delaying or disrupting their activities. In Dhaka, where 66 out of 75 ward councillors in the south and 11 out of 54 councillors in the north have been reported absent or missing, the provision of 14 mandated services and important activities like sanitation and mosquito control are being hampered. Without effective coordination in the grassroots, any drive to prevent the spread of dengue may not be successful.

The dengue issue has acquired some urgency after heavy downpours and flooding in recent weeks. The flood has affected some 73 upazilas across 11 districts, including crowded municipal areas. Floodwaters have begun to recede now, leaving behind garbage scattered everywhere, which will require a clean-up. This along with waterlogging caused by continued rains in many parts of the country are reasons enough to worry about potential outbreaks of diseases, including mosquito-borne ones like dengue. This must not be taken lightly, especially after last year which went on to witness the deadliest dengue outbreak in the country's history. A total of 1,705 dengue-related deaths and 321,179 cases were reported in 2023. This was largely due to the inadequate and often unscientific measures taken by the authorities. We don't yet have a vector control policy; the insecticides sprayed are also of questionable quality. In addition, inclusive data, which can help in making targeted interventions, continues to elude us.

The political governments of the past two decades could not do much to control dengue, which only grew in intensity with each year. But people have a lot of expectations from the interim government, and they must not fail in this regard. For that, proper, scientifically driven, and centrally coordinated initiatives are a must. We urge the government to take the dengue threat seriously, taking proactive rather than reactive actions, so that it can be contained in time.

WHEN TEACHERS BECOME TARGETS

Lessons from Emperor Alamgir

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza
is a professor of English at Dhaka University, and former pro-vice-chancellor of the University of Liberal Arts Bangladesh (ULAB).

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

How do you process the nationwide humiliation of teachers? You don't need to be an educator to sympathise with the several hundreds of teachers-cum-administrators who have faced mob-induced resignations. There is no shortage of video clips in this digital age: a young girl, maybe 12 or 13, along with her friends, grabbing her teacher's wrist to force her to sign the resignation letter; a young boy gleefully gloating that it felt good to slap "Dipon sir," or a teacher falling sick in the midst of the hullaballoo of his resignation demand. We don't know why the students turned against their teachers with such resentment. The timeline provides a glimpse as to "how" the events occurred without probing the question of "why" they happened. These images, however, are enough to spur copycat attacks and spread fear among possible sympathisers. It's not surprising that the deposed teacher's colleagues and guardians are often seen standing silent nearby.

Suddenly, it is politically incorrect to speak against students who have liberated us from the years of oppression. The men and women, holding onto those "powerful" institutional chairs, are considered enemies of the state or representatives of a decadent class that corrupted the system. We are witnessing a carnival in which our educational system collapses, unleashing the hidden demons. The situation is a reminder of Pol Potism, which promoted a socialist campaign shielding its communal and fascist agenda. Are the teachers really the stooges of the previous regime? Or, are they scapegoats whose removals are necessary for the aspirant opportunists to sneak in through the backdoor carved by student rebels? What have the teachers done to deserve this?

As a teacher, I have my biases towards my peers. Those who know me well also know my sympathies are for my students. I do believe teachers pour their souls into their students, generate an intergenerational power to educate them, and transform their lives. If teachers do not feel that way, this profession is not for them. All of my teachers at school and in my family have moulded me into a better version of myself. I never regretted for a single moment choosing my ill-paid profession. I am starting to harbour second thoughts after observing the widespread disrespect and undermining of our colleagues. Where did we go wrong? Why are we so out of touch with our students?

Ideally, teachers are not just dispensers of knowledge. They are shapers of character and morality. The recent turn of events has either strained or severed the bond between teachers and students. On social media, many people are sharing an anecdote about veteran educator Abdullah Abu Sayeed, who resisted several pressures to admit a student from a powerful family. He steadfastly maintained his position, asserting that the student would never mature into a "proper human," as he had already lost all respect for his teachers.

Professor Sayeed's rare conviction and courage moved me when I first read the titbits. I was fortunate to have teachers like him, who instilled a deep sense of pride in my profession. However, after allowing the idea to thaw for some time, I realised that this is precisely why the student rebellion is happening. Our pedagogy remains entrenched in an ancient era, perpetuating the belief that students should behave similarly to the characters in Kazi Kader Newaz's poem "Teachers' Dignity," in which Emperor Alamgir reportedly chided his crown prince for simply pouring water without using his hands to wash his teacher's feet. The sanitised portrayal of the Mughal Emperor serves two purposes: to idolise the status of a teacher and idealise a system that promotes hierarchy.

But we get a different picture of Emperor Alamgir when, in 1628, his teacher Mullah Sahe came to him seeking a reward after his former student had secured the throne. Rather than meeting him, the Emperor penned a letter that Lincoln Schuster included in A Treasury of Great Letters (1940). Quite bluntly, the emperor rebuked his teacher for using flattery to highlight Hindustan, undermining the strength of various European nations. The "fine philosophy" with which his teacher "amused him" was "a multitude of barbarous and dark words, proper to bewilder, perplex, and tire out the best wits, and only invented the better to cover the vanity and ignorance of men like yourself." Alamgir goes on to add, "If you had taken care to give me the knowledge of what we are and what are the first principles of things and had assisted me in forming in my mind a fit idea of the greatness of the universe," he would have acted similar to Alexander, who revered his master Aristotle. Alamgir reminds Mullah Sahe that he never learned how to "besiege a town or set an army in motion," making his education unfit for the "duties of a sovereign to his subjects and those of subjects to their sovereigns." His parting words were, "Go, and return to the village whence you have come, and let nobody know who you are or what has become of you."

I notice a similar behaviour among our students who have turned the table. The students have tasted power at a time when they are transitioning from boyhood to adulthood. This is a time when normally they struggle for self-identity, desire independence, and harbour natural inclinations to challenge authority. To guide them to the next stage of their lives, now more than ever, we need mentors who have an understanding of the complex situation. We need academic leaders who will know how to stabilise the environment and positively channel rebellious impulses for a constructive overhaul of the system.

Teachers need to do soul-searching to understand why they are so disconnected from their students. The old format of a teacher acting like a sage on stage will not work. We must understand that our students can easily gather more information with just a single click than we offer in classroom lectures. We need to redesign the curriculum to focus on learning beyond classrooms and practicing real-life skills to make ourselves relevant. The media must help restore teachers' importance in classrooms. Currently, we use media, social media, and real-life events to normalise aggression and violence as a means of expressing discontent. They are promoting copycat syndromes, where students mimic violent behaviours they see around them, believing it to be an effective means of asserting power or gaining attention. In the shaky law and order situation, our students may internalise the belief that challenging and even humiliating authority is acceptable or justified.

Sadly, these isolated incidents of violence and humiliation are spreading fear and uncertainty across educational institutions. Teachers are demoralised. The educational system faces a potential breakdown. Immediate steps must be taken to support teachers, providing them with the right tools, respect, and protection. To paint all teachers with a single brushstroke will be suicidal.

ILLUSTRATION: BIPLOB CHAKRABOTY

Most teachers are quite dedicated to their profession. Some teachers may have even been unable to fulfil their role due to institutional flaws and overwhelming challenges. Several systemic issues, including politics, inadequate training, a lack of resources, and the growing complexities of student behaviour, exacerbate the situation. I can only hope the government will recognise the gravity of the situation and act to restore respect for teachers and authority figures. In the long term, we will need a national curriculum for comprehensive education. Right now, we need conflict resolution for students, better support systems for teachers, and a national dialogue on the importance of respect and discipline within educational institutions.

Is forcing our educators to resign the right way to go?

ZABIN TAZRIN NASHITA

Following the resignation of Sheikh Hasina, the dissolution of parliament, and the formation of the interim government, we've been witnessing a massive change in university administrations all around the country. Vice-chancellors, pro-vice-chancellors, proctors, registrars, provosts and other members of university administration bodies have stepped down from their positions, mostly citing personal reasons behind their resignation. However, it's quite evident that the decision was made under pressure, particularly from students and teachers.

The active participation of students in demanding the resignation of VCs and other admin body members comes as no surprise. The nine-point demands put forth by students during the quota reform movement called for the resignation of VCs and proctorial bodies of Dhaka, Rajshahi, and Jahangirnagar universities. As VCs of the universities, their response to violence on students by law enforcement and Bangladesh Chhatra League members was not only inadequate, but it actively placed the students in harm's way. The situation was similar in many public and private universities throughout the country, where members of the admin body endangered the lives of students by refusing accommodation and support.

Following universities, students of schools and colleges also called for a change in their respective governing bodies, urging the resignation of principals and teachers based on misconduct during and before the protests.

While peacefully demanding the resignation of faculties and teachers is a justifiable right, the mob mentality borne out of it crossed a line. Administrative personnel had to step down under duress, often leading to disruptions in the educational institutions. A video of high school students trying to physically force the principal of a school to sign her resignation surfaced on the internet, which garnered criticism online.

During the Awami League (AL) government regime, most members in high positions at educational institutions were often affiliated with the political party, which has served as an incentive for students and staff to demand their resignation. Cases emerged of governing body members misusing their position to accept bribes, embezzling research funds, being involved in corruption, etc. While demanding justice for those guilty of such wrongdoing is fair, being affiliated with a political party alone shouldn't warrant such claims.

Rather than jumping the gun on demanding resignations, we need to step back and re-evaluate whether those in administrative positions are qualified enough. Someone should not be banned simply for their ties to the AL without evidence of misconduct, considering the political climate before the protests.

The forced resignations have led to an administrative vacuum in universities, causing delays in the resuming of classes, payment of the staff's salaries etc. The University of Dhaka has appointed Professor Niaz Ahmed Khan as the new VC. Pro-VC and proctorial positions have also been filled, and the student opinion so far is rather optimistic. This isn't the case in many other universities, where academic activities are halted, setting students back.

The administrative body members' first and foremost duties should be creating a sound structure for academics and protecting the students' interests. The politicisation of these positions made way for corruption. Student politics and the violent nature of it were also overlooked. Combinedly, these caused the students' interests to take a backseat.

Recent events have created a shift in the teacher-student dynamic in general. Since childhood, we've viewed our teachers as role models not only in academics but also in principles. The teachers, in turn, were to treat students with affection and guide them towards the moral path. Self-serving politics and corruption from the teachers' ends have disrupted this relationship and altered the students' perceptions, dampening their respect for educators. It is this very shift in dynamic that has caused students to lay hands on their teachers and force them to resign. This damage needs to be repaired.

Many consider the resignation of administrative staff a necessary step in reformation as they believe having apolitical persons in charge will bring about progress. That being said, forced resignations can create unforeseen circumstances and make way for unqualified candidates to assume positions of power. Persecution of teachers and forceful resignation not only expels qualified individuals but also reflects badly on students.

Students have expressed dissatisfaction at the news of Khulna University's VC Mahmood Hossain's resignation after his bold stance in protecting the students during the movement. So, it's obvious that the general expectation is that our educators will have our best interests at heart. We want to see a positive change in administration where student welfare and education quality are prioritised, research scopes are expanded, and resources and facilities are modernised and made accessible for students.

Resignation of corrupt individuals is indeed a necessary step in building a better education system, but it is up to us—students—to not give into mob mentality and ensure justice is done towards our educators.

'July victims are entitled to truth and justice'

Barrister Sara Hossain, a Supreme Court lawyer and the honorary executive director of Bangladesh Legal Aid and Services Trust (BLAST,) talks to Tamanna Khan of The Daily Star about how justice can be served to the victims of the July uprising.

What is your take on the wave of murder cases being filed against Awami League leaders and activists for killing people during the uprising?

From July 15 onwards, a number of really serious human rights violations and crimes occurred. These included extrajudicial killings and indiscriminate use of force including live rounds resulting in the deaths and injuries of hundreds of largely peaceful protesters, including children; arbitrary arrests and detentions, many even from their homes; and torture and ill-treatment in custody. People across the country watched these horrific scenes on television or live on the streets. Under Bangladesh laws, these acts constitute serious crimes and rights violations. It is, therefore, imperative that those responsible for these crimes are held to account—either for their direct involvement in them, or for directing, planning or coordinating them.

That's the context of the few weeks from July 15 onwards. But prior to that, for many years, we've seen other kinds of repression as well, including enforced disappearances. It's good to see that one of the first acts of the interim government has been to set up a commission to inquire into the allegations of enforced disappearances over the last 15 years or so.

During this time, there have also been allegations of systemic judicial harassment of individuals exercising their right to freedom of expression through the arbitrary application of repressive laws such as the Digital Security Act (DSA). We have seen a trigger-happy approach to using all other criminal defamation laws. Alongside that, we have seen how the media engaged in orchestrated hate campaigns (sometimes with the complicity of civil society), including against human rights defenders, academics and others. There's a wide range of issues to take on in seeking justice for the victims of the pervasive abuse of the legal process as well as abuse of power that have taken place in recent years.

Currently, we're seeing a wave of cases, all related to the killings that took place since July 16. They all concern allegations of the murder of one or more individuals. Some seem to be framed in similar terms, and are being filed either before courts or the police by private individuals. According to media reports, the cases refer to the instigators of the killings and mention senior political figures and high officials of the previous government. While they characterise some of these persons as "instigators" and "abettors", it's not clear if they identify the person who directly caused the killings and whose actions resulted in the death or injury of a person. In some instances, the media reported on the challenges victim families have faced to actually file a case. All the cases relate to allegations of murder, which is a cognisable offence, i.e. the police have powers to arrest without needing to get a warrant from a magistrate. There does not seem to be any guideline in place to limit the exercise of these powers.

What can the interim government do in this context?

The government may consider setting up one or more designated contact points for people who were victims of violations, or their family members, to seek assistance, information and advice. There have been very positive pronouncements about the formation of a foundation to assist people and the families of those who've been killed, but it may take time for that to be set up. Similarly, the government has announced a significant initiative to provide free medical assistance to those injured in the protests.

There's a fact-finding mission which is starting its work. There's a commission on enforced disappearances. These two bodies will be able to find and record information, produce documents and reports about what happened, and give us a direction on how people can seek protection going forward. But other contact points are needed because arrests, detentions, and torture won't fall into the terms of reference of the inquiry commission. We don't yet know what will be the full scope of the United Nations investigations.

Would the victims and their families get justice from the plethora of murder cases police filed against AL members?

There are murder cases being filed all over the country. Whether cases framed in this way are really serving the needs of the victims is something we need to identify. Victims are entitled to truth, justice, and reparations for the loss of their family members. It will be a great disservice to the victims if the manner of filing or investigating or conducting these cases results in a denial of justice. Under our law, anyone may file a case. However, there could be a process of scrutiny and assessment before further measures are taken.

In contrast, there are reports that some families of the victims of July killings have faced challenges at police stations. Some have had to wait for eight to ten hours at the police station before their cases were lodged. I've seen a recent government order instructing police stations to record people's complaints and FIRs. It would be helpful if more public information is disseminated about the options available for people to seek justice.

What is your take on the police's culture of implicating opposition members by writing fictitious FIRS, as we have seen in connection to some of the cases?

I think the government should look into how these policing practices are being conducted.

After the fall of Sheikh Hasina's government, there were no police on the ground for several days. There was a concern with security, and we all realised that a functional police force is essential. But police malpractices, unfortunately, are very well entrenched in the system. It's not just about the last two months or the last 15 years. For 50 years, we have seen these practices of writing fictitious FIRs, prosecuting so-called gayebi mamla. Sometimes, 1,000 unknown names were put into an FIR.

Now what you're describing, an FIR is written with one set of "cut and paste" sort of formula and it's being applied in a completely different context where everything has changed, but people maybe are just filling in the blanks on what they wrote. That can't be the way to reach a just outcome.

Now what you're describing, an FIR is written with one set of "cut and paste" sort of formula and it's being applied in a completely different context where everything has changed, but people maybe are just filling in the blanks on what they wrote. That can't be the way to reach a just outcome.

We have to investigate the facts as they are. We have to allow people to speak. With regard to the July killings, for the first time, we have a situation where we have extraordinary amounts of evidence available—huge numbers of eyewitnesses as well as huge quantities of open source material, including videos, captured in mobile phones, or uploaded online. Our laws were changed recently, and video content, if verified, is now admissible as evidence in courts to prove crimes. When we have so much evidence available, we need to gather and preserve it, instead of making up stories.

If the UN is going to investigate the killings of July and early August, then why are these murder cases going forward?

I presume one issue here is that people accused of violations need to be taken into custody, for investigations and inquiries. It's important for the government to use lawful means of taking people into custody.

When General Ershad fell after a popular movement in the 1990s, many people, who were to be brought to account, were detained using the Special Powers Act of 1974, which allows for orders of preventive detention. In 2007-2008, the emergency powers rules were used.

We don't have emergency powers rules now, as there's no state of emergency, but we do have the Special Powers Act. Many of us have spoken for many years about the problems with the Special Powers Act. While we would not like to have it on the books, the Special Powers Act does exist, and it does provide a lawful means of detaining a person. Although it can be challenged and the person will have recourse before the High Court, it gives you a lawful means of detaining somebody. Several lawyers have already commented on this.

With regard to the July killings, for the first time, we have a situation where we have extraordinary amounts of evidence available—huge numbers of eyewitnesses as well as huge quantities of open source material, including videos, captured in mobile phones, or uploaded online.

There's also Section 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that allows you to arrest someone on suspicion of committing an offence. There again, the Supreme Court has very strict guidelines on what needs to be done on making an arrest under Section 54, and those guidelines include informing the arrested person about the reason for their arrest, where they're being taken, and who is arresting them. So long as those guidelines are strictly followed, then a Section 54 arrest could perhaps be made.

So the question is whether it would be better to detain somebody under Special Powers Act or under Section 54, or other available processes, or just following the current process. I think the last thing we want is for the process of justice to be derailed, or in some way tainted, because that would be the worst disservice we could do as a people to the victims of these violations: denying them the opportunity of getting justice.

It is time to reform the publishing sector

Mahrukh Mohiuddin
is managing director of The University Press Limited (UPL).

MAHRUKH MOHIUDDIN

We have lost decades in our existential quest as a nation to build a knowledge-based society. Governments came and went, offering only lip-service and no unified vision or roadmap towards building a society where all everyday life decisions, whether personal or state-level, are based on some form of evidence-based knowledge. In other words, a society where expertise in any subject matter is valued, and where the creation and dissemination of local knowledge on a variety of subject matters is prioritised in the knowledge ecosystem.

The publishing industry is situated in the middle of making knowledge materials available to general readers, students, professionals, and public and private institutions alike. The publishing sector in any robust state plays a crucial role in reflecting the vibrancy of knowledge production and the creative output of a country. It mirrors the state of freedom of thought and expression that prevails in the country.

During the past regime, there was investment in books that only served a certain coterie, championing a certain narrative. Publications were part and parcel of the patronage system. Most government book acquisitions were primarily made to favour certain writers, bureaucrats and their family members who became best-selling writers overnight as their books were chosen for large government purchases.

It will not be an exaggeration to say that for the entire lifetime of the country, this sector has suffered negligence in terms of its development, and access to being able to construct policies. This is despite the fact that to compete in the global economy these days, knowledge is the most important asset and should receive due attention in terms of how best it can be produced and delivered in the most professional and internationally accepted ways. Here is where the educational institutions and research organisations of the country also need to play a strong partnership role.

During the past regime, there was investment in books that only served a certain coterie, championing a certain narrative. Publications were part and parcel of the patronage system. Most government book acquisitions were primarily made to favour certain writers, bureaucrats and their family members who became best-selling writers overnight as their books were chosen for large government purchases. The merit of the books or the audience for whom the books were being purchased were hardly ever considered. There was no transparency in the process of project formulation, book selection and payments. We are aware of scams including the one about the Department of Primary Education's expenditure of Tk 150 crores in 2020 to purchase books for setting up Bangabandhu Corners in 65,700 schools. Out of this amount, over Tk 20 crores went to buying copies of only three books by someone named Najmul Hossain. The books were published by two entities owned by him. This is just one example among many such projects. An investigation ought to be conducted to unearth the extent of corruption and misappropriation of government funds in the name of projects for purchasing low quality, inappropriate books, or materials that only portray biased narratives about the country.

Under the current circumstances, despite the unprecedented challenges ahead, we are hopeful that this sector will receive renewed priority in forming a long-term unified and coordinated national vision. Therefore, I would like to place some recommendations that have emerged from my study of the existing literature on the sectoral development of the publishing industry and recent consultations with young and promising publishers who aspire for an environment conducive to nurturing their potential.

It is a matter of great privilege that a well-drafted National Book Policy is already in existence, and it only requires updating and review given the current context. The policy was first drafted and adopted by the cabinet in 1994. A revised and expanded policy was brought to the table for review and discussion in 2011.

An updated version based on a series of consultations with sectoral experts was drafted and submitted again to the cabinet. This attempt failed, and it has never seen the light of day. However, the draft is well-prepared, forward-looking, with detailed plans for implementation. Moreover, most of its propositions are applicable even today. Just by reviewing the National Book Policy, it is possible to bring about some beneficial and necessary long-term reforms in the sector. In addition to what is covered in the policy, the interim government could consider immediate, medium-term and long-term reforms along with a crisis mitigation agenda for this sector.

For the medium and long-term, one of the changes to consider would be placing the publishing sector under the purview of the Ministry of Commerce instead of the Ministry of Cultural Affairs. Strong interactivity with the education and cultural ministries could be maintained. The National Book Centre could be empowered as the apex body in charge of all matters relating to the knowledge sector; this can enable effective interministerial coordination. A detailed recommendation and implementation plan for transforming this institution into the National Book Development Council is provided in the draft National Book Policy.

In addition, we will require training facilities for enhancing the skills and building the capacities of aspiring publishing professionals. Grant programs may be created in all private and public universities for merit-based research and publications. We should create opportunities for international exposure to publishing practices elsewhere to improve our understanding and align our practices with international standards. Additionally, we should create opportunities for publishers to showcase their work at various international book fairs.

Furthermore, support should be provided for conducting reliable research and market analysis of the industry, enabling better decision-making at both the state and business levels. It is also important to support the creation of a strong sales and distribution network and to promote books throughout the country all year. Special provisions should be considered for promoting books through print, TV, and digital mediums.

Accompanying such reforms, existing copyright law should be reviewed and updated to better support the local publishing industry. Policies should be established to ensure fair and transparent purchasing by government and private institutions.

In the matter of immediate reforms and crisis mitigation efforts, we should turn our attention to the increased prices of paper and other input material following Covid. With the current economic downturn already impeding recovery, we may want to consider offering publishers loans to revitalise the sector.

Additionally, two or more separate pressure groups and trade bodies representing publishers and booksellers should be formed within a permissible legal framework. The existing trade body, i.e. the Bangladesh Pustok Prokashok O Bikreta Somiti (BAPUS) includes both booksellers and publishers. The result, is a latent and existential defect, as it is a mix of two separate interest groups that are supposed to be on negotiating terms with one another

We hope that the current interim government will take the necessary steps towards rebuilding the foundation of a reformed state that will place excellence in knowledge production and dissemination at the centre of its state-reform agenda. The best way to attain this would be by reforming the publishing sector from the ground up. Rest assured, they can count on the youthful and patriotic energy of the well-intentioned and talented individuals in this trade to catalyse this essential and much-needed change.

How the youth is contributing to flood relief in unique ways

From doing charity livestreams to selling SEO backlinks, the Bangladeshi youth is finding interesting avenues to generate funds for flood victims

AYAAN SHAMS SIDDIQUEE

If the month of July taught us anything, it was unity. Likewise, within a matter of days, it was as if the entirety of Bangladesh came together to stand beside those affected by the recent floods. Young people, especially, have once again been at the forefront, raising BDT 5.23 crore for flood relief at the TSC area of Dhaka University alone as of August 25.

And that isn't all. Besides being vocal about the crisis on social media and going door-to-door to collect donations for flood relief, the youth have also figured out unique ways to contribute from their own positions.

Sarika Saiyara, an A level graduate from Academia who has been tutoring students for the Scholastic Assessment Test (SAT) for a while now, took the initiative to raise funds for sanitary napkins that would be included in flood relief packs. Alongside Azneef Ahammed Chowdhury, an A level student from Chittagong Grammar School who is also an SAT tutor, the two plan to host an SAT masterclass with a small registration fee of BDT 200.

"The masterclass will cover a 360-degree overview of the Digital SAT, including, but not limited to, a timeline for taking the test, resources to ace the test, and section-wise strategies," says Sarika. "I am pleased to say that we've already raised Tk 11,000."

A similar initiative was taken by Edbridge Scholars, an education consulting agency specialising in helping students get into US colleges. The agency has offered a series of ten different workshops covering topics like SAT preparation, profile building, essay writing, etc. at a cost of just BDT 2000.

Tanvir Thamid, CEO of Edbridge Scholars and a junior at Bates College, says, "We have ten instructors from some of the best institutions in the world aboard for this project and they are the ones who should be thanked for making this initiative a success. The Edbridge Scholars team is just extending its hand in a collective cause."

Thamid further projected that the fundraising project will likely attract around 50 participants, thus raising approximately BDT 100,000. Afterwards, all the funds will be forwarded to credible organisations working towards providing relief materials in flood-affected areas.

Gamers have also been raising funds for flood relief from their positions, notably in the form of charity game livestreams. Arghya Joseph Das, a student of BRAC University (BRACU) and CEO of Dead3ye Esports, an esports and gaming organisation, shared how his team was doing their part through gaming, expecting to reach an overall donation sum of BDT 25,000.

"We've done charity livestreams in the past to raise funds for Palestine. So, when we saw the entire nation coming together to support the ones affected by the floods, we decided to engage our content creators to show support from our end," he said.

To maximise the donations, they have also planned out certain steps. In that regard, Arghya said, "Our primary focus will be streaming Valorant, where we'll invite viewers to join custom matches. Involving viewers in the stream increases the likelihood that they'll share it, helping to attract more donations. Additionally, we have plans for collaborative streams with various streamers from other organisations, which will automatically boost the viewership and engagement. And lastly, along with the donations we receive, Dead3ye Esports will contribute BDT 5 for every reaction on the streams."

Iftekhar Ahmed, 20, also a student of BRACU, took another unique approach to raising funds from his side. Being in the search engine optimisation (SEO) industry for a while, Iftekhar decided to sell SEO backlinks to clients, with all the proceedings going towards flood relief.

Sharing the idea behind this initiative, he said, "There are a lot of people in my friend list who share a similar background in SEO and software as a service (SaaS). Therefore, I decided to offer backlinks at different price points and domain ratings, and I will donate the entire amount sold from here to flood relief funds. As of now, I am aiming to raise approximately $1,000 through this initiative."

Even in the face of one of the most overwhelming calamities in recent memory, the unity and creativity demonstrated by the youth have been nothing short of inspiring. From educational initiatives to gaming fundraisers and professional services, they have proven that this new Bangladesh is one marked by collective effort and impartiality.

Doing household chores is the secret to adulting

ALLIN MOHANA BISWAS

Do you ever feel overwhelmed by the sheer amount of responsibility you have as a young adult? Paying bills, cooking, cleaning – it's a lot to handle. Nonetheless, there's a secret weapon to conquering the entire adulting conundrum: doing household chores.

It might sound counterintuitive but doing dishes, sweeping the floor, and taking out the trash isn't just about keeping your living space clean. It's actually a crucial part of becoming a self-sufficient and responsible young adult.

Beyond the practical benefits, there's evidence that chores can help protect the health of your brain. A study published in Neurology in 2022 found a link between ordinary household chores and a lower risk of dementia. Researchers followed over half a million adults for an average of 10 years and discovered that those who regularly did housework were 21% less likely to develop dementia.

When you're responsible for keeping your room clean or helping with preparing meals for your family, you're learning to take ownership of your actions. By completing chores, you understand that your choices have consequences which help you develop a strong sense of responsibility. In addition, chores can help you become a better time manager. Ever noticed how so many of us are able binge-watch an entire series but struggle to find time to do laundry? Chores can help you balance your time more effectively. By breaking down tasks into smaller steps and setting deadlines, you'll improve your ability to manage your schedule. By doing household chores, you're building the essential skills that you need to survive independently or otherwise. With every chore you complete, you get one step closer to becoming more self-sufficient.

Problem-solving skills are another key benefit. Ever faced a clogged drain or burnt-out lightbulb? These challenges, while frustrating, are opportunities to learn how to find solutions. Over time, you'll become better at thinking critically and finding creative ways to overcome obstacles.

A clean and organised living space isn't just aesthetically pleasing, it's also essential for mental and emotional well-being. Studies have shown that clutter can contribute to stress and anxiety. By pitching in with chores, you're creating a healthier environment for yourself and everyone who shares your space.

Additionally, working together as a family or with roommates to maintain a clean home builds a sense of teamwork and cooperation. Everyone benefits from a shared effort, and it can strengthen relationships.

The skills you learn from doing chores are directly transferable to the adult world. Whether you're heading off to university, joining the workforce or living on your own, you'll be grateful for the ability to cook, clean, and manage a household. And let's face it, being able to take care of yourself saves you money in the long run.

While chores might not be the most exciting part of your life, they're definitely an investment on yourself. So, the next time you think of skipping chores, pick up that mop, dust that shelf, or load the washing machine.

Should young commuters get a metro pass?

MEHRAB JAMEE

The country's first-ever overhead metro line, MRT line 6, was opened to the public in December 2022 and all stations became operational from December 2023. The line spans 21 kilometers and has 16 stations. The public was jubilant at the inauguration and soon MRT-6 was hauling thousands of people every day across this north-south corridor of Dhaka.

The superior speed and service of the metro put the old and worn-out bus services running along this route in a passenger crisis. People were choosing to take the metro even if they had to walk a certain distance from a station to reach their destination. Perhaps the company operating the metro lines, Dhaka Mass Transit Company Limited (DMTCL) expected popular demand. But they couldn't have anticipated the pressure MRT-6 was about to face.

After the metro became fully functional, the floodgates opened. People started to cram onto the trains during rush hour. But to get on the train you first need a ticket. The way to get a ticket is the same for all stations. There is a manned counter and about two or three automated machines. Yet both manned counters and automated machines are inundated, with lines twisting and turning three or four times over. The machines being out of service is not uncommon. People are left waiting for hours on end. The frustration of passengers in key stations of Motijheel, Secretariat, Mirpur-10, and Uttara North which face the heaviest congestion is palpable.

Saima, a student of Dhaka University (DU) shared her experience saying, "When the metro was new, I used the single-use tickets a couple of times. The wait time wasn't so long. However after the DU station opened, the wait time gradually increased. One time it took me one and a half hours to get a ticket from Uttara North Station. I had a friend with me. So, we both stood in different lines. I stood in line for the automatic machines and my friend stood in line for the manned counter. The mental math required was so stressful. My friend made it to the counter first and bought the tickets for us. We missed two lectures that day. From then on, I always suffered from anxiety about using the metro. I used to go to the station with time in hand to wait in line to get a one-time-use ticket. Then I got the Rapid Pass and it has made my life so much easier. I don't have to stand in line anymore nor do I have to suffer from the anxiety that I will miss class. I put some money into my card and just forget about it for the rest of the week."

Another University student Shimanto* said, "I take the 7.10 AM or 7.20 AM train to get to my morning classes. These trips are only accessible for MRT pass holders. Besides, during exam season, I don't have to worry if I'll get to reach the exam hall in time or not which is a tremendous help in exam season. After classes all day, I used to stand in line at the overcrowded Motijheel station for 20-30 minutes to get a ticket. With the pass, I zoom right in"

According to a statement given to The Dhaka Tribune by MAN Siddique, the Managing Director of DMTCL, "The Metro now carries some 250 thousand passengers every day, 52 percent of them use personal passes and the remaining 48 percent use one-time tickets."

The MRT pass and Rapid Pass are the two reusable personal passes on offer for passengers. The cards themselves cost BDT 200. But the MRT pass retails for BDT 500 and the Rapid Pass for BDT 400. The passengers can use the remaining balance to ride the metro. The MRT pass is issued by DMTCL themselves and the Rapid pass is sold by Dutch Bangla Bank. Although actual paper money has to be loaded into both and mobile banking services have not been initiated yet, the passes have become very popular among students.

Abeer, a student who uses the metro almost every day said, "Attending classes at Mugda Medical College from Uttara was a challenge. The metro rail was a blessing for me, allowing me to bypass the congestion on the roads. But without the MRT pass, even the metro became a source of frustration. Long queues at ticket counters and vending machines were nearly unbearable. My pass is a lifesaver. It saves me a significant amount of time on a daily basis. Many people prefer single-use passes as the MRT pass has an issuing fee. But this is one of the best investments I've made. I can use it for getting BRTC bus tickets as well. And it saves me 10 percent on every trip. I can't even put a price tag on the time it saves me."

When asked if the metro pass substantially changed his metro experience, Prottyush*, a university student said, "It seems to me the MRT pass is rather a necessity than a convenience for daily commuters using the Dhaka Metro. At this point, I can't imagine using the metro without it. One of the drawbacks of the ticketing system was the long wait time to get a single-use ticket. This would basically waste the same amount of time if I took the bus."

Because of the hassle-free experience and peace of mind it offers, metro passes have become essential to commuters, especially students. Access to early and late trains enables students to attend their classes on time and the 10 percent discount adds up for students on a budget. The adoption rate should go up if new features are added and the current features are advertised more by DMTCL and Dutch Bangla Bank. The addition of mobile banking services would make these cards truly cashless. As other metro lines open up in the future and the congestion expected to increase further, personal passes like MRT pass and Rapid pass are only set to grow more popular.

'A' team lose one-day series in Pakistan

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh 'A' team lost the three-match one-day series against Pakistan Shaheens 1-0 after the third and final match was abandoned due to persistent rain and wet outfield at the Islamabad County Club Oval on Friday.

Earlier, the second one-day between the sides on Wednesday also ended as a no result after the hosts won the first match of the series by eight wickets on August 26.

The Bangladeshi side were slated to play two four-day matches and three one-day games but most of the fixtures were impacted by rain.

"We are really disappointed that we did not get enough chances to play here due to rain," Bangladesh 'A' head coach Mizanur Rahman Babul told The Daily Star on Friday.

"We couldn't complete our two batting innings in both four-day games. .

"We had nothing to do during the rain. We had to sit idle most of the time as there was no indoor facility here," he concluded.

Afghan wins Paralympic medal for refugee team

REUTERS, Paris

Afghan Zakia Khudadadi completed a remarkable journey to become the first athlete from the refugee team to win a medal at the Paralympics when she clinched a taekwondo bronze on Thursday.

Khudadadi, who made her Paralympics debut in Tokyo days after being exfiltrated from Taliban-controlled Kabul, secured her place on the podium when her opponent withdrew before their bronze medal bout in the K44-47kg category.

The 25-year-old, who was granted asylum by France, was cheered on like a local throughout the day by the Grand Palais crowd and by her coach, Haby Niare, who took a taekwondo silver medal at the Rio Olympics in 2016.

"This medal is fantastic for me but also for all the women in Afghanistan and all the refugees," she said in impeccable French.

"We're not giving up for equality and freedom in my country."

Khudadadi delivered a message of freedom.

"I want to give this medal to the whole world. I hope that one day there will be freedom in my country, for all the world, for all the girls, for all the women, for all the refugees in the world," Khudadadi, who was born with an atrophied arm, said.

"And that all of us work towards that, for liberty and equality."

Persistent rain and wet outfield forced the opening day's play of the second Test between Bangladesh and Pakistan to be called off without toss at the Rawalpindi Cricket Stadium yesterday. However, weather forecasts suggest that Rawalpindi will enjoy bright sinshine today. The tourists are leading the two-match series 1-0 following their 10-wicket win in the first Test at the same venue last week.

Big-spending Brighton to trouble Arsenal?

City look to continue dominance at West Ham

AGENCIES

Two of the four sides still with a perfect record meet at the Emirates as Arsenal host Brighton on Saturday.

The Seagulls have become accustomed to having their best talents picked off by richer rivals in recent years but this time it is Brighton who have been one of the biggest spenders in the division.

New boss Fabian Hurzeler has been backed with nearly a £200 million spending spree on eight new signings.

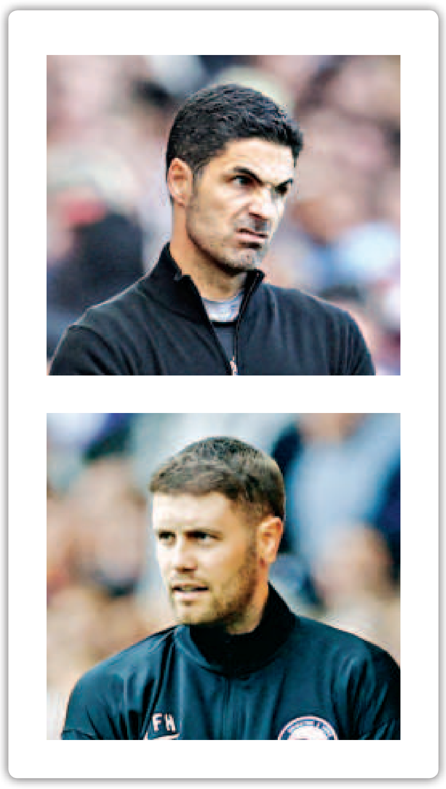
That investment has been met with an immediate reward in wins over Everton and United, but 31-year-old Hurzeler is aware of the step up in class his side face at the Emirates Stadium.

"They're one of the best teams in the world at the moment," said the youngest manager in Premier League history.

"They don't have a lot of weaknesses, they have quality and solutions for all phases.

"We're going to need a really good day. We'll need individual performances, a great togetherness. We go there to win because my squad has the potential."

Arsenal's long-awaited midfield boost came midweek when the Gunners signed Spaniard Mikel Merino from Rael Sociedad for a fee of 31 million pounds but an expected debut will have to wait as the 28-year-old suffered a shoulder injury in his first training session which has sidelined him for weeks.



"It's very unfortunate. Yesterday he had a collision and got a shoulder injury. He's going to be out for a few weeks. It's really bad luck and we were all very excited. He was looking very good, but he landed on the floor; Gabi went on top of him and it looks like he's got a small fracture probably. He was in so much pain, so we have to wait and see with the staff to do some more tests to have more conclusive answers," Arteta said.

Meanwhile, in the capital, West Ham host reigning champions Manchester City who also have won their opening two fixtures. Pep Guardiola's side followed up a 2-0 win at Chelsea with a 4-1 thumping of newly-promoted Ipswich Town which starred Erling Haaland's 23rd career hattrick, 10th for City.

West Ham have hardly been able to trouble City in the past decade as they have failed to win any of their last 17 Premier League meetings with the Citizens since a 2-1 away victory in September 2015 under former boss Slaven Bilic.

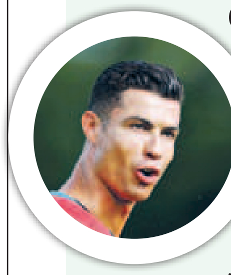
City have scored more away goals against West Ham than they have against any other Premier League side (42), while their 25 goals at the London Stadium is the most an away side has scored at a venue since its opening in 2016-17.

The Citizens also have sweet memories of their last visit to the London Stadium as a 3-1 win on the final day of the last season sealed an unprecedented fourth successive league title.

For City, star midfielder Rodri still remains a doubt as Mateo Kovacic continues to get the nod and Phil Foden who missed the win over Ipswich through illness is expected to return to the lineup.

SHORT CORNER

Ronaldo in Portugal squad for Nations League games



Cristiano Ronaldo has kept his place in the Portugal squad for next month's UEFA Nations games against Croatia and Scotland despite an ineffective display at Euro 2024. The 39-year-old failed to score as he appeared at a record sixth European Championship, with Portugal exiting in the quarterfinals, but he retains the backing of coach Roberto Martinez.

Ancellotti says there is no excuse for Real's slow start

Real Madrid manager Carlo Ancelotti said on Thursday there was no excuse for his side's slow start to the La Liga season after the team fought back to rescue a 1-1 draw at lowly Las Palmas thanks to a Vinicius Jr goal late in the second half. Ancelotti said he expected his team to play better together and blamed himself, saying that he needs to work harder and do a better job. "It is clear that we are struggling to find the soundness of last season. But we must not look for excuses," Ancelotti told a news conference.

United to face Mourinho's Fenerbahce

Manchester United will travel to Turkish giants Fenerbahce, now coached by Jose Mourinho, among their eight games in the league phase of the new-look Europa League, the draw for which took place in Monaco on Friday. The Old Trafford club won the Europa League with Mourinho as coach in 2017. He recently became coach of Fenerbahce, who were knocked out of the Champions League in the third qualifying round.

De Bruyne in, Lukaku out in Belgium's Nations League squad

Kevin De Bruyne was included in Belgium's squad for next week's Nations League matches but Romelu Lukaku was omitted after asking for time off to concentrate on getting fit after his move to Napoli, coach Domenico Tedesco announced on Friday. There had been much speculation about the international future of the 33-year-old De Bruyne, who had complained about a potentially exhausting season with multiple commitments ahead for both his club Manchester City and the Belgian side.

Gus Atkinson cemented his love affair with Lord's by scoring a maiden century on Friday, with his 118 powering England to an imposing first-innings 427 all out against Sri Lanka on the second day of the second Test. The 26-year-old had taken 12 wickets on his debut at the same venue against the West Indies last month. The lanky pacer later took a wicket as England reduced the visitors to 129 for seven at tea.

Alcaraz makes 'no excuse' after shock defeat

REUTERS, New York

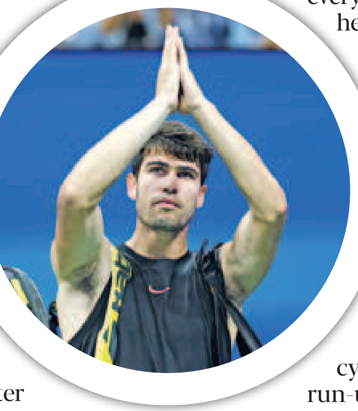
Carlos Alcaraz made no excuses for his shock second-round exit at the US Open on Thursday after the former champion crumbled to a 6-1, 7-5, 6-4 defeat at the hands of Dutchman Botic van de Zandschulp.



Unseeded Van de Zandschulp was a huge underdog against a player who was on a 15-match winning streak at the majors, and fans inside Arthur Ashe Stadium could scarcely believe their eyes as Alcaraz dished out error after error in the shock loss.

"I think my level stayed at the same point all the match, and it wasn't enough to win the match or to give myself the chance to get into the match or trying to give myself chances," he said.

"So, you know, what can I say? I didn't feel well hitting the ball. I think I made a lot of mistakes. When I wanted to come back or I think I wanted to come back, it was too late."

Alcaraz, winner of the last two Grand Slams at Roland Garros and Wimbledon, had made it to at least the quarterfinal stage at every major in which he has competed since winning the US Open two years ago.

But there were warning signs the 21-year-old, who won silver at the Paris Olympics, was not firing on all cylinders in the run-up to Flushing Meadows, losing to Gael Monfils in the second round of the Cincinnati tune-up tournament.

"I came here with not as much energy as I thought that I was going to come. But, I mean, I don't want to put that as excuse," he told reporters.

Meanwhile, Van de Zandschulp, who will next face Britain's Jack Draper, had contemplated retiring from the game by the end of the year due to foot injuries. However, the 28-year-old world number 74 might think differently now as he romped to his biggest win of his career.

"Maybe I'm still processing it," Van de Zandschulp said shortly after his stunning win over the 2022 champion.

"Maybe in a couple of hours or tomorrow, I feel a little bit more emotional with what happened tonight."

Van de Zandschulp bruised a bone in his left foot last year and later tore ankle ligaments, before dealing with an infection on his right foot. He began questioning his future in the sport after a first-round defeat at the French Open in May.

"At the time I said it [about retiring], I was thinking about it. It was just more the way things were going. Of course, I would give myself to the end of the year and see how everything was progressing. Yeah, of course, there was a serious thought," said Van de Zandschulp, who was ranked 115th in April.

NATURAL DISASTERS

1.83cr affected in Bangladesh over last four months

Says UN agency

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A total of 1.83 crore people in the country have been affected by natural disasters, including cyclones and floods, over the four months from May to August, according to the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA).

The recent floods in the southeastern and northeastern regions had the most significant impact, affecting 59 lakh people, as reported by OCHA on Thursday.

These floods have been the most severe disaster of the year so far. Earlier this year, cyclone Rimal, which struck the coast on May 26, affected 46 lakh people.

The UN reported that recent flash floods in Bangladesh have devastated communities across 11 eastern districts. Over 5 lakh people are displaced in 3,403 evacuation shelters, the report mentioned.

ENFORCED DISAPPEARANCE

Fakhrul calls for UN-led investigation

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday urged the interim government to open an investigation under the United Nations into the enforced disappearances that occurred over the last 15 years.

Speaking at a solidarity meeting, he also called upon the government to take steps to provide allowances to the families of the victims of enforced disappearance.

"I have been in politics for a long time... I knew about arrests and killings, but I was not aware of enforced disappearances. Since the Awami League came to power [in 2009], the law enforcement agencies used state power to commit such heinous crimes against humanity," the BNP leader said.

Fakhrul lauded the interim government for signing the UN convention against enforced disappearances.

MITIGATING FLOOD RISK

India appears positive about new mechanism

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Delhi

India yesterday appeared to respond positively to Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus' suggestion of a new mechanism to share the data on water flow in cross-border rivers and help mitigate the threat of future floods.

Randhir Jaiswal, spokesperson for India's Ministry of External Affairs, told the weekly media briefing in New Delhi that established joint procedures and mechanisms between the two countries are already in place.

"We have been exchanging timely data with Bangladesh. We have conveyed to them that this year's flood [in Tripura] was caused by excessive rains and not by any dam," he said while responding to a question on Yunus' suggestion.

However, if there is a suggestion for a new mechanism to mitigate the flood problem, "I think we can consider how we can take it forward," said Jaiswal.

Asked about a CNN report on the flood in northeastern Bangladesh, the MEA spokesperson said, "We have seen the CNN report. Its narrative is misleading and suggests that India is responsible for the floods. It is actually not correct and ignores the facts mentioned in the press release issued by the government of India clarifying the situation."

"They also have ignored [in the report] that we regularly and timely exchange data and critical information through existing joint mechanisms for water resources management."

Jaiswal said the Indian high commissioner to Bangladesh, during his meeting with the chief adviser some days back, discussed several issues about the bilateral relationship including the flood.

According to Jaiswal, the Indian high commissioner told Prof Yunus that India would like to continue to work with Bangladesh to fulfill the shared aspirations of the peoples of both countries for prosperity, security and development.

"We are committed to taking forward the bilateral relationship in line with our national priorities," he added.

Pakistan PM calls Yunus, seeks to deepen ties

Pakistan Prime Minister Muhammad Shehbaz Sharif called Chief Adviser Professor Muhammad Yunus over the phone yesterday, congratulating him on his assumption of the leadership of the interim government of Bangladesh.

The Pakistan PM offered his best wishes and hoped the goodwill between the two South Asian countries would translate into substantial cooperation for the benefit of their peoples, according to the chief adviser's press wing.

Prof Yunus thanked PM Sharif for the phone call and his earlier message conveying sympathy for the flood victims of Bangladesh.

Israel raids West Bank for third day

Three killed; Kamala Harris says Washington's policy of supplying weapons to Israel to continue if she is elected

AFP, JENIN

Israel said it killed three Hamas militants in an air strike in the occupied West Bank yesterday, taking the death toll from a large-scale military operation now in its third day to at least 19.

A top UN aid official meanwhile questioned "what has become of our basic humanity", as the war raged on in Gaza where humanitarian operations struggled to respond.

In the United States, Vice President Kamala Harris pledged she will not change Washington's policy of supplying weapons to Israel if elected to the top job in November. But she stressed it was time to "end this war" in Gaza.

Israel has described its raids on towns and refugee camps across the northern West Bank as "counter-terrorism" operations.

They have killed at least 19 Palestinians since Wednesday, the military and the Palestinian health ministry said.

Palestinian militant groups Hamas and Islamic Jihad have said at least 13 of those killed were their fighters.

The military said it killed three Hamas militants in an air strike near the northern city of Jenin yesterday.

Witnesses told AFP the strike hit a car in the town of Zababdeh, southeast of the city.

Israeli troops pulled back from other West Bank towns late Thursday but fighting raged on around Jenin, long a hub of militant activity.

An AFP journalist reported loud explosions from the city's refugee camp and thick plumes of smoke rising from the area.

In Gaza, Israeli artillery pounded western areas of Gaza City early yesterday, an AFP journalist said, while a medical source at the southern Nasser Hospital said an Israeli strike killed three people near the southern city of Khan Yunis.

The World Health Organization said Israel had agreed to at least three days of "humanitarian pauses" in parts of Gaza, starting Sunday, to facilitate a vaccination drive after the territory recorded its first case of polio in a quarter of a century.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said the measures were "not a ceasefire" in the nearly 11-month war.

The Israeli assault on the West Bank has caused significant destruction, especially in Tulkarem, whose governor Mustafa Taqatqa described the raids as "unprecedented" and a "dangerous signal".

Judiciary sees major reshuffle

81 lower court judges transferred

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has made a major reshuffle in the judiciary by transferring 81 lower court judges, including district and additional district judges, metropolitan and chief judicial magistrates.

Among the judges, 80 have been asked to join their new workplaces on September 3.

The law ministry issued four notifications to this effect on Thursday, mentioning that transfers of lower court judges were done in consultation with the Supreme Court.

Among the transferred judges, 80 have been asked to join their new workplaces on September 3 and another has been asked to join the new office on September 1 after vesting their responsibilities in their higher authorities.

The Daily Star tried to get comments from Law Adviser Prof Asif Nazrul, but he neither picked up our phone calls nor responded to text messages.

SEIZING BLACK MONEY

ACC to start special drive next week

DIPAN NANDY

The Anti-Corruption Commission is set to launch a special drive next week against corrupt individuals and black money.

The graft watchdog is also working on forming several teams, led by ACC directors, to conduct the drive. One such team has already been assembled.

"The six-member team would assist the law enforcement agencies with seizing evidence and legal support during the special drive," reads an office order issued last Sunday by ACC Director General Golam Shahriar Chowdhury.

The commission will deploy its personnel nationwide for these operations, several senior ACC officials told The Daily Star.

Following the fall of Sheikh Hasina's government on August 5, the ACC seems to have become active as it started investigating some former AL ministers and lawmakers.

The commission is also probing some former influential bureaucrats and senior police officials.

Death toll from floods rises to 54 in nine districts

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A total of 54 people, including six women and seven children, died in the ongoing floods in nine districts until yesterday, the disaster management and relief ministry said in its latest release.

Nineteen people died in Feni, 14 in Cumilla, eight in Noakhlai, six in Chattogram, three in Cox's Bazar, and one each in Moulvibazar, Lakshmipur, Brahmanbaria and Khagrachhari.

Besides, one person in Moulvibazar remained missing.

The release said the overall flood situation in Sylhet, Habiganj and Chattogram districts improved yesterday.

As part of its relief efforts, the ministry as of yesterday disbursed Tk 4.52 crore in cash, 20,650 tonnes of rice, 15,000 packs or sacks of dry and other foods, Tk 35 lakh for children food, and another Tk 35 lakh for cattle feed.

Also, 1,15,105 packs of relief materials, including dry food, clothes and drinking water collected by the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement were sent to the flood-hit areas through the Department of Disaster Management.

The recent floods affected more than 54 lakh people in 11 districts in Chattogram and Sylhet divisions and 10.09 lakh families became stranded.

Areas in 64 upazilas were inundated during the floods, with 486 unions and municipalities affected.

The authorities have opened 3,269 shelter centres for the flood victims. Besides, 567 medical teams are providing treatment to them.

When floods came, students rose to challenge

“Relief materials barely entered the remote areas of Silonia, Poshugram and Fulgazi. Those who stayed behind and somehow escaped death, were without food and pure water for days. When we first entered these areas, people broke down in tears seeing us. They were desperate for just a sip of pure water, some wanted medicine. People were crying for just a handful of puffed rice,” said Faysal.

Hundreds of students from Dhaka, Chattogram and districts in between were seen marching towards Feni on August 22. They travelled in trucks, with speedboats and life jackets, on a mission to rescue those stranded by the unprecedented floods that swept through the region.

This was no organised operation -- this was a spontaneous, student-led mobilisation, born from the heart of a country still vibrating with the energy of a historic uprising.

Only weeks earlier, on August 5, these same students had toppled a government they believed had failed them.

In the streets, the slogan “Desh ta karo baaper naa” (The country does not belong to anyone’s father) echoed.

Another slogan, “Tumi ke? Ami ke? Bikolpo, Bikolpo, Bikolpo!” (Who are you? Who am I? We are the alternatives!) served as a rebuttal to the narrative that there was no alternative to the old regime.

So, the floodwaters came like a test, and the youth of Bangladesh rose to meet it.

Within hours of the disaster, these students had arranged trucks and speedboats and set off to help the flood-hit people.

They didn’t wait for orders, didn’t pause for bureaucracy; they simply acted. In their hands, the nation found its first responders.

People from all walks of life chipped in. Some joined the rescue operations, while others collected and sent relief materials to those in need.

It was not driven by any political agenda but by the simple desire to save lives.

The risks were enormous. These were students, many of whom had never seen a flood like this, and never handled a rescue operation.

At least one student lost his life when a speedboat overturned during a rescue mission.

The students knew the risks, but they also knew the stakes -- they were saving lives, taking responsibility for their country in a way that no one had asked them to, but that everyone needed them to.

This was patriotism in action, a continuation of the uprising that had shaken the country just weeks before. The floods revealed the true character of a generation that had already proved its mettle in the streets. They showed that the slogans were not just words, but a promise they were determined to keep.

THE RESCUE EFFORTS

“Is there anyone who needs help?” The students’ voices pierced the darkness as their speedboats cut through the floodwaters. Lights from their torches scanned for any sign of life. The current was strong, but they pressed on.

In Silonia, one of the worst-hit areas alongside Poshugram and Fulgazi, they saw tin-shed houses submerged, with only rooftops occasionally visible through the water.

Despite the danger, a rescue team led by Faysal Showdagar, a student from the University of Asia Pacific, braved these waters.

The water had already reached the second floor of buildings, forcing many to seek refuge on rooftops.

Two journalists from this newspaper were with them as they rescued around 100 people in batches, prioritising women, children, and the elderly.

The rescued were taken to areas where the water was lower and then transferred to tractors, which brought them to shelter centres near Feni town.

In Silonia, the correspondents saw a two-storied school building, intended as a flood shelter, completely submerged. The water had risen to the stairs and even reached the second floor, forcing everyone to seek refuge on the roof.

Faysal’s teams had to conduct rescues from these very shelter centres, as even designated safe havens went under water.

Earlier, Mashrafee, a student from Ahsanullah University and a member of Faysal’s team, heard the cries of a family trapped in a partially submerged tin house.

With water up to their chests, the 10 family members were desperate.

“I managed to cut through the tin roof, pulling each one to safety,” Mashrafee recounted.

Among those saved by students in Siilonia was Shahinur Akhter, a 24-year-old pregnant woman, who had been stranded on a roof without food for nearly two days.

Her labour pains had already begun, and she had nearly lost hope when Faysal’s team arrived.

They quickly evacuated her and brought her to a local clinic, where she gave birth a few hours later. Both mother and child are safe now.

“The students saved me and my baby. I have no words to express my gratitude. I want them to name my newborn,” Shahinur said.

The rescue efforts were fraught with challenges -- communication blackouts, no electricity, and the constant fear of losing team members in the chaos.

Yet, the students, different groups of volunteers -- like Nasimul Alam from Tongi, Md Rafat Hossen from Dhaka, Md Rakbul Islam from Dhaka University, and Md Rezaul Islam, a madrasa student, continued their mission.

In areas where even trained forces hesitated to enter due to the risks, these young heroes pressed on, saving lives against all odds.

Hundreds, seeing the rescue boats, scrambled to board, but with limited space, not everyone could be saved. The decision to take some aboard while leaving others behind was a difficult one to make, they said.

STUDENT-LED RELIEF ENDEAVOUR

An elderly disabled beggar was seen contributing a portion of his meagre earnings to the students collecting funds and relief for flood victims.

Children as young as five brought their piggy banks to university students, eager to help those affected by the floods. Rickshaw pullers, too, donated a part of their income.

People from all walks of life responded to the students’ call.

Universities like Dhaka, Jagannath, and Jahangirnagar became hubs for these student-led relief efforts, uniting the nation in a powerful display of solidarity and compassion.

“I wanted to help the flood-affected people. I wish everyone would come forward to help,” said 12-year-old Raisa Mehjabin, a sixth grader.

Marina Akhter, a homemaker who came from Mirpur to Dhaka University, said, “Since students of the anti-discrimination movement are collecting funds, I have decided to donate from a place of trust.”

At DU, the ground floor of the TSC building overflowed with relief materials, so much so that supplies were also stored at the DU Central Field, Ducsu Bhaban, and the Social Science Building. Hundreds of volunteers tirelessly collected, sorted, and packaged these goods, which were then loaded onto trucks and dispatched to the flood-affected areas.

“For the past 16 years, we have seen these kinds of initiatives be limited to the government’s student organisations. But before that, during any crisis, we used to see collective participation from everyone. It seems that we have returned to that place,” said Prof Tanzim Uddin Khan of the Department of International Relations at DU.

The Daily Star and other media outlets have published multiple reports based on the relief efforts in DU.

However, there were concerns about a lack of coordination and delays in relief distribution. Some relief materials did not reach the most affected victims due to inaccessible conditions.

But the students against discrimination platform, who were in charge of the relief operation at DU, was transparent by announcing how much money they collected every day.

On Wednesday, they gave a detailed account on how much money was spent on which sectors and how many relief materials were distributed.

The platform’s leaders claimed they have addressed the allegations and ensured that relief efforts are being coordinated effectively.

Meanwhile, left-leaning student bodies organised a concert to collect relief in DU, from where they collected cash worth Tk 21,78,757.

They also received a large amount of dry food, salines, clothes, and water from the concert. The organisers also provided a detailed account of their expenditures and the current status of the relief distribution.

Meanwhile in Feni, this newspaper spoke with the student volunteers who are still working to send relief materials to remote areas. They shared how they encountered people who had been without food for days.

“Relief materials barely entered the remote areas of Silonia, Poshugram and Fulgazi. Those who stayed behind and somehow escaped death, were without food and pure water for days. When we first entered these areas, people broke down in tears seeing us. They were desperate for just a sip of pure water, some wanted medicine. People were crying for just a handful of puffed rice,” said Faysal.

Others shared similar accounts.

As the trucks and boats moved through the floodwaters, as students worked through sleepless nights, a new Bangladesh was being born -- a nation where the people, not the politicians, were in charge.

Sure, there were some lack of coordination, instances of infighting and isolated occurrences of mismanagement, but the younger generation stepped up in a time of crisis, and in doing so, they have saved countless lives.

The floodlights

The cub was overwhelmed with anger, exhaustion, and agony—a destructive amalgamation. The other tigers shared his wounds; they growled furiously.

AFIFA ALAM RAISA

Chaos. More chaos.

The cub, still half-strapped with the stretcher in the middle of the vast cricket stadium, tried to shift to a more comfortable position. He let out a sigh, his eyes still shut tight. The poor thing could feel his fellow tigers munching ceaselessly at the straps—tigers bigger and stronger than him. For that, he was grateful. More grateful than he had ever been in the past. They had already pulled out, not with little effort, the dirty cloth that was stuffed into his mouth. He licked the inside of his mouth, as if to taste his newfound freedom.

He slowly opened his eyes. From the wrinkles around them, it was certain that the floodlights were not on the cub's side.

Then he saw them: blue shadows looming over him. He had seen them before, and he knew he would see them again. Most of them were harmless; some among them even stroked his fur from time to time. Their collective presence nevertheless gave rise to an odd blend of excitement and unpleasantness in his mind. It always did.

The cub finally spoke, his voice almost a whisper. "The floodlights."

"What about them?" someone asked.

"They are unfairly bright. My eyes hurt."

"The floodlights?"

"Yes, the floodlights."

Then he saw them coming: dark shadows looming over the blue ones. Most of the latter disappeared at once. A few remained. The cub could not see their allies, the mice, but he could hear them screeching irritably at a distance.

Chaos. More chaos.

"You talk too much," said a dark one.

"The floodlights are hurting my eyes."

"You talk too much! The floodlights? We shall open the gates and take the lights away."

"Don't..."

"We have done this before. We shall do it again."

The miserable creature had a lot to say, and not just about the floodlights. But he said nothing. He knew it would happen, perhaps seconds, minutes, hours, or days later; it did not really matter.

And it did happen. They opened the gates, taking the lights away. Floodlights did hurt, but without the lights, they were worse.

Chaos. More chaos.

The cub was overwhelmed with anger, exhaustion, and agony—a destructive amalgamation. The other tigers shared his wounds; they growled furiously.

He knew the dark shadows. He knew the mice. They would not stop.

But he also knew the tigers—tigers bigger and stronger than him, than the shadows, than the mice. They would not stop either.

Chaos. More chaos?

Two poems by Kazi Nazrul Islam

Jabar bela fele jeo ekti khopar phul

Leave a flower from your bun
when you depart, my love.
Lay your eyes on mine,
behold a little delusion, my love.
With a flash of smile in a corner of your lips, dispel away all the gloom deep within my mind—
don't part away swaying your diamond hoops.
Emit a word or an expression of love
I wish to sing in tune time and again—consider me a friend, my love, and hold my hands.
Leave a flower from your bun,
when you depart, my love.

In a dream came the soft-spoken sylph,
the soft-spoken and sweet-smiling sylph.
To soothe a devotee, she came as a celestial beauty,
the imagined damsel dwelling in my inner territory.
In an assignation came the indifferent sylph,
the paragon of beauty limned in my heart.
In a dream came the soft-spoken sylph...

Survival tactics for "peaceful" protests

FAIZA RAMIM

Stay in a group, never in alleyways
Chaos is your best friend; your voice, a weapon.
Your power is in your numbers.
Let people know where you are whenever you get the chance,
So they know the starting point of where to look for you.
Don't get killed
But just in case,
Use your name and emergency contact as your lock screen.
Wear your institution's badge as one of honour
You're a student
You're learning,
Practicals on human anatomy, or the complex structure of bones
And how to wrap the copies across your chest to protect them
Because you're also learning to be frugal, makeshift gears to make use of everything.
Practicals on the refractive indices of lens
Followed by the ones in your eyes.
When hit with tear gas, try not to focus on the burning in your lungs
Or the swelling of your chest, the blinding pain, or the gasps for clean air
Toothpaste doesn't help, but put it on as a warpaint, a placating placebo Until your student instincts kick in.
Moxifloxacin for seven days if you live that long
Artificial tears, because unfortunately the real ones won't suffice,
For 15 days (if you live that long)
And Ce vit for a month
if you live that long.
Cover your ears at the sight of a sound grenade
And open your mouth to neutralise the pressure.
Don't run away. The ringing in your ears will stop eventually Don't run away. Unless you see the bullets firing (and hope it's just the rubber ones)
Unless you see.
Flash bangs, smoke grenades
When hit with tear shells, try to trade one burning in your lungs with another
And light up a cigarette.

Dual faces of an unseen predator

NAFISA AFREEN MEGHA

In a world spun from the threads of chaos, we are born into a tapestry of shadows. We are shimmering maidens in the night, nurturing within us a fire both subtle and strong. Yet, the air around us is heavy with whispers–danger and desire intertwined.

We walk the streets with anklets that jingle like wind chimes, but each step is taken with caution. The shadows stretch long, even at noon, as if to remind us of the fiends lurking in every corner, their eyes tracing our silhouettes like hunters stalking prey. The streets twist into dark corridors, and each step seems to be followed by a shadow that isn't ours, beating with the unknown threat that chases us by day and haunts us by night.

Our voices craft a tune that could awaken the sleeping gods, yet they are swallowed by the chaos of a world that cherishes only the thunder of a patriarch's roar. Our thoughts, so vivid and chaotic like a monsoon storm, are dismissed as mere drizzles, insignificant against the flood of recognition that parches our souls. We are the Goddess of Sagacity in a world that only worships power, our wisdom lost in the ocean of oblivion. No matter how high we fly, the sky remains beyond our grip, tethered by invisible strings, held tight by the hands of those who are threatened by our potential.

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

The predator wears many masks, each face a vow of something unspeakable. It is the ghost of old fears, its eyes are mirrors that reflect our own insecurities, a shadow hidden in the mundanities of everyday life. We feel it in the fleeting touch of an unknown hand, in the hollow echoes of a whispered promise, in the niceties of insincere gestures. Like the young girl who trusted the warmth of a father figure, her innocence shattered by the unseen face of that predator, her trust forever lost in betrayal. Or the lady in white coat who craved sanctuary in a place of learning, only to watch that shelter become a theater of treachery. Or the child who put faith in a guiding hand, only to have her expectations destroyed by deceit masked as support.

In the eternal darkness of our lives, we fight with a never ending truth etched into the depth of our existence. Safe streets, safe homes, safe haven are only but an elusive dream in a world where danger lurks in every shadow, every corner, every man. No matter how deeply we love or how boldly we confront the darkness, they are persistent, their faces constantly changing, their intentions hidden in the curves of our everyday struggles. In a world so drenched in endless threat, will we ever find solace or a way to mend? It's a question that will forever haunt us, like a predator we can't quite fend.

Overlanding in Africa

Touring 10 countries in 93 days

Julia Parvin and Shemon Alam, a Bangladeshi couple now living in UAE and Kenya, love adventure travelling. They are now busy planning their next adventure: touring the world on wheels in 2 years.

Want to share your travel experiences with us? Please send your stories to holiday@thedailystar.net

JULIA PARVIN

"Overlanding", might be more familiar to Westerners, but it's a concept anyone can embrace. It isn't a typical vacation or guided tour. It's a self-sufficient adventure travel style where one can conquer long distances, exploring for weeks, months, or even years.

Where did our overlanding obsession begin? It wasn't just about pushing our comfort zones; it was a yearning to experience the world on our own terms and to master new skills along the way. Overlanding's greatest allure lies in the freedom – freedom to choose our path, set our pace, and truly connect with the world around us. We believe it's the perfect way to test our limits and discover a deeper sense of self.

Our meticulous planning began with crafting the perfect itinerary, drawing inspiration from must-see destinations and independently researching routes to match our ideal travel style and timeframe. The first hurdle was obtaining visas for East and Southern Africa, a task that tested the limit of our -- two Bangladeshi passport holders – patience.

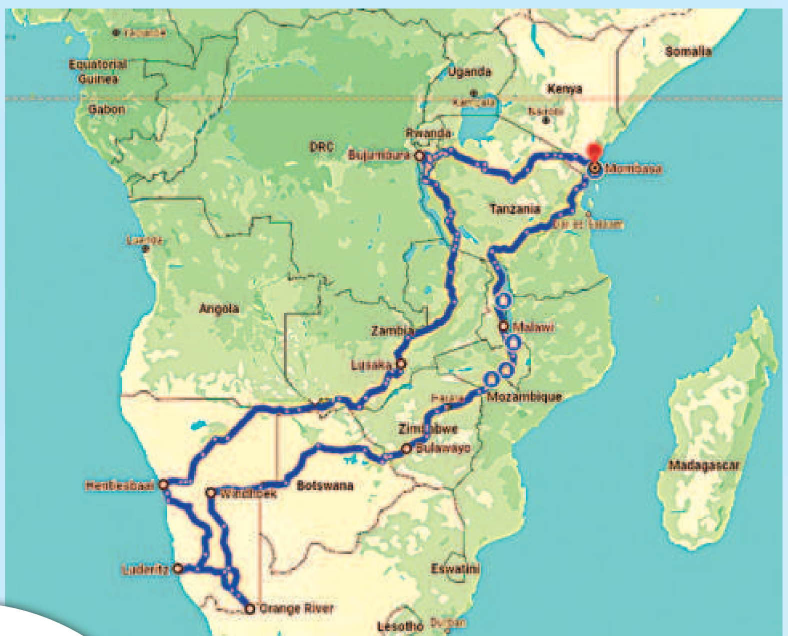
Transforming our Lexus 450h into a camper was the next challenge. We spent countless nights measuring and re-measuring, arguing over the best layout. We wanted our vehicle to be both a home and a fortress -- something that could carry us through the harshest terrains while offering a sliver of comfort at the end of a long day. The final design, with its lower storage compartment and upper sleeping platform, felt like an extension of ourselves: practical, resilient, and ready for anything.

January 2nd, 2024. The day we finally set out from Mombasa, Kenya for a journey that lasted 87 days in which we covered over 20,000 kilometres crossing ten borders. Starting in Kenya, we traversed Tanzania, Malawi, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Botswana, Namibia, Zambia, Burundi and Tanzania before returning to Kenya.

January 2nd, 2024. The day we finally set out from Mombasa, Kenya for a journey that lasted 93 days in which we covered over 20,000 kilometres crossing ten borders. Starting in Kenya, we traversed Tanzania, Malawi, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Botswana, Namibia, Zambia, Burundi and Tanzania before returning to Kenya.

We had been to Tanzania before, but this time was different. Instead of tourist spots and guided tours, we sought out the paths less travelled. The roads were rough, the landscapes unforgiving, but there was a beauty in the challenge.

If Tanzania was the start of our journey, Malawi was where it began to take shape. The country is called the "Warm Heart of Africa," for its friendly people. This narrow, landlocked country is home to the magnificent Lake Malawi, stretching two-thirds of its length. At 474 meters above sea level, the 580-kilometre-long lake is also called the "Lake of Stars" for the twinkling lights of fishing boats at night and the mesmerising reflection of stars on its calm waters.



Entering Mozambique, our first stop was the impressive Cahora Bassa Dam. The dam's sheer size and the breathtaking views that surround it leave visitors in awe.

Our journey then took a dramatic turn in Zimbabwe, where pothole-ridden roads tested our endurance. Near Harare, tyre damage led to a potential robbery, reminding us of the risks of overland travel. A local helped us change the tyres at midnight and escorted us to safety. This experience highlighted the serious threat posed by Zimbabwe's roads, underscoring the importance of carrying multiple spare wheels.

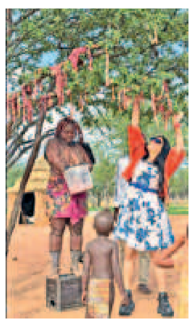
But then came Victoria Falls, like a gift from the gods. The sight of the mighty Zambezi River cascading over the edge, sending up a roar that could be heard for miles, was enough to make us forget all our troubles. Standing at twice the height of Niagara Falls, Victoria Falls, with over 5 million cubic meters of water cascading over its edge every minute, is a truly breathtaking sight. Standing there, amidst the rising mists and the ground shaking beneath our feet, we felt truly alive. It was a reminder of the raw power of nature and our place within it—small, insignificant, but still a part of the whole.

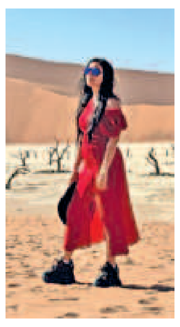
Our next destination was Botswana. From the arid Kalahari Desert to the lush Okavango Delta, this is a land of contrasts. Here, we embarked on safaris and saw elephants, lions, and other magnificent wildlife in their natural habitat. Exploring the Okavango Delta in a mokoro, yacht through its intricate waterways is an immersive experience.

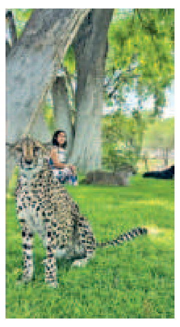
Exploring Namibia was like wandering in an alien world. From landscapes to people, this country is full of surprises. From the bustling capital, Windhoek, you can explore the otherworldly Skeleton Coast and the vast Etosha Pan, the world's largest salt pan. Namibia's vast landscape has the world's oldest desert, the Namib, and the hauntingly beautiful Deadvlei, a white clay pan with ancient tree remnants. You can also see the Hoba Meteorite, the largest known on Earth. With only 2.6 million people, Namibia's sparse population contrasts with its rich diversity of indigenous tribes. This country has so much to offer to someone who wants to explore.

Zambia offered both the highs and lows of our journey. A highlight of this country is undoubtedly a visit to Kariba Dam. This engineering marvel generates power for the region. It also created Lake Kariba, the world's largest man-made lake by volume. The surrounding Kariba Gorge captivates with dramatic landscapes, rugged cliffs, and lush vegetation.

However, our journey took a heartbreaking turn at the Nc'wala ceremony in Chipata, a cultural celebration of the Ngoni people. The theft of our belongings -- an iPhone 15 Pro Max, backup hard drives, memory cards, and more -- cast a shadow over the experience. Despite relentless efforts to recover them, we returned empty-handed. Though the precious visual records of the journey were lost, the memories are still fresh in our minds.







After setbacks in Zambia, we lifted our spirits by discovering the Isimila Stone Age site near Iringa, Tanzania. Estimated to be 60,000 to 100,000 years old, Isimila's ancient stone tools and towering natural pillars offer a glimpse into early human history in East Africa. Walking through the canyon, we marvelled at nature's incredible creations.

In northern Tanzania, the Ngorongoro Crater, the world's largest intact caldera, shelters one of the most stunning wildlife havens. Once higher than Mt. Kilimanjaro, this ancient volcano collapsed, forming a natural wonder home to diverse wildlife. It is often described as a "natural 7 wonders of the world". In addition to its wildlife, the Ngorongoro Crater is also significant for its cultural heritage. The famous Maasai tribe lives here, keeping alive their cattle grazing tradition for centuries.

As we crossed into Burundi from Tanzania, the weather turned bad. An eerie fog rolled in, shrouding the road to Bujumbura, Burundi's capital. Rain lashed down, and thunder rumbled in the distance, making the treacherous mountain road nearly impossible to navigate. Visibility dropped to near zero, forcing us to slow down and search for a safe place to stay.

After navigating several steep hills, we spotted a hotel perched above the highway, about 35 kilometres from Bujumbura. As Shemon went to check us in, a sudden jolt rocked our car. Before I could react, the vehicle lurched backwards, careening down the dark mountainside. I was still strapped in the driver's seat, the car teetering on the edge of a deep abyss. The realization hit me like a punch – we were one wrong move away from disaster. Shemon's screams brought me back to reality, and he pulled me out through the window. The car hung at a sickening 60-degree angle, threatening to plunge into the forest below.

In minutes, help appeared, but so did looters. The next three days were hectic. Somehow, we managed to call in a crane to pull our car from the precipice and transport it to Bujumbura. Despite all these, we refused to give up. The next 26 days were filled with anxiety and uncertainty, as sourcing parts from overseas became a major challenge. But our determination never wavered, and we finally got our car back on the road.

On April 5th, 2024, after 93 days on the road, we returned to Mombasa. The journey has ended, yet the transformation it sparked within us still motivates us. The path had uncovered our fears, our strengths, and our weaknesses. It tested our resolve, forcing us to confront the realities of life in a way we never had before. But it had also given us something invaluable: a deeper understanding of ourselves, and the world around us.

This, truly, is the essence of overlanding.

How life is like when prices go through the roof

As many as 70 percent of households in Bangladesh changed their food habits involuntarily to cope with the high prices of essentials, according to a survey by think tank South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (Sanem)

MD ASADUZ ZAMAN and MD ABU TALHA SARKER

Fatima Khatun, dressed in a washed-out kameez, came to Muslim Bazar in Mirpur 12 to shop with her four-year-old son on August 16.

After roaming around the entire kitchen market, she stood in front of a shop that fish traders had decorated with pre-cut pieces of pangas and other fishes.

After bargaining with the seller, she purchased 500 grammes of fish for Tk 125.

Fatima, in her thirties, is part of a five-member family, the breadwinner of which is her husband, a rickshaw puller. Her children are aged four, six and eight.

"We had a tough time recently because few people were out in the streets seeking rickshaw rides due to the students' protests," she told this newspaper.

"Basically, my family depends on my husband. If his income falls, we struggle to make ends meet," she added.

The mother of three opined that the initiative to sell portions of a fish instead of the usual practice of selling the whole fish by weight had made the source of protein more accessible for daily wage earners.

She said they usually avoid purchasing high-priced fish or meat and the portions were more affordable, enabling them to often have fish in their meals.

Fatima's story lays bare the extent of low-income people's struggles to meet their basic requirements for protein in the wake of unprecedented price hike of essential food commodities over the last couple of years.

In July, food inflation hit 14.10 percent, a 13-year high, according to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS).

In fact, since May 2023, food inflation has hovered above 9 percent, crossing 9.5 percent every month of fiscal year 2023-24 except February.

The overall consumer price index, which includes food and non-food inflation, rose 1.94 basis points to 11.66 percent in July from the month prior.

Speaking to The Daily Star, Idris Ali, a fish trader at Muslim Bazar, said he is selling pieces of pangas at Tk 300 per kilogramme and tilapia at Tk 250.

Middle and low-income families are key customers. It is extremely beneficial for the poor and ultra-poor because they do not have the means to buy a kilogramme of beef for Tk 750 or a whole hilsa fish for Tk 800-900, he said.

"But when it comes to pieces of meat or fish, they can choose whatever they can afford," he said.

Amjad Hussain, another fishmonger, said the culture of selling pieces of fish or meat has only recently gained popularity.

"We hardly saw this culture in our country but we saw it on Facebook and YouTube. Initially, it was really tough to sell all the pieces of fish. But it has gradually become a normal practice," he said.

"Now, all types of people, especially low-income people, come to purchase these pieces," he said.

Aminul Islam, a middle-aged employee at a private company in Khilgaon, was buying pre-cut pieces of chicken from a shop in Khilgaon Railgate.

Chicken breasts were selling for Tk 350 per kilogramme whereas thighs, wings and drums were fetching anywhere from Tk 150 to Tk 300.

Islam said he usually purchases groceries in amounts that last one week but it had become very difficult for him to make ends meet as wages are failing to keep pace with rising prices.

Wage growth in Bangladesh has lagged behind the inflation rate for the past two and a half years, according to the Wage Rate Index (WRI) of the BBS.

In July, the gap between inflation and wage growth hit 3.73 percentage points, a record in at least the last decade.

This widening gap is forcing low-income and unskilled workers to cut down on consumption amid falling real incomes.

"The price of everything has gone up. Everyone has had to buy everything, from daily essentials to commodities, at higher prices for the last few years," he lamented.

"That pushed up family expenses. Alongside that, house rent has increased. Children's educational expenses have also edged up," he said.

Unable to contend with the incessant pressure, Islam was forced to send his family to his ancestral home and move into shared accommodations.

He added that he had been cutting out some food items from his diet due to the high prices.

"I have been unable to deposit money in the bank for my children's future. Instead, I had to give up my DPS (deposit pension scheme)," he said.

"I don't know when I can save some money," he said, forlornly adding that he has not been able to provide as much money as he would have liked to his parents in recent times.

According to a survey by think tank South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (Sanem), as many as 70 percent of households in Bangladesh changed their food habits involuntarily to cope with the high prices.

The survey, which interviewed 9,065 households across the country between April and November last year, measured food insecurity following the Food and Agriculture Organization guidelines on a Food Insecurity Experience Scale.

SM Nazer Hossain, vice-president of the Consumers Association of Bangladesh, said inflation started to rise gradually as the Covid-19 pandemic receded.

"Faced with elevated inflation, people were trying to cope by eating less food or cutting down on sources of nutritious food," he said.

"Many have had to borrow to cope with the extra pressure. The situation won't end soon. Consumers are still seeking some relief," he said.

On top of that, the recent floods in the eastern part of the country have emerged as a new challenge. It has a huge economic impact as many people had to abruptly flee to higher ground, leaving behind their residences, agricultural land and businesses.

Mustafa K Mujeri, executive director of the Institute for Inclusive Finance and Development (InM), expressed concern over the low wage growth.

"Higher inflation and slowing wage growth have jointly cornered low and limited-income groups," he said, adding that when high inflation persists for a long time, it definitely has an impact on the poverty rate and food intake habits.

High inflation, especially high food inflation, reduces coping strategies and gradually narrows opportunities for low-income and low-skilled people, he said.

Echoing those sentiments, Prof Mustafizur Rahman, a distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue, said living standards have declined due to the heightened food inflation.

"Informal sector workers, especially those in urban areas, are the biggest victims," he said.

About the persisting inflation, Mujeri said, "Adopting a contractionary monetary policy can't fight inflation alone. There is a need to integrate multiple policies."

"The previous government could not take the right policy decisions at the right time and place," he said.

Monzur Hossain, research director at the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS), said the interim government would have to send a signal to the markets as well as businessmen.

The government can restore the supply chain by warning stakeholders to refrain from market manipulation, he said.

"There is also the issue of dwindling confidence among businesses," Hossain said.

After Sheikh Hasina resigned from her post as prime minister and fled the country following a 15-year tenure in the face of a mass uprising, many factories were vandalised and set ablaze.

The interim government should ensure good governance to stabilise the market and take short and mid-term initiatives soon, Mustafizur suggested.

Bangladesh Bank is also taking steps to curb inflation.

Recently, the central bank hiked the policy rate or repo rate, at which commercial banks borrow from the central bank, by 50 basis points to 9 percent.

The policy rate was last increased by 50 basis points to 8.5 percent on May 8.

However, Monzur of the BIDS believes the conventional method of hiking the repo rate is not enough by itself.

"Policy rates have already been increased from about 5.5 percent to 9 percent in one year or so, but we did not see any positive impact on inflation," he said.

"My understanding is that supplementary measures were not taken properly. As the new governor hinted, he will raise the policy rate up to 10 percent in the next two months. Now, we have to observe its impact," he said.

Monzur also cautioned that there was a risk of micro, small and medium enterprises (MSMEs) being disproportionately affected by the rate hike.

"We need to be careful to ensure that the agriculture and SME sectors are not affected by the interest increase," he said.

"Also, it is necessary to review the channels through which the policy rate hike works. A policy rate of more than 10 percent is not desirable for Bangladesh's economy," he said.

Instead of being overly reliant on policy rate hikes, an accommodative monetary policy with supportive fiscal policy is needed to contain inflation, Monzur added.

Is govt action enough to curb inflation?

MD ASADUZ ZAMAN

Persistent inflationary pressure, particularly in terms of food inflation, has been taking a toll on low- and fixed-income people in Bangladesh, forcing them to spend most of their income on nutrition.

The recently ousted Awami League government had taken steps to cushion this blow, especially by introducing food distribution programmes.

And though such measures remain in place, the question is whether these alone are enough to tackle inflation.

A record 32.61 lakh tonnes of food grains were sold at subsidised rates through public distribution systems like the Open Market Sale (OMS) and Vulnerable Group Development programmes in FY24.

The OMS alone distributed about 32 percent of the total grains, mostly rice and wheat, to increase market supply and maintain a price equilibrium.

Essential commodities, including oil and sugar, are also being sold at subsidised rates to around one crore family cardholders under a Trading Corporation of Bangladesh (TCB) programme.

Professor Bazlul Haque Khondker, chairman of the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (Sanem), welcomed these moves but urged authorities to monitor distribution properly.

"We often receive allegations of corruption in the distribution process. At times, the support does not reach the intended beneficiaries," he said.

Towfiqul Islam Khan, a senior research fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD), said it is critical to plug these leaks in public food distribution programmes, including the TCB's family card initiative.

"The list of beneficiaries should be revisited to stop both inclusion and exclusion errors," he added.

Khan also emphasised the need to increase budgetary allocations for public food distribution initiatives.

"The last budget did not include adequate support to reduce the production cost of essential commodities. Even energy and fuel prices were kept high."

He suggested the interim government facilitate the import and distribution of essential commodities so that more players can enter the market.

Sanem's Bazlul Haque Khondker said the focus should now shift to framing non-monetary policies to control inflation.

He added that proper market management by removing the scope for extortion should be prioritised.

"The country may witness significant change in the next six months if the interim government can play a remarkable role with a tight monetary policy," he added.

The CPD's Towfiqul Islam Khan said recent changes in the monetary policy, including policy rate hikes and allowing banks more flexibility to fix interest rates, were taken with a view to addressing demand-pull issues.

However, conventional economic theories and past global experiences suggest that these measures need time to have an effect.

"The government policies have not adequately addressed the issue of cost-push inflation areas. The pressure on the exchange rate will be there for some time in the foreseeable future," Khan said.

He also mentioned that the official data does not adequately reflect ground realities and somewhat underestimates the inflation rate.

"The policies are taken with low-quality data year after year. It is high time we took immediate steps to improve this situation."
